"I never had any sympathy with Masonry and other kindred and secret associations even while with us they were only matters to talk of, but now we feel their evil influences; and yet I would not fear the evil consequences half so much if the church was free from their secret workings, if the clergy kept themselves unspotted or would come out from among them and have no fellowship with their unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, and were leaning on an arm almighty rather than one of flesh, then would I feel as if we had a place to flee to, a place of refuge. But now are they wasting the vitals of the church and state of which they profess to be the safeguard, as though they would 'if it were possible seduce even the elect.' I never fear the positive power of the world half so much as the negative power of the church."

A Friend writes:

Dear Cynosure:—It has been a long time since I saw you, but have not forgotten your ever welcome face. Your 'Labor in the Lord has not been in vain.' I could report by name a score of prominent Masons who 'talk with their mouths' of Masonry as being like one king of old, 'weighed in the balance and found wanting.' 'Its glory is departed.' Go on and may success attend you."

Masonic Blasphemy.

From the New Hampshire Post.

MR. BUNCE:—There is something so horrid in the following lines, which you have given us in the Post, August 3d, that I cannot let them pass without some remarks:

"Let every man take glass in hand,
Drink bumpers to our Master Grand
As long as he can sit or stand with decency.
The Almighty God here I'll prove to be
The first Grand Master of Masonry!"

Ahiman Rezon, page 143.

Here the drunken club assert that Almighty God is the first Grand Master of Masonry—an awful lie. But how do they worship their Grand Master? By drinking bumpers to him as long as they can sit or stand with decency. Thus in the midst of their revelry is the majesty of heaven insulted. Is this profane and impious? Is this the way in which Masonic ministers, and deacons, and church members worship in the Masonic temple of the glorious God? Be astonished, O ye heavens! and let all the churches hear and tremble! What a triumph for atheists! 'Strike, but conceal the hand,' should be written on the foreheads of such ministers and professors.

It may be said that ministers and professors never join in such songs. I doubt it. But admitting that some of them never have, they are the approved songs of Masonry, sanctioned by her dignitaries and published in her standard books. They are her "beauties." All that support her, cling to her skirts, and worship at her altars are partakers with her in her songs, her impiety, her blasphemy, and in her deeds of blood. The man that secretes the thief is a partaker with the thief. And the man who countenances Masonry, and always "hails" her, is a partaker with Masonry in all her pollution and crime. The conclusion is irresistible, and it is vain to shuffle.

Am I severe? There is nothing cuts like the truth. This has two edges, and it is time to wield it. Ministers and professors of religion must renounce Masonry or come out like men and support the blasphemous institution. No flinching in this business. If you are in heart for Baal, then sing his songs and worship at Baal's altar, and serve him with all your hearts.

I should like to know how a Masonic minister would feel who knew that his hearers, young and old, had been reading these Masonic songs when he met them on the Sabbath, and presumed to lead in Christian worship. What associations must flutter round the assembly!

Freemasonry not Dead Yet.

Many nominal Anti-masons affect to believe that Freemasonry has already ceased to live, or that she is so palsied in every limb as to be harmless. And we rejoice that it is so, they say, for we have always been desirous to see her laid low! If any, even one, sound and conclusive argument could be adduced to support this belief, we ourselves should be behind none in the measure or sincerity of our rejoicings. But what say the grand lodges? Those of Vermont and Rhode Island have expressed an unalterable determination to sustain their institutions, despite of public opinion, and that of Massachusetts has lately pledged itself anew to maintain and perpetuate the ancient and useful principles of the craft. Together with these determinations and pledges comes the fact that the lodges have their "regular communications" as usual. It is true no public notices are given as heretofore, but we confidently challenge any man to deny our position, that Freemasons still cherish the hope of perpetuating their lodge meetings, and for that purpose still assemble as they have been wont to do. We say this not to convince or even undeceive any one, for no man, who has ever given himself the trouble to inquire, at the true source of information, has any doubt of its truth. But we do say it is the expression of our belief, that it behooves those who are so confident of the decease of Freemasonry, to give some other proofs of the fact than their own ignorance and ipse dixit, or to relinquish their pretended Anti-masonry, join heartily in the cause of the handmaid, and fight her battles under her proper banner. But Freemasonry gains no proselytes in these days, says one in reply, and must therefore be extinct with the present generation. Now this is a gratuity, without a shadow of support from fact. Freemasonry, a political society, will always find votaries so long as she can promise them political promotion. And she can promise them such promotion so long as she can any how command a majority of suffrages.—New Bedford Courier.

Some persons are capable of making great sacrifices, but few are capable of concealing how much the effort has cost them, and it is this concealment that constitutes their value.

LESSON XXV.—JUNE 21, 1784.—THE DEATH OF MOSES.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—DEUT. XXXIV. 1-12. Commit 1-8; Primary Verse, 4.

1 And Moses went up from the plains of Moab unto the mountains of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah, that is over against Jericho: and the Lord shewed him all the land of Gilead, unto Dan.

2 And all Naphtali, and the land of Ephraim, and Manasseh, and all the land of Judah, unto the utmost sea.

3 And the south, and the plain of the valley of Jericho, the city of palm trees, unto Zoar.

4 And the Lord said unto him, This is the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, saying, I will give it unto thy seed: I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither.

5 So Moses, the servant of the Lord, died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord.

6. And he buried him in the valley, in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor: but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day.

7 And Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eyes was not dim, nor his natural force abated.

8 And the children of Israel wept for Moses in the plains of Moab thirty days so the days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.

9 And Joshua, the son of Nun, was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him, and the children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as the Lord commanded Moses.

10 And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face.

11 In all the signs and the wonders which the Lord sent him to do in the land of Egypt, to Pharaoh, and to all his servants, and to all his land.

12 And in all that mighty hand, and in all the great terror which Moses showed in the sight of all Israel.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

Our lesson has much of Scripture geography. The land of Moab was on the east of Jordan, a little north of the Dead Sea. Who were the Moabites? (Gen. xix. 37.) What is the land called in Ruth 1. 1, 2? What in Deut. i. 5? What two names are given to the mountain? The first was perhaps the mountain, the second the peak.

What is the first topic? Where did Moses first learn that he was not to enter? How many sins of Moses are mentioned? (only one.) Ask your teacher why the report of Moses' death would be good news to the people. What was the command as soon as Moses died? (Josh. 1. 2.) Did Moses wish to enter the land? (Deut. iii. 23-27.)How many sins must you commit to be a sinner? (Gal. iii. 10.)

What is the second topic? What command was given, ch. xxxii. 49? Who do you think pointed out the land to Moses? Name the points he saw. What is the name of the sea? How many cities are mentioned? Which of them had two names? What did God say of the land?

What is the third topic? How long had Moses lived? How many years was he in Egypt? (Acts vii. 23.) How many years in Midian? (Acts vii. 30.) How many years in the wilderness? Who guarded the sepulchre? (Jude 9.) Where was he buried? Did they know the exact place? Ask your teacher why they did not.

What is the fourth topic? How long did they mourn? They made great public display. See Gen. l. 3, 10, 11. Had the people always listened to Moses? How do you think you would feel to lose your teacher or guide? Who was chosen as the successor of Moses?

What is the fifth topic? What four things are mentioned in proof of the greatness of Moses? What great choice did he make? (Heb. xi. 24-26.)

Sabbath-school Creed.

1. The design of Sabbath-school work is the immediate conversion of souls, and the training of them for God's service,

2. The Sabbath-school is not exclusively or primarily for children, but a Bible school for all irrespective of age; and it should be so planned and constructed as to attract, interest and profit all.

3. The school is but a sphere in which the church works for the above ends; the pastor is, therefore, by virtue of his office, responsible for the efficiency of the school; he can neither ignore nor delegate that responsibility, and must therefore exercise a personal supervision and take an active part in all its work.

4. It is the duty of every Christian, without regard to age, to be regularly engaged in the Sabbath-school, either as a teacher or learner.

5. The Sabbath-school is an evangelizer for the masses, and every Sabbath-school should be a mission in its character and work.

6. Christians only should be engaged as teachers in the Sabbath-school if they can possibly be secured.

7. Teachers should be discharged if they willfully neglect their classes, even for one Sabbath.

8. The printing-press is a means of promoting the work of the Sabbath-school.

9. All instrumentalities and all labor for advancing the Redeemer's kingdom, will be in vain without the regenerating and sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit.

Once Only.

A shy little girl came to Sabbath-school. She was poorly dressed: a calico gown; a hat trimmed with faded green ribbons; slippers, not boots, thin slippers, which looked as if somebody had given them to her, and a small shawl on her shoulders. Miss Jones brought her in, and she was in Miss Jones' class.

Miss Jones' class were girls very nicely dressed. They had feathers, and fresh ribbons, and fashionable boots. Miss Jones' class, too, all knew each other. Well, how did they receive the little stranger? Very glad, of course, to welcome her to the Sabbath-school, and their class too, because they had often heard how the Lord Jesus became poor for their sakes, and how he left the poor among us to feed and care for.

Did they receive her kindly? Not a bit. When she sat down on the seat beside them they moved away. They glanced their eyes at her dress, then at each other, and laughed contemptuously. When she looked wistfully up to them for a look of kindness they turned their faces another way.

All their conduct seemed to say, "We are above you, and what business have you here, I wonder?" Oh was it not cruel?

The little girl never went again. Perhaps she was driven from Sunday-school forever. Let every person, great and small, remember this, that all who laugh at the poor laugh at God, and he will not always be mocked.

Writing to Absent Scholars.

Rev. H. C. Trumbull says, in the Sunday-school World:

There is a power for good in Sunday-school correspondence which many have not realized. If you are away temporarily from your scholars, write to them. If they are absent for a season from the class, write to them. If they have permanently left the school, write to them. If you have left them for a new field of labor, write to them. If you are still near them, write to them. If you love them, write and tell them so. If you want them to love the Saviour, write to them of your desire. If they are your fellow disciples, and you would cheer and instruct them in the Christian life, write to them accordingly.

Farm and Garden.

LATE-SOWN FODDER.—Hungarian grass or millet may be sown for a fodder crop as late as the first of July. It should be cut before the frost injures it and be cured as hay or cradled or raked up and put in bundles, like oats. These will probably be the best fodder crops to raise for horses. No grain is necessary when horses are not worked if they have plenty of this feed, which is nutritious if cut early.—[Keystone.

Scientific Memoranda.

A series of experiments made by Professor Ville, in France, show that the diseases that attack the potato are in part the result of a deficiency in the supply of potash in the soil. For five years in succession the Professor planted potatoes in the same soil without any fertilizer; to other plots of ground he added fertilizers that did not contain potash. In all these cases the fruit became diseased in the month of May, while the other plots where potash was supplied in sufficient quantity, the plants were healthy and yielded an excellent product. —Selected.

CURE FOR UNEASY COWS—This receipt was given me by an old farmer and stock raiser. I have applied it successfully for several years, but never saw it in print: The best method of controlling cows inclined to kick while handling or milking them is to pass a broad strap just in front of the bag and around over the back of the animal, draw the strap tight and buckle it. This prevents all play of the chords and renders the animal incapable of kicking, and she can then be handled without difficulty. A few applications will cure the worst cases.—N. Y. Tribune.

CURE FOR CURRANT WORM.—By the following method I have successfully destroyed the currant worm: Spread from a gill to half a pint of the carbolate of lime around the currant bush, near the stock; then jar off the worms. They will immediately attempt to return, but unless a branch touches the ground beyond the barrier, as a bridge for them, not a worm will get back, but they will perish in their attempts to pass through the lime. Care should be taken to obtain the article in its full strength, which can be bought for about ten cents per pound by the ten or fifteen pounds. Much of the carbolate of lime sold for destroying insects is weakened by mixture with common air-slaked lime.—N. Y. Tribune.

Proper Combinations in Soap.

According to Mignot, a perfect soap is one in which the fatty matters and the alkaline have been so thoroughly combined as to leave no excess of either component; a desideratum which is very seldom reached, as the soap is either too alkilane, in which case it parches and dries up the skin, or is too fat, and thus makes the skin greasy, so that dust readily adheres to it. The former inconvenience is the more serious of the two, as it very soon leaves its impress upon the skin. For this reason soap-makers are in the habit of employing an excess of fat, notwithstanding the inconvenience mentioned. Mignot now informs us that silica introduced into the soap, in the form of infusorial earth, will tend to neutralize any excess of the alkaline elements of the soap, as it is soluble both in soda and in potash, and it will at the same time take up the surplus of the fatty matter by absorbing it, and combining with it to a certain extent. Infusorial earth, as is well known, occurs in different parts of the world in great quantity, and immense deposits are known in various portions of the United States, especially in Idaho, Nevada and California.—Exchange.

A HERKIMER COUNTY, N. Y., farmer, who has quite an extensive hennery, took especial care to ascertain what worth there really was in a certain number of hens. January 1st, 1873, he selected thirty-six hens consisting of different breeds, and kept an account of the harvest they would yield. January 1st, 1874, he found that the thirty-six hens had furnished him with 4,004 eggs, and in addition to this he had raised forty-seven hens, which are now at work.

HOW TO KILL POTATO BUGS.—Take of Paris green two ounces, wheat flour one quart, add enough water to mix it to a batter, then stir this into three gallons of water and thoroughly wet the tops of your potatoes with this mixture by the use of an old broom, or broom corn brush. This is the best mode of using Paris green.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, June 11, 1874.

See special lecture notice on 13th page.

The dew is still on our fleece and the glory-cloud over our tabernacle. Members returning from Syracuse in the cars, said, one to another, "It is the best meeting yet." And in my judgment, it was so. The spot where truth and right are freest from human admixture is the spot where mind is freest and the Spirit of God has most room. Hence the prayer-meetings at Syracuse were like meetings with Christ in the Mount.

From fifteen to twenty thousand names were returned to our Convention at Syracuse appended to petitions to President Grant praying him by his Secretary, Bristow, to interfere to prevent the laying of the corner-stone of the people's Custom-House in Chicago by Freemasons. Aaron Floyd, Esq., and Rev. Mr. Ellis, of Pittsburgh, go on to Washington at once with the petition.

Mrs. J. B. Miller gave a graphic account of her honored father's (Victory Birdseye) teachings to her though a girl of sixteen. He was a lawyer appointed by the New York Legislature to investigate the murder of Morgan. Mrs. Miller's appearance on the stand was lady-like, her diction elegant, and her paper clear and powerful. It is to be printed. I wish only to criticize her theory of the rise of Morgan's body from the bottom of the Niagara River, months after his death, and its floating ten or twenty miles to Oak Orchard Creek. Morgan was sunk Sept., 1826. In the winter following, when the Legislature was appointing a committee to drag the river off Fort Niagara, for his corpse, the Masons who knew where he sunk, took alarm, and raked up the corpse, took off the weights and rowed out into the lake below, and threw it overboard by night. So that when the Legislatures Committee went and raked there no Morgan was found. The corpse floated, as others have done in former years, on the lake shore at Oak Orchard. where it was identified as the body of Morgan, as Mrs. Miller stated. This theory of his removal, besides being the most natural, was confirmed by the statements of Masons after the lodges went down.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

The Associated Press dispatch states that a platform with a plank in it in favor of recognizing God in the U. S. Constitution was adopted at Syracuse. This is inaccurate. The amendments, which we adopted, recognizes ours "as a Christian and not a heathen government;" but we said nothing about putting such recognition into the Constitution.

I have, however, no doubt but we shall do so. If a Mormon in Chicago should marry twenty wives, he cannot be convicted and punished for that crime in a United States court under the Constitution as it is. Because polygamy is, boyond a doubt or question, part of the Mormon religion, and by our Constitution Congress cannot prohibit "the free use thereof." No, nor of assassination neither, if done by Mormon Danites on the enemies of Mormonism. For they are a religious order of assassins, appointed by revelation to slay the enemies of their church. Murder of this sort is therefore their creed and vocation. And if Booth had been a Danite, and President Lincoln had been dealing with Mormonism as he dealt with slavery, and if the popular rage could have allowed Booth a fair trial, the Constitution would have shielded him in the "exercise of his religion" in the murder of Lincoln. But the amendment was agreed to because that united us in a recognition of ours as a Christian and not a heathen country. It will never do for us to adopt the policy of making his "creed our standard who believes least and worst." What an idea! To leave God out of our platform and then go to work to establish Christian civilization!

THAT MASONIC BURIAL AGAIN.

Since our remarks upon the Masonic burial of Father Grover were sent to the compositor, an obituary notice of him has appeared in the local paper, the Wheaton Illinoian, in which it is asserted that it was by his request that he was buried in Masonic form. We asserted that it was believed to be without any request from him. This belief was founded upon the fact that he died away from home, and died very suddenly from heart disease; and also from the fact that he had been for years a non-affiliated Mason. He had been a resident of Wheaton longer than ourself and had not united with the Wheaton lodge and was understood not to be an attendant upon its communications. This being the case, as we understand the by-laws of Masonry he was not entitled to any of the special privileges or distinguishing honors of the lodge. As the Odd-fellows would say he was not "beneficial." But he was well to do pecuniarily and was universally esteemed as a man and as a Christian. It would honor Masonry to be requested by such a man to bury him with their forms. And could Masonic benevolence suffer its members to withhold its costless benefits from those who have no need, when the fact of their receiving such benefits reflects especial honor upon Masonry? In such a case they can afford to suspend their by-laws or trample upon them to any extent. It is claimed indeed that a private agreement of long standing existed between this devoted Christian and an avowed unbeliever that which ever of the two should survive the other, should see the one first dying buried with Masonic honors. That a true and earnest Christian should be thus yoked together with such an unbeliever, seems, if not improbable, yet certainly unnatural and very revolting. What have Christians to do with thus linking themselves in death with wicked men? As to whether this statement of mutual covenant of long standing between these men is a true statement or a Masonic one; or whether if Father G. had been a poor man, leaving a dependent family and a reputation of no especial celebrity or honor, the covenant would have been remembered, the lodge rules stretched or suspended to enable the surviving party to redeem his pledge, people will entertain their own opinions. Certain it is that the master of the lodge and the most prominent members were not present in the procession. Only about twenty aprons were displayed; and the wearers carried such a down cast and sheepish expression, or the preacher himself felt so much of what such a look usually expresses, that when he came to the address to the fraternity, he made a very forced effort to cheer them up. "Hold up your heads, brethren," said he. "Don't be cast down because the tongue of slander is assailing you, or the finger of scorn is pointed at you. You are in good company. The Revolutionary patriots, the heroes who carried the nation through the war of the Rebellion, the statesmen who wield the government, the scholars, the great and wise men of the age and of all ages; yea, and the divines are with you. Hold up your heads and repel scorn with scorn. Your cause is one of the purest and noblest of causes that ever engaged the energies of the noblest of men." Ah, when men are justly frowned upon by those whom they themselves know to have full knowledge or all the reasons which in their case call forth and justify the frown, they must needs whistle to keep up their courage. And who would be so cruel as to deny them this small relief, this one cooling drop amid the flames that torment them? Yes, hold up your heads. The great of this world are with you. But if you would know the true value of this kind of cheer and consolation, reflect upon this fact: you can have the same in hell itself.

Freemasons and the Corner-Stone.

The three or four politicians who consider the laying of the corner-stone of a public building a strictly private affair of their own, to be conducted according to their prejudices, and solely for their private interests, have invited a secret society, exclusive lodges of a sworn secret society, to drive the tax paying public away from public property, to usurp the official place of honor on this purely public civic occasion, to represent the government of the United States, and perform an act which, if it have any significance whatevor, has a public significance with which no secret society can rightfully have anything to do. A more outrageous insult could not be offered to the community. In the extensive ranks of the national government, could no men, can no man, be found fit to represent the nation acceptably to all taxpayers? Are the thousands of men in the service of the people, from the judges of the supreme court, the judges of the circuit and district and state courts, senators, representatives, ministers, governors, and secretaries, down, so ignorant, so rude, so uncivilized, so unpopular, so unworthy of their distinction, so unfit to perform a public ceremony, that no one of these should be invited to officiate on this occasion? What a nation of beggars and blackguards we must be!

Assuming, as this ring of politicians has assumed, that there is no man, that there are no men, in either the judicial or legislative departments of the government, qualified by dignity, learning, repute, or refinement, to represent the United States government, have Messrs. Judd, Rankin, and McArthur done a decent and credible thing in deputing this elevated public duty to a secret society? They did this for political purposes. Is it a discreet political move? Is the vote of the man who is a Freemason more desirable than the disgust and reasonable indignation of nine men who are not Freemasons, and who are lost in angry wonder that a public act should be performed by them, without their knowledge or consent, by an organization sworn to secrecy, whose members are bound by oath to protect the interests of each other against the interests of all other men? Shall the government of the United States, a custom-house building, be thus diverted to the private interests of the members of a secret society, and the politicians who bring the outrage and scandal about, reap personal reward and profit from it?

Look at the justice of the proceeding. The Freemasons do not constitute one-twentieth part of the population of Chicago. The Roman Catholics are about one-third of the population,—would public indignation permit Bishop Foley, suave and dignified as he is, to officiate at the laying of the corner-stone as the representative of the government? It certainly would not. The bishop would run considerable risk of a shower of brickbats. He would not accept any such invitation, because he has too correct a sense of public propriety. The Methodists constitute a very large and very influential fraction of the population. But would the custom-house ring dare to invite Dr. Fowler, or one of the Methodist bishops, to lay the corner-stone? The Episcopalians are a wealthy and respectable part of the community, and count among their representatives men distinguished for their social virtue. Why did not Mr. Judd and his Masonic coadjutors invite Bishop Whitehouse, Bishop Cheney, or Dr. Powers to lay the corner stone? The Presbyterians—as we have had much reason to know—are a very significant part of the city of Chicago. If any exclusiveness is to figure in the laying of the corner-stone, where can be found a better man than the venerable Dr. Patterson, a more promising man than the adolescent Dr. Patton, a more loving or more catholic man than David Swing? But what right would Presbyterianism have to lay the corner-stone of a public building? What right has a sworn secret society to lay the corner-stone? The Unitarians are more numerous, more intelligent, than the Freemasons. Robert Collyer is an acceptable man in all places except one. That one place is to represent the government of the United States on an official occasion. If Robert Collyer would be objectionable in that capacity, what is to be said of the chief represenative of a sworn secret society?

Is this a democratic government? Do the people own the new custom-house, or do Judd and the Freemasons own it?

No wonder that Henri Rochefort thought that we were about to lay the corner-stone of a great Masonic Temple!—Chicago Times.

Reform News.

From Jo Daveiss Co., Ill.

WARREN, Ill., June 4, 1874.

Editor of the Cynosure:

I wish to say to you and the readers of your paper that Rev. P. Hurless delivered three truthful and interesting lectures in Lincoln Hall in this place on the evenings of the 26th, 27th, and 28th of May, 1874, showing that Masonry, although full of religion, was anti-Christian. Yet they have smuggled the Bible into the lodge to use as furniture, but as it did not quite fit their purpose, they rejected some parts of it and added some of their own make so it would suit any religion but the Christian, stole Jacob's ladder, set it up in the lodge, then robbed Paul of his faith, hope and charity, tacked them on the ladder and claimed to climb that way to heaven, the way guarded by the tyler with a drawn sword, saying to wife, sister, old father and mother, "You can stay out in the cold or go around by the cross." And again, the devil believed and confessed that they know Jesus the Son of God, and quoted Scripture correctly. Masonry does neither, thus Herod is out-Heroded. B. WILLIAMS.

Anti-secrecy Association of De Kalb Co., Indiana.

On the evening of May, A. D. 1874, a meeting was held according to previous notice, at the Wesleyan Chapel, Wilmington Township, De Kalb Co., Indiana, for the purpose of organizing a county association opposed to secret societies auxilary to the State and National Anti-secrecy Associations of Christians opposed to Secret Societies. The meeting was called to order by Rev. C. F. Wiggins, opened with prayer by Rev. W. O. Dinius. Rev. Wm. Burns was chosen chairman pro tem., and J. P. Kester secretary pro tem. Bro. Wiggins stated briefly the object of the meeting, the necessity of the Anti-masonic element uniting their efforts in putting down the old harlot with all her numerous offspring.

A committee of three was chosen to frame a constitution and appoint permanent officers for the Association. Short and pointed speeches were made by Revs. W. O. Dinius, Wm. Burns, J. D. Snyder and C. F. Wiggins.

The following permanent officers were chosen: President, Henry Gunsenhouser; Vice Presidents, Franklin Woods, J. W. Jeffords, S. Warpenbee; Secretary, J. P. Kester; Treasurer, Eli Welch.

The following resolution and constitution was adopted by item:

Resolved, That we, the undersigned citizens of Indiana, believing that Freemasonry and other kindred secret organizations are exerting a wide-spread and evil influence in the churches and in our civil government, and believing that the best way to destroy this influence is to freely discuss and fearlessly expose the nature and working of these orders, and for the better prosecution of this work, organize ourselves into a society, auxilary to the State and National Association of Christians opposed to Secret Societies, under the following constitution.

1st. This Society shall be called the De Kalb County Association opposed to Secret Societies.

2d. The officers of this Association shall be a President two or more Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and Treasurer, who shall perform the duties usually assigned to their offices.

Rev. C. F. Wiggins was elected a delegate to the National Convention to meet in Syracuse, New York, June 2, 1874.

A motion was unanimously adopted to publish the proceedings of the meeting, together with the constitution, in the American Wesleyan, Religious Telescope, Christian Cynosure, Auburn Courier and Butler News.

From Elder Baird.

GREENVILLE, Pa., June 1, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:

Again I drop into your columns a few lines. For a number of years I have lived under the constant lash of the tongues and pens of Masonic slanderers until at last it has gone beyond the patience of the community to endure it any longer, and we have arrested two editors, and bound them over to the September court for slander. The one is a Freemason and the other a Jack. The Mason has already employed Masonic council to see him safe through. Dear friends, this will be a very important suit for me, and for Mercer county, and for the cause in general. Their boasted design is to fill the public ear with slander and to stop me from lecturing. ELDER J. R. BAIRD.

Correspondence.

A Visit with the Neighbors of William Morgan.

BATAVIA, New York, June 1, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:

When I left Chicago at 9 P. M. Friday, I did not dream of stopping in this village where Captain Wm. Morgan's exposition of Freemasonry was first published, and where Freemasons, forty-seven years ago, seized him with murderous intent under pretense of a legal claim, bore him from his young wife and family, forced him into a stage and hurried him away to Canandaigua, then betrayed by a professed friend who purchased his relase from jail, he is seized by a murderous band of Freemasons, gagged, forced into a covered wagon and taken by his merciless foes (men of the highest respectability they are called) to the magazine of Fort Niagara and finally drowned in Niagara River. As I said, I had no idea of stopping in this place when I left Chicago, nor indeed till within two hours of the time I reached here. My intention was to have taken the 5:15 afternoon train for Syracuse, and the time-table said I would reach there at 8:15 Saturday night. I took much pleasure in the expectation of sitting under the ministrations of my fellow-student and very dear friend, Rev. L. N. Stratton, editor of the American Wesleyan. But God had ordered otherwise. I found after purchasing my ticket that the train I expected to take made connections with a road that my ticket did not call for. I at first thought that I would go straight through to Syracuse, although the train reached there about two o'clock Sabbath morning, particularly as I had written that I would be there over Sabbath; but on reflection I felt that it would be a desecration of the Lord's Day and I then determined to stop over at Rochester. On reaching Buffalo I found that the train reached Rochester at midnight, and as to go on there would be to desecrate the Sabbath in getting to a hotel, I decided to stop at Batavia, and I am fully convinced that the especial providence of God has brought me here. I have been searching out the old residents to talk with them about Morgan and those troublous times. I called on Deacon Joseph Clarke. Deacon Clarke came to Batavia in 1824, and, to use his own expression, "was obliged to buy the house that he still occupies, because he couldn't find a house to rent in the whole town." When he purchased this house (on Jackson, near Main street) it was occupied by a family by the name of Lorin, and Mr. Lorin being sick the two families lived together till Mr. Lorin recovered and had time to build a house on the same street, the next house south of their's. Lorin brought Captain Wm. Morgan from a neighboring town to lay the cellar walls of the house, for Morgan was a stone mason as well as a Freemason.

About ten years after the murder of her husband, Mrs. Morgan married a man by the name of Harris and moved to Terre Haute, Indiana. Harris afterwards joined the Mormons and went to Salt Lake, leaving his wife at Terre Haute, because she refused to go with him to a Mormon harem and take her chances as one of his many wives. Harris, who was a cunning, gentlemanly knave, soon became one of the twelve Mormon apostles and returned to Terre Haute to get a divorce from his wife on the ground of desertion, and this he readily accomplished. Judge Pringle thought it very probable that Tommy Morgan and his mother are still living at Terre Haute, as Mrs. Morgan was but twenty-three at the time of the abduction of her husband.

When Lorin's house was done, Morgan and his wife lived in the house with them. When Morgan began preparing his exposition of Masonry he spent most of his time out of town for fear of Masonic vengeance. He was at home, however, Monday morning, Sept. 11, 1826, and on the street was seized by a number of Freemasons under the pretense of arrest for petty theft. Deacon Clarke was summoned as a witness in the Morgan trials before Hon. John C. Spencer, of Albion. He went to Mr. Spencer three times, begging to be released so that he might return to his family and his business. At last Judge Spencer told him that he must stay, as the very few men like himself, were the only ones that would tell the truth about what they knew concerning the abduction of Wm. Morgan. So, says Deacon Clarke, I was compelled to sit there day after day and hear the testimony, or the refusal to give testimony, which was very common. But enough testimony was given to satisfy Deacon Clarke that Morgan was, without a shadow of doubt, taken to Fort Niagara Magazine and after a few days drowned in the Niagara River. Deacon Clarke knew Samuel D. Greene intimately, as they were members of the same church. He complained that Greene and other Anti-masons persecuted the Freemasons belonging to the church with him (Presbyterian).

I next called on Samuel Holden, who spoke with much earnestness of those exciting times, and said that he saw Morgan seized and forced into the carriage by Freemasons, on the 11th day of September, 1826. He deplored the return of Masonry to power, but considered all opposition to it as hopeless. He is in his eightieth year, and but the day before had witnessed a grand decoration day Masonic display. He remembered Samuel D. Greene well, but disliked him because he was an abolitionist, "but," said he, "that is all over now." He had Greene's book—the Broken Seal. I gave him some encouraging facts about the progress of the present Anti-masonic reform and next called on P. L. Tracy, Esq., a wealthy Christian lawyer, eighty-seven years old. He knew Morgan and Greene both, and expressed pleasure that something was being done to check the alarming growth of secret societies. He also had Greene's book and spoke of it as a correct account of the Morgan abduction and the trial of the murderers engaged in it.

The Home Circle.

Who are the Great of Earth?

Who are the mighty? sing,
The chiefs of old renown,
On some red field who won their victor's crown
Of tears and triumphing?
The Northmen bold, who first on stormy seas
Sent down the "raven" banner in the breeze?
Not these—O no—not these!

Who are the great of earth?
The mighty hunters? kings of ancient line,
For ages traced, half fable, half divine,
Whose stone-wrought lions guard in heathen pride
Their tomb-like palaces? where now we read,
They lived, and reigned, and died!
Who spoke, and millions rushed to toil and bleed?
Not these—not these indeed!

Who are the mighty? they,
The builders of Egyptian pyramids?
The unknown kings, on whose stone-coffin lids
Strange forms are scrolled? or men, whose awful sway
Wrought the rock-temple, reared the cromleeh gray,
Whose smoke, and fire, and incense darkened day?
Not they—O no—not they!

Who are the great of earth?
Mark, where yon prophet stands,
The loadstar needle trembles in his hands,
O'er western seas he finds for mind a throne—
Or he on whose wrapt sight new wonders shone.
Where heavenward turned, his glass made worlds his own—
Not he—not these alone!

Who are the mighty? see,
Where art's a wizard; where the marble strife
With grace and beauty quickens into life—
Or where, as danger's waves beat wild and free,
Some "glorious arm" like Moses' parts the sea.
That a vexed people yet redeemed may be—
The statesman?—sage? it's he?

Oh no—not these the noble triumphs prove,
Go where forgiveness turning like the dove
Alights o'er life's dark flood on some lone heart—
Where men to men, truth, justice, peace, impart.
As best interpreters of Godlike love—
Where all life's noblest charities have birth;
There dwells the great, the kings of peerless worth—
They shall subdue the earth!

Our Florida Correspondent.

JOURNEYING HOMEWARD.

We did not leave Jacksonville, Fla., until the eighth of May on account of cold weather. When you had a storm in Chicago, we had a cold snap. My companion kept losing flesh and spirits and I felt I could not leave her alone. I would never advise any one in poor health to come here alone. It is done so much.

We left Florida when the last of the cape jasmine, short-lived, but so sweet, and the creamy magnolias were among the things that were. The mocking birds were in tune as we steamed away, just as the purple mists were scattering from the morning sun. We started at six o'clock, A. M., when the tide was in, to avoid the sands at the bar or mouth of the river. We saw a few porpoises, sharks, alligators, and plenty of those unsightly jelly-fish.

When we reached the ocean, heavy swells and the hot sun soon scattered the passengers. Who can describe sea sickness? Such a limp, nerveless, crampy, horrid feeling. Our boat hugged the shore and took what is called, the inside passage, so we did not have to suffer but about two hours until the next morning about the same length of time before getting into the Savannah river. We skirted so near the shore as to surprise the wild ducks and a few birds. Salt marshes extend many acres inland and I suppose yield nothing but ague.

We arrived in Savannah at nine in the morning and proceeded to the Pavillion Hotel. It has a fine entrance. Front yard well kept, with olives, figs, magnolias, and other smaller trees in it. They gave us room and board for both of us at $5.00 per day. The Presbyterian church was just in front of the hotel; the Baptist and Methodist churches in the next block.

The first sight that greets you is the noble trees. Some of the streets have three rows. Then the parks occupying every other square. The brick walks so clean. Fine looking policemen always with white gloves. Great numbers of little children from three weeks old to ten and twelve years, out of doors from seven in the morning until seven in the evening. I did not hear a crying child while I was there. Saturday afternoon we went out to see this beautiful city, the pride of the South, with its fine, large stone and brick dwellings and its gardens enclosed with brick or a kind of plaster. The people have noble saddle horses but very few carriages. The grand market was worth going to see. Vegetables of all descriptions; mammoth fishes, especially the sturgeon meats. Blackberries and strawberries were abundant. Women were sitting on the sidewalk with berries, cakes, candies, coffee, lemonade, rice, beans, etc., something of a Babel but so useful and accommodating.

Sabbath morning we attended the Presbyterian church. The pulpit was high and plain, made of mahogany. The pastor had on a black gown; his subject was: Mary at the Well. The church was plain, high, tiled floor, with two or three memorial windows. Went to the Baptist church in the evening. The pastor, Mr. Hardy, was very earnest. His subject, Paul before Felix and Drusilla; Righteousness, Justice and Judgment. Both pastors gave a very concise account of the position, locality and moral condition of the people, particularly of those classes they spoke of. Their sermons were instructive and entertaining. I tried to imagine the kind of sermons heard from these same pulpits (for Savannah was not injured by the armies) twenty or even ten years ago. You know there was great reason to cry out against some of their tenets then.

We took a carriage and drove out to Cape Boniventura and Thunderbolt; places that looked fine from the boat as we came up the river. The cape belonged to a gentleman's grounds and he let the city have it for a cemetery. Very few interments have been made lately. Its massive trees with their somber pendant moss, resembling a grand cathedral, have made it one of the attractions of Savannah. Thunderbolt, a town on the bluff, looks as if it needed some of the western spirit and thrift. Gnats and mosquitoes infest those places and fleas are the torment of our lives.

A bird store which I visited three times, attracted me as much as anything. Such curious, wise looking birds. The cockatoos, with their fine, white feathers, their feet set well back, with a lemon colored tuft which can be spread in a most beautiful shape, well over the top of their heads. Australian birds, price $125.00. The affectionate blue birds, which are very common here. Black birds with crimson and white about their throats and whose double note always amused me. A variety of pigeons and many other birds.

Leaving Savannah on the eleventh inst., we went to Augusta, Ga., and thence to Aiken, S. C. The farther north we came the more backward we found the trees and flowers. At Augusta we found the magnolias were well budded and the roses perfect and beautiful ivies. Coming here, we passed some chalk mines worked by northerners.

The Georgia women, generally speaking, are not educated. Poor eyes, skin and teeth, and round shoulders. One told me they had good schools and paid ten cents a day for sending their children.

We are boarding at Aiken now with a southern planter. He feels bitterly about the condition of the country. Says taxes are enormous. His school tax is six cents on a dollar, which is the most satisfactory. Sixty-two white men own Aiken and pay her taxes. Seventy-five colored men who paid the tax on eleven dollars only have succeeded in opposition to the wishes of the tax payers in levying an increase of the school tax recently, altogether amounting to eleven or twelve hundred dollars. He rents his plantation for two hundred and some odd dollars and pays about one hundred and thirty-seven as tax. He says the Governor has gone into bankruptcy to save what he had stolen, and Hon. Mr. Lee (colored representative) has not paid his debts for several years.

His wife must have been a fine looking woman. She is brilliant, plays the piano quite trippingly. Her husband accompanies her on the violin.

Here we have good water, never short in sandy soil. In clayey soil, in warm weather, the wells and cisterns are scant. There is a prospect for a harvest of peaches, some quinces, and a Hows plum, good for preserves. Strawberries in abundance at present. Here they have good cows. In Florida the grown cattle were not larger than calves nine months old. They have very little milk except the condens ed. We had poor milk at twenty cents a quart. In Savannah you might see a drug store in every block. Here every dry goods store has drugs, boots and iron ware.

We are invited to a sabre tournament next Wednesday.

The Ties of Home.

No view of life is worth anything which does not recognize, as a fundamental fact of human nature, the existence of countless ties, which bind each man to his fellows, many of which he did not make and yet cannot destroy. If only a man recognizes in any degree the reality of even one such tie, it raises him out of himself from the narrowness and pettiness of merely personal aims. Who knows not the beauty, and even holiness, of home affections? The labor, and watching, and self-denial of parents for their children, or of children for their parents, are not evils, to be compensated for by a return in this world or the next; they are, and are felt to be, actual blessings, in which "it is blessed to give rather than to receive," for they exalt and widen out the whole nature of those who make the sacrifice, and deliver them from that worst tyranny—the tyranny of selfishness and self-indulgence. Who knows not the blessings which are enshrined in the sacredness of patriotism or loyalty? Look at them on the battle-field, and you will find them the only bright spots in its darkness and horror, the only influences which exalt and glorify natures otherwise ignorant or self-indulgent, frivolous or brutal. Who knows not the softening and glorifying power of charity over the souls of those who practice it freely and as a matter of course? Look at the nursing sisters of a hospital; at the visitors and Bible women, who make their way through the haunts of vice and wretchedness; at the ministers of Christ, who (putting their higher character and mission aside)are so often the only representatives of human love and charity amid the grinding of the great machinery which we call "business," and you will see in each and all of them a beauty, a tenderness, a grace and peace of spirit, which the power of love alone can give, and the world cannot take away. If we could conceive a community, in which such brotherly love was perfect, no power could stand against it. It would need no miracle (as has been well said) to make its power the sovereign power of this world, and its peace the earnest of the happiness of the next.

Five Negatives.

It is known that two negatives in English are equal to an affirmative. They destroy each other. But it is not so in Greek. They strengthen the negation, and a third negative makes it stronger still, and so a fourth, and a fifth. How strong five negatives must make a negation! Whether they ever occur in Greek classics I do not know; but in the Greek of the New Testament there is an instance of the kind. And what is that? Are the five negatives used to strengthen any threatening? No. They are connected with a promise, one of the "exceeding great and precious promises," which are given unto us. The case occurs in Heb. xviii. 5; For he hath said, "I will never leave Thee nor forsake Thee." There five negatives are employed. We translate but two of them, but there they all are, as one may see who looks into his Greek Testament. Now they need not all have been there; they are not all necessary to express the simple idea that God will never forsake his people. There must have been design in multiplying negatives so. I do not believe the phraseology was accidental, and I do not think it difficult to guess the design. God meant to be believed in that thing. He would secure the confidence of his children in that particular. He knew how prone they were to doubt his constancy, how strongly inclined to that form of unbelief, and how liable to be harrassed by the dread of being forsaken by him, and he would therefore make assurance doubly sure; so instead of saying simply, "I will not leave thee," which alone would have been enough, he adds, "nor forsake thee;" and instead of leaving it thus: "I will not leave thee, I will not forsake thee," he uses language equivalent to the following: "I will not, I will not leave thee; I will never, never, never forsake thee." There is a stanza which very faithfully, as well as beautifully expresses it:

"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose,
I will not, I will not desert to his foes:
That soul though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never, no never, no never forsake."

Give the Boys a Chance.

One of the surest methods of attaching a boy to the farm is to let him have something upon it for his own. Give him a small plot of ground to cultivate, allowing him the proceeds for his own use. Let him have his steers to break, or his sheep to care for. Ownership of even a fruit-tree, planted, pruned and brought to bearing by his own hands, will inspire him with an interest that no mere reward or wages can give. In addition to a taste for farm life which such a course will cultivate, the practical knowledge gained by the boy will be of the highest value. Being interested, he will be more observant, and will thoroughly learn whatever is necessary for his success.

Another and equally important advantage will be the accustoming him early to feel responsibility. Many young men, though well acquainted with all the manual operations of the farm, fail utterly when entrusted with the management of an estate, from want of experience in planning for themselves. It is much better that responsibility should be gradually assumed, than that a young man should be first thrown upon himself on attaining his majority.—Farm and Fireside.

Moral Courage.

Have the courage to face a difficulty, lest it kick you harder than you bargained for. Difficulties, like thieves, often disappear at a glance. Have the courage to leave a convivial party at the proper hour for doing so, however great sacrifice; and to stay away from one upon the slightest grounds for objection, however great the temptation to go. Have the courage to do without that which you do not need, however much you may admire it. Have the courage to speak your mind when it is necessary that you should do so, and hold your tongue when it is better you should be silent. Have the courage to speak to a poor friend in a seedy coat, even in the street, and when a rich man is nigh. The effort is less than many people take it to be, and the act is worthy of a king. Have the courage to admit that you have been in the wrong, and you will remove the fact in the mind of others, putting a desirable impression in the place of an unfavorable one. Have the courage to adhere to the first resolution when you cannot change it for a better one, and to abandon it at the eleventh hour upon conviction.

Home and Health Hints.

Hints on House-Papering.

This is the season, among good house-wives, for cleaning, whitewashing, painting, papering, and otherwise renovating the domicile.

After the cleaning, whitewashing, and painting is accomplished, comes the process of papering the walls; but the first thing, frequently, to be done is the removal of the old paper. To do this successfully, wet the wall thoroughly; and, when well soaked, the old paper can be stripped off very quickly. After the paper is removed, wash the wall to get off all the particles of paper which may remain, and leave the walls till nearly dry before commencing to lay the new paper. If the walls have been whitewashed instead of papered, wash the walls with vinegar, which will make the paste and paper adhere more securely. A bench is easily made for measuring and cutting the paper, by placing boards of suitable length across two flour-barrels. The paper should be unrolled and cut to a proper length, and in sufficient quantity to cover the rooms, before the pasting process commences. These sheets should be laid one over the other, to be readily at hand when the paster is ready to begin work. The liability of turning the edges or damaging the paper will be greatly obviated by adopting this course. Flour paste is the usual article for the purpose, and rye flour is considered better than wheat as it has more adhesion. Mix the flour in cold water thoroughly, by stirring, until the paste has a thin, creamy consistence, and then boil, when it will thicken, according to the length of time it is submitted to the heat. If found too thick in cooling, add boiling water until the desired degree of thickness is obtained; then add a little carbolic acid to prevent the paste from souring or becoming mouldy. A broad whitewash brush is the best to apply the paste with, and the paper should be laid quickly after pasting, to prevent its becoming too soft and tender to handle.

Two persons are required to lay on paper with rapidity, one to paste and one to apply the paper. When the paper is pasted it should be handed to the person on the ladder, who holds it about a foot from the top end, and lays it evenly against the wall at the top, allowing the upper end to hang over on the backs of the hands. By looking down the wall, it may be seen when it matches the previously-laid length; and after adjusting to match, it should then be brought gently to the wall, the backs of the hands then pressed against the wall and passed upward toward the ceiling, spreading them out toward the corners of the length of paper. The scissors are then run along at the juncture of the wall and ceiling, when the top of the paper is removed for a little distance, and it is cut off even and replaced. Then a soft cloth is gently passed downward and the paper pressed against the wall to the bottom, where it is cut off as at the top.—Scientific American.

Boiled Potatoes.

As I don't like watery potatoes, I will give you my method of having them mealy and good. Pare only so as to have them ready to boil by the time the water boils. Wash and put cooking immediately in enough water to cover. Boil fast till tender, then pour off the water, set the kettle back upon the stove a few moments so that they may steam, keeping them covered, shaking two or three times so they won't dry on, and they will be fit to eat. Take care not to let the water from the cover drip back on the potatoes, when you take it off.

Steam Pudding.—One pint buttermilk, two eggs, two tablespoonsful of cream, a handful of any dried fruit; stew it first though. Stir in flour till it is a stiff batter; two teaspoonsful of soda (it is full as good made of corn meal). Steam one hour.

Light Fruit Cake.—Three-fourths pound butter, one pound sugar, one pound eggs, one pound flouer, one pound raisins, stoned and chopped a little, half pound citron, small teaspoonful soda, no spice. Will keep all summer.

Cleaning Wood Work.—There is nothing better for cleaning painted wood-work than a piece of common India rubber. Rub the wood as if you were erasing pencil marks, and then pass a dry brush over it. No water is necessary.

Children's Corner.

The Trinity.

"Little girls," said Miss Bell to her Sunday-school class, "What do you understand by the Trinity?"

"Three persons in one God; the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost," answered the children.

"Do you understand how there can be three persons in one God, and all equal?" asked Miss Bell.

"No, ma'am."

"Do you think any one does?"

"I suppose you do, ma'am," said Sophie.

"No," said Miss Bell, "I do not understand how the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are one; and perhaps I never shall, even if I get to heaven.

You do not understand how the flowers grow; or how one kind of seed always produces one kind of flower. You know the sun and the rain make the grain grow, but how, you cannot tell.

An old lady in one of our quiet villages saw the telegraph posts, and the wires passing through the village. And she said, 'They tell me that thing carries a message from New York to Boston in no time at all; but I don't believe it, and I never will believe it. It is not possible.'

One day a letter came to the old lady, and on opening it she found it was a message by telegraph, saying, 'Your son Robert is very ill; come immediately.' She asked a great many questions as to how the message came; and when she heard that the 'wires' brought it, and when she saw the date only an hour before the time that she was reading it, she said, 'It is a hoax. It isn't possible a message could come to me that way.'

So she stayed at home. The following day she got a letter saying, 'Robert has just breathed his last. Oh, how he longed to see his mother! We telegraphed to you to come, and if you received, and had started immediately, you might have seen him before he died.'

Sorely she reproached herself! After that she did not refuse to believe a thing which she could not understand.

Now, we have the Word of God telling us of many things which our poor, weak minds can no more understand than the old lady could the telegraph, or the little fly which crawls on my book can understand the words printed there; but we know that they are true, because the God of all truth tells us they are. We have only to believe, and in many cases we must be contented not to understand, saying, with the Psalmist, 'Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; I cannot attain unto it.'"

Carrying a Ladder.

Did you ever see a person carry ladder? He puts it on his shoulder, or it may be puts his head between the rounds and has one of the sides resting on each shoulder, and having it nicely balanced walks along. A man with a ladder is an interesting object in a crowded street. He looks at the end before him, but the end behind him he cannot see. If he moves the front end to get out of the way of a person, away goes the rear end just as far in the opposite direction, and the slightest turn of his body, only a few inches, will give the ends a sweep of several feet, and those in the way may look out for bruised hats and bumped heads, while the window glass along the street is in constant danger from the unseen rear end of the ladder. When a small boy, I was carrying a not very large ladder, when there was a crash. An unlucky movement had brought the rear end of my ladder against a window. Instead of scolding me, my father made me stop, and said very quietly: "Look here, my son, there is one thing I wish you always to remember; that is, every ladder has two ends." I never have forgotten that, though many, many years have gone, and I never see a man carrying a ladder or other long thing but what I remember the two ends. Don't we carry things besides ladders that have two ends? When I see a young man getting "fast" habits I think he sees only one end of that ladder, and that he does not know that the other end is wounding his parents' hearts. Many a young girl carries a ladder in the shape of a love for dress and finery; she only sees the gratification of a foolish pride at the forward end of that ladder, while the end that she does not see is crushing true modesty and pure friendship as she goes along thoughtlessly among the crowd. Ah! yes, every ladder has two ends, and it is a thing to be remembered in more ways than one.

THE SIXTH ANNIVERSARY.

After devotional exercises President Roberts announced the first appointment of the evening an address by Mr. Charles W. Greene, publisher of the National Crop Reporter and American Farmers' Advocate, Indianapolis, Indiana, and late Secretary of the American Agricultural Congress; subject: "The Grange and its Relation to American Principles." This was an address of great power and will be widely felt by the secret order against whose operations it was directed. Copies were sent to a large number of papers throughout the country and widely published.

Mr. Geo. W. Clark, at the close of the address, responded to the call for a song, with "Men of Thought and Men of Action, Clear the Way."

Mrs. M. J. Gage was then invited to the platform and was accompanied by Zebulon Weaver, Esq., of Syracuse. The President introduced her to the audience and announced the subject of her remarks. Mrs. Gage spoke in a clear distinct voice so as to be plainly heard by the large audience, and her easy manner and delivery bespoke former experience upon the platform. Her arguments were pointed and drew out frequent applause. At the close of her remarks the third appointment, an address upon "The Literature of the Reform," by Prof. Blanchard, was about to be postponed, as the hour was late; but loud calls for the speaker showed that the audience was unwearied. At the close of the address the speaker urged on all the necessity of supporting the publications of the reform and especially the Christian Cynosure, the organ of the National Association. Cards had been circulated in the audience for those who would act as agents in this work upon which some pledged to secure as high as seventy five subscribers during the year.

Rev. John Levington, editor of the Methodist Free Press, wished to correct a mistake made by the speaker in saying that that paper was the organ of the Anti-masons of the Methodist Episcopal church; it was not a denominational paper for a Methodist Episcopal Conference had voted that it was not an organ of that church. He wished all to subscribe for it.

The President announced that Miss Emma S. Allen, would sing Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's soul-stirring "Battle Hymn of the Republic." Miss Allen prefaced her song by a few pointed words, and the audience joined in the chorus—

"Glory, glory, hallelujah,
Glory, glory, hallelujah,
Glory, glory, hallelujah,
Our God is marching on."

After announcements for the next day, the audience adjourned with the benediction.

Thursday.

MORNING SESSION.

The devotional exercises continued an hour with great interest and power. Rev. D. B. Douglass led the meeting.

Business was taken up at 9 o'clock with the reading of minutes. A verbal report of the Committee on Correspondence, by Rev. M. N. Downing, followed. The report was accepted and the correspondence referred for publication, it being too volumnious to admit reading to the Convention. The Committee on Resolutions then presented their report by Elder Barlow. This report as finally adopted appears on another page. An excellent paper by Enoch Honeywell had been placed in the hands of the committee and was also read. It was received with enthusiasm by the Convention and was afterwards voted to be printed in such papers as might desire to do so. Further consideration of the resolutions was deferred to hear the report of the Committee on Finance.

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

The Preliminary Meeting at Syracuse.

Delegates to the Convention began assembling at Shakspeare Hall a little before 2 o'clock P.M., and Ezra A. Cook, publisher of the Cynosure, made it his especial business to announce the name of each one as he came, that there might be no restraint between these noble, self-sacrificing men who, coming from all parts of the United States, were greatly cheered and strengthened by making the acquaintance of those whom they had often heard through the Cynosure. A number of veterans who had been through the Anti-masonic campaign "Forty years ago," were present. The letter of introduction brought by father Rollins, a white-haired veteran from Vermont, who passed his 82d birthday a short time since, awakened much applause and many congratulations from those present.

After about an hour spent in the most delightful social converse, the meeting was called to order by Ezra A. Cook, and our venerable brother from Vermont was chosen to preside. He expressed thanks for the honor and said: "Never have I more clearly felt the especial presence and guidance of God than when coming over the Green Mountains to attend this Convention." The meeting was opened by a most earnest prayer by Rev. John Levington. Ezra A. Cook spoke with much feeling of the wonderful goodness of God as shown in sustaining him in boldly attacking the lodge when starting in business with a small capital and heavy expenses; of the blessing of God on the Cynosure, and of the marvelous growth of anti-secret sentiment during the first five years.

Rev. John Levington and Ezra A. Cook were then elected secretaries of the meeting.

Sidney Wilder spoke of the petition to President Grant against the Masonic corner-stone laying of the Chicago Post-office.

He thought it perfectly evident that no secret society had a right to thus advertise themselves and thrust upon citizens their rites and ceremonies, and he thought it especially an outrage that a secret society based on murder, as was the Master Mason's degree, should be allowed to insult the public with their mummeries. Bro. Levington endorsed this and thought it clear that such a vile, wicked institution should not be thus allowed to insult all intelligent, fair-minded citizens; but further, he denied its right on the ground that it is heathenish in character while ours is a Christian nation.

The chairman suggested that it might be well to appoint a committee to draft resolutions on this subject. A brother suggested that the petition to President Grant stated our objections to Freemasons laying the corner-stone of the Chicago Custom-House and our reasons therefor. G. W. Needles, of Albany, Mo., publisher of the American Freeman, remarked that he thought it best to leave the matter to the general committee on resolutions which would be appointed during the Convention.

Bro. A. Worth, of Indiana, spoke of the progress of the cause in his place in connection with the labors of Rev. J. P. Stoddard. He said: "I find that men will talk calmly on any subject but this. On this subject there is no middle ground. I find that when even those who were Anti-masons get into the grange they will then defend all secret societies. We must take strong ground on this subject."

Bro. Stoddard thought it was not true that all grangers defended other secret societies, but instead of that many who soon became convinced that the grange was but diluted Freemasonry, had promptly left it and denounced it. This he said was especially the case in Minnesota. He admitted, however, that those who stuck to the grange soon found themselves obliged to defend secret societies in general. Bro. Stoddard here read the petition to President Grant, and remarked that he had already counted the names of nearly five thousand signers to it and there were many yet to be counted.

Our venerable chairman related several thrilling incidents of his past experience in the Anti-masonic cause. He said: "When I became convinced of the great evils of Freemasonry I felt it to be my duty to renounce the institution publicly before my people. I was in a Masonic lodge but twice. The first time, I was made a Master Mason. The oaths and ceremonies were so disgusting and wicked, that I resolved never to enter the lodge again, and I did not for a year and a half. Still I did not then realize how abominable were the oaths, penalties and ceremonies, as the oaths were administered but part of a sentence at a time. I understood the Master Mason's oath to be that the secret of a brother Master Mason given in charge as such, should be as inviolable in my breast as his in own, murder and treason excepted of my own election, and I understood the of to leave the whole matter of keeping secrets at my election or judgment. About a year and a half after I took the first three degrees some of the members of the lodge called on me to labor with me about my non-attendance on the lodge, etc. When I stated frankly my objections to what I had seen of the institution they said that if I would only take the Royal Arch degrees, I would then see good reasons for all of the ceremonies of the first three degrees, and they were sure that I could not help liking it. I consulted several ministers of the gospel who had taken those degrees. They advised and urged me to take those degrees, and I consented. I resolved to note carefully the oaths, particularly about keeping secrets, and the exceptions named. They cunningly said nothing about exceptions either way, asking me to promise that a companion Royal Arch Mason's secrets should remain as inviolable in my breast as in his own. After retiring from the lodge one of the preachers who had urged me to take the chapter or Royal Arch degrees said: "I could'nt help laughing to see how they got that oath down your throat. You promised that the secrets of a Royal Arch Mason should remain as inviolable in your breast as in his own, and of course that includes murder, treason, and everything else. When I took the oath they said, "murder and treason not excepted;" but you are just as strongly bound as I am. If that is so, sir, I replied, I am done with Freemasonry! I resolved to say nothing to anybody about my feelings and I kept my resolution for about two years, till I heard of the murder of Wm. Morgan, when I saw that I could not innocently be silent any longer, I publicly renounced and denounced the institution, as I felt that to conceal the character of Masonry was to make myself accessory to the murder of Morgan. Just before I renounced Freemasonry, when I first saw Morgan's book, I one day heard a man speak to the Master of our lodge about Morgan's book, when the Master replied, "It is a counterfeit bill, ask Bro. Rollins if it is not." So the man asked me, and I told him that it was a correct revelation. The Master expressed great astonishment at my answer; but I told him he must not tell men to ask questions of me unless he expected me to give a truthful answer. The day after I publicly renounced the institution, the Master called a special meeting of the lodge, and charges of immoral conduct were at once preferred against me; but to this a shrewd lawyer in the lodge objected, for, said he, "If you prefer such chrages you will have to sustain them outside of the lodge as well as inside." The charge was then changed to unmasonic conduct, and on this charge I was expelled, as I admitted that the charge was correct. This was not all, however. A large crowd of rowdies, all Masons, assembled at the store of the Master of the lodge which was next door to me, where after much hooting and yelling, they proceeded to bring out a sort of scare-crow in the form of a man, on which they put a board lettered "preaching done here." They then commenced shooting at the board as a mark. I came to the door and looked on. When I went to fill my appointment I found that the report was everywhere circulated that I had been guilty of gross immoralities. The lodge had the notice of my expulsion published in the newspapers in the neighboring towns as well as at home, and they sent a special committee to other lodges in quite remote towns with a view to a systematic defamation of my character.

I then resolved to give them battle and in the name of the Lord destroy the works of darkness, if it be his will. I purchased a press and type and started a weekly paper called the Vermont Luminary. A State Anti-masonic Convention was held at Montpelier, where a State ticket was put in the field with Heman Allen for Governor. The central committee were empowered to fill the vacancies left by any who might refuse the nomination. Heman Allen did not decline till a week before the election. I took the responsibility of nominating Wm. A. Palmer for Governor, and three other papers with whom I had consulted joined in the nomination. It was impossible to get the committee together as they were widely separated. We succeeded in polling votes enough for our ticket to make a tie between the other parties, which threw the election into the legislature. On the 33d ballot Wm.

A. Palmer was elected Governor, and at the end of his term we re-elected him for three terms of a year each.

A petition to the legislature to revoke the charter of the State Grand Lodge was at first received with much ridicule, but, strange as it may seem, the charter was revoked by an almost unanimous vote during the same session. After consultation, as the Freemasons saw that their charter must finally be given up, and as they hated above all things to have the character of this institution discussed, they finally voted unanimously for the bill revoking the charter of the Grand Lodge. Freemasons and jack Masons often assure us that the institution has changed since those days, but it is merely the change that happens to snakes. In the spring of the year they change their skin and come out a beautiful polished serpent, but it is the same old snake still.

Rev. D. S. Caldwell, our Ohio State Agent, spoke of our crafty foe and the intimate connection of all the secret orders.

Rev. J. Levington of Masonic vengeance and his own experience in being threatened with death by poison, shooting, hanging, etc. Saml. Sweet of his labors in this reform in publishing at one time the Onondago Republican at Syracuse, and at another a Vermont paper, also of participation in the political war as a member of the first Anti-masonic Convention.

Allusion was made to a Masonic dignitary in Kentucky, who said he "would not exchange his Masonic rank for the seat of the angel Gabriel in heaven." G. W. Needles, of Missouri, said the opposition to Freemasonry was begun in his section about eight years ago, on the ground of self-defense, as murders were of almost daily occurrence, and it became so notorious that Freemasons could not be punished, that no attempt was made to even arrest the guilty, and there was inaugurated a perfect reign of terror. As a Freemason murderer said: "A rope wouldn't stick to a Mason's neck." Several others spoke of the threats of the lodge. Mr. Needles remarked that he considered the grange the worst of all the secret orders, as he knew that in his section of country its object was the prostitution of women, and many respectable women had already been ruined by it. One woman who saw the horrible intentions of the men who were initiating her, tore herself away from them, fled from the place, and openly denounced the vile wretches.

The Sixth Anniversary Report of the Committee on Resolutions as Adopted.

WHEREAS, In the continued existence of the secret oath-bound fraternities we recognize a conspiracy against all who do not belong to them and a standing menace to the religion of Jesus Christ, as well as to the republican institutions which drew their life from it, and

WHEREAS, Organized resistance to Freemasonry and its kindred clans is imperatively demanded of all who love our blood-bought institutions: Therefore

Resolved, That loyalty to God, and the government bequeathed to us by our fathers, and thus far maintained by the blood and treasure of the present generation, requires of us that ceaseless vigilance, that patient investigation of institutions and principles, and that consecration to the defense of truth and right, without which the overthrow of all we hold dear is inevitable.

Resolved, That we make special opposition to speculative Freemasonry, not simply because it is the mother of most if not all other secret orders, and the principal generator of the virus of all, but because of its deceptive and masterly antagonism to Christianity in the following, among other particulars: 1. The exclusion from its forms of prayer, its quotations of Scripture and all its rituals, of the name of the tLord Jesus Christ, and from its membership of "all old men in dotage, young men in uonage, all imbeciles, cripples and maimed persons, all in feeblehealth, and all women,"—the persons above all others most needing human sympathy and Christian charity. 2, The welcoming unchanged, unregenerate, unsanctified pagan, Mohammedan, Jew, infidel and nominal Christian to the same altar of worship at the same time, which Christianity everywhere forbids. 3. The specialty of its charities—its so-called exhibitions of benevolence, making Masons instead of Christians objects of favoritism; or, in other words, substituting, —substantially "Masons" for the "household of faith" thus making an anti-Christian distinction. 4. The placing upon its altar of worship the Christian's Bible, the Mohammedan's Koran, and the sacred books, so-called, of all nations, as the books of the "Masonic law" in the several nationalities in which their authority is severally acknowledged. 5. The exaltation of the square and compasses above the Bible, in that they are placed upon the altars of the lodges of all countries, while the Bible is admitted as a symbol on the altars only of the lodges of so-called Christian countries. 6, The introduction into its higher, or chivalric degrees, of the so-called Christianity of the sword—a fighting religion. 7. The reintroduction of the Aaronic priesthood, as after the order of Melchisedec, in opposition to the all-important fact that Christ, the crucified, risen and exalted Saviour, is the only High Priest acknowledged by Christianity.

Resolved, That we recognize in the Patrons of Husbandry, or granges, so-called, which are springing up in all parts of our country, children of secrecy, having Masonry and Odd-fellowship as god-fathers and god-mothers, which organizations are most cunningly devised to give speculators at head centers the control of the farming interests of the country.

Resolved, That in the secret temperance orders we see—however honest many of their initiates may be—only so many stepping stones to the Masonic temples, whose main influence on the temperance cause has been to dishearten, disintegrate and weaken its friends, while giving encouragment and strength to its enemies.

Resolved, That the growing interest in our cause, and the success which is crowning our efforts to rouse the people to a sense of the dangers to which they are exposed from organized secretism, calls for profound gratitude to God, and is just cause for encouragement to us to continue, and increase our efforts for the enlightenment of the people, and the entire overthrow of the secret despotisms with which we are at war; and that among these tokens of growing interest since our last anniversary, we recognize the organization of State societies, auxiliary to this body, in Kansas, Ohio, Wisconsin and Indiana, and that Pennsylvania and Iowa are soon to fall into line, while efficient work is being done in nearly all these States by State lecturers and others through whose labors the people are fast rising in their might against the powers of secrecy.

Resolved, That with the light we now have on the principles, obligations and tendencies of speculative Freemasonry we see not how a man can be an intelligent and adhering Freemason and at the same time be a consistent Christian or a loyal citizen; and that we are compelled by our convictions to withhold from all such the same confidence and support due alone to those free from Masonic obligations.

Resolved, That this Association recognizes with gratitude the past services, as its corresponding secretary, of Rev. I. A. Hart, and that we miss his person and voice from our present Anniversary, learning with sadness that he can serve us no more in that office he has so long and so usefully filled, and that in tendering him our thanks for his labors, we also assure him of our continued love and sympathy, and our prayers for the divine blessing upon his future.

Resolved, That as a means of spreading light among the people, we recognize the efficient work done by the Christian Cynosure, Methodist Free Press American Wesleyan, the Free Methodist, the Religious Telescope, and other valuable papers—the tracts and books published by this body, and last, though not least, the leaflets sent out with no unsparing hand by our co-worker, Enoch Honeywell; and that we most heartily commend these papers and other agencies to the continued confidence and support of all the friends of our cause.

Resolved, That a general agent and State lecturer in each State, organized and organizing, is an absolute necessity, and that a fund of $10,000 for their support is equally necessary and pressingly so, and that we take immediate steps for raising such a fund.

Resolved, That our thanks are due, and are hereby cordially tendered to the conductors of the various newspapers in this city who have so faithfully and courteously reported the doings of this body, and that in this we have an encouragiug "sign of the times."

Resolved, That the warmest thanks of the members of this body, and the friends attending this meeting, are hereby tendered to the citizens of Syracuse, who have so hospitably entertained us during our present session.

COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

Berea College, Kentucky.

Secret societies are of two kinds, those which aim to secure special and unequal advantages for their members, in social, civil, political and business relations; and those which seek to promote some moral, social or political reform. The first, among which Freemasonry is the most prominent, we regard as selfish in their nature and essential aim, and, hence, antagonistic to the Christian religion. · · · While we may heartily sympathize with the ostensible, and even real objects of the other class of secret societies, we regard them as not only useless, but even harmful in their influence upon the reforms they seek to promote, inasmuch as they are distasteful and otherwise objectionable to many of the wise and good, and thus they divide and cripple the forces of reform, which might otherwise be united. They also promote familiarity with the habits and forms of secret associations, and cultivate a taste for them, and thus become training schools, in which multitudes are prepared for those which are most objectionable. For these and other reasons we think it our duty to discountenance them. In the college no secret societies are permitted. The following is our rule in reference to them: "No student is permitted to meet with any secret society while in attendance upon school." E. H. Fairchild, President.

Westfield College, Illinois.

With the membership of these orders we have no personal quarrel, except as they individually take the war-path. Against their organization and their peculiar principles, however, we are, and desire to be known to be hostile and aggressive. Deeming them (especially those best known) injurious to all the best interests of mankind, and destitute of all moral right to an existence, we cannot but pray and labor for their overthrow. In the government of the college we take no further, notice of them than to prohibit persons, while students, from attending lodge meetings. This prohibition, while it is morally wholesome, is considered necessary to the best intellectual progress of students. College secret societies do not, and, by the help of God, cannot exist among us.

S. B. Allen, Pres., and other members of the Faculty.

Ohio Central College.

No secret society, it is believed, has ever been organized among the students of this school, and it is determined that none ever shall be with the knowledge or consent of the present management. We believe secret societies to be anti-republican as well as anti-Christian. E. F. Reid, Pres.

Earlham College, Indiana.

Earlham College is opposed to secret societies of every description. Soon after the organization of our college in 1859, it became necessary to pass a regulation forbidding all secret organizations. Such fraternities began to get a foothold before we were aware of it, and for a year or two were a serious evil, socially, intellectually and morally. The formation of such societies by our students will sever their connection with the college unless they should abandon the same. As to Freemasonry, while all admit there are many good men among them, yet we believe their principles and many of their practices to be incompatible with the highest moral character. The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress, Joseph Moore, Pres.

Lincoln College, Missouri.

That our institution is under the government and control of the United Presbyterian Synod of Kansas, and one of the articles in our charter requires that its exercises shall be conducted in accordance with the order and distinctive principles of the United Presbyterian church. · · · We believe that this and opposition to all secret associations is clearly based upon the Word of God, and if so, then we, of course, can have no connection with such, and wherever our influence extends, we are not at liberty to connive at, or tolerate such institutions. · · · Such being the ecclesiastical connection we sustain and our views upon this subject being as we have thus briefly stated above, of course we have no secret societies in connection with our institution. And such is the public sentiment of this community that we have no secret organizations of any kind in our village.

Randall Ross, Pres.

Eureka College, Illinois.

What are the evils connected with Freemasonry?

1. Time and means are expended unnecessarily.

2. The attendant upon evening conclaves is drawn away from the family circle when he should be at home, and to that extent the social tie is weakened.

3. The pledge and obligation of secrecy are stronger than required for the legitimate accomplishment of the objects usually set forth as designed by the institutions.

4. The candidate for admission is in the most solemn manner initiated into that of which he has not before complete knowledge; and if he shall find any thing fundamentally wrong, he is virtually prohibited from denouncing it.

5. No human institution has the right to exact oaths. Even the church has, formally, none, and civil governments if they require them can only do so because they themselves are ordained of God. Freemasonry has no such right, having no divine origin.

6. Freemasonry gives undue sanctity to that which is not divine.

7. It performs its charitable acts not in the name of Christ.

8. Many Freemasons openly contrast the church, as a means of good, with their order, and thus injure the influence of God's own organization.

9. Selfishness is an ingredient of the philanthropy of the order, since it distinguishes in its benevolence between its members and other men, and gives rather as a mutual aid society than because Christ, who has commended his own love to us by the infinite gift of himself, requires us to love one another.

Though Freemasons regard these objections as unjust and invalid, thousand are influenced by them who may not openly oppose, but yet cannot conscientiously attach themselves to the organization, and will always regard its influence as detrimental to our civil, social and moral life.

A. M. Weston, Pres.

CHAPTER VI.

"I shall detain you no longer in the demonstration of what we should not do, but straight conduct ye to a hillside, where I will point ye out the right path of a virtuous and noble education; laborious indeed at the first ascent, but else so smoothe, so green, so full of goodly prospect, and melodious sounds on every side, that the harp of Orpheus was not more charming."

He must be strangely credulous who will accept the theorizings of the advocates of college fraternites against the plain argument now presented, backed as it is by such testimony. Secretiveness, as a mental phenomenon, every one acquainted with intellectual science knows to be what Horace Mann, while president of Antioch College, so forcibly and clearly taught—a quality pertaining to our lower nature, the cultivation of which, by any means, and especially by arbitrary obligations, degrades all manhood.

Of all classes of men, students should be described by these words from the author of "Paradise Lost": "Enflamed with the study of learning and the admiration of virtue; stirred up with high hopes of living to be brave men and worthy patriots, dear to God, and famous to all ages." But what perversity of judgment to chose instead a union with these associations—a course tending to physical as well as moral debility, to strengthen the animal instincts to prostitute the clear intellect and tarnish the chaste honor of youth. To quote Lord Derby: "Take two men, if they could be found, exactly alike in mental and bodily aptitudes, and let the one go on carelessly and idly, indulging his appetites and generally leading a life of what is called pleasure, and let the other train himself by early hours, by temperate habits, and by giving to muscles and brain each their fair share of employment, and at the end of two or three years they will be as wide apart in their capacity for exertion as if they had been born with wholly different constitution."

But how shall this temptation be put away? Chiefly by the means suggested by Professor Wilder.

First, let college faculties firmly and persistently prohibit the secret societies. Let them unite in this if possible, but not delay for the sake of co-operation only. The dwellers in the lowly and secluded French valley united their efforts for communication with the world beyond their mountains when their pastor, Oberlin, shouldered a pick and led the way.

Second, inform the student; let his convictions be formed in harmony with truth, and secure in him a conscientious obedience.

Third, let parents and guardians be likewise informed, that home influence may sustain college law.

Fourth, let alumni be true to the best interests of Alma Mater, and use their acknowledged influence, like Evarts at Yale, to secure so just an end. Take an instance of what they may do. Secret societies had always been tolerated in the University of Lewisburg, Pa., until from an earnest revival of religion in the fall of 1865 sprang a strong opposition, manifested particularly in the societies themselves, many of their best members withdrawing. At the suggestion of the faculty the trustees made the connection with secret societies a test of admission to college. But an attempt has been made to repeal this wise regulation during the last year; and the Alumni Association have responded with proof that the University has been signally prospered since the action of the Board, and by their concurrent efforts nobly sustain that body.

Let the closing words in an address of Professor Bascom of Williams College to his pupils be remembered by every student: "Bind not the corrupt to your very bosom with bonds of secrecy, and hope to escape their influence. That breath of pollution the breath constantly on you, which you draw into the seats of life as if it were air, is malaria, ready to creep stealthily through soul and body. Those who capture a citadel by fraud, hold their breath until their work is done; then comes on the night air, the shout of carnage. It is these terrible liabilities, these deep pit-falls, into which every one familiar with college life has seen more than one plunged, that, strewed along the paths of darkness, of secrecy, make them most of all to be shunned."

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samnel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hnndred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abdnction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the conntry forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

A NEW WORK OF GREAT INTEREST.

SECRET SOCIETIES ANCIENT AND MODERN,

By GEN'L J. W. PHELPS.

240 Pages, handsomely Printed.

This new book is one that every man should read who wishes to be posted on the character and influence of Secret Societies.

The work is particularly commended to the attention of Officers of The Army and Navy, The Bench and The Clergy

The "Table of Contents" is as follows:

'The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Filmore's and Webster's deference to Masonry, A brief outline of the progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, The Credit Mobilier Ring, Masonic Benevolence, The uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion."

Notices of the Press.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern: An Outline of their Rise, Progress and Character with Respect to the Christian Religion and Republican Government. Edited by General J. W. Phelps. Chicago: Ezra A. Cook & Co.

The author traces back the origin of Masonry and its evil influences, particularly as seen and felt in our own country; the Tammany Ring, Credit Mobiler, &c. He shows the subserviency of some of our public men, such as Fillmore and Webster, to its dominating power. If read dispassionately it will do good.—United Presbyterian.

The author has presented information concerning the Old Mysteries and their antagonism to Christianity; the Masonry of Washington and his virtual secession from it; the harlotry of Masonry, English and American, in assuming charge of international politics, and treaties between England and the United States; the disgusting intervention of the lodge at the close of the French and German war; the Masonic baptisms; all these and more Gen. Phelps has given, accompanied with clear philosophical dissertations of his own.

A FEW ARGUMENTS FOR TAKING THE "CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE."

We do not suppose that many of our agents are at a loss for arguments to induce people to subscribe for the Cynosure. But we will recapitulate a few. First of all, it is the organ of the National Association opposed to Secret Societies, the chief aim of which is to overthrow Freemasonry and kindred orders. This Association is endeavoring to destroy one of the deadliest foes of the Christian religion. A foe which substitutes itself as a means of salvation (for able-bodied men who pay their dues) for the death of Christ. Teaching men to show their charity to all members of their order, (and their families,) substituting an oath-bound brotherhood for the universal brotherhood which Christianity teaches. Destroying the Christian unity of the marriage relation and compelling men to take oaths, the execution of whose penalties require the fearful mutilation of their bodies and (many of them) the utter ruin of their souls.

The Association also endeavors to overthrow Masonry as an enemy of all good government; working secretly on dishonest, partial, and wholly unrepublican principles; confusing, and so far as possible, destroying all ideas of equal rights in the minds of its members.

Setting itself up as a despotic government independent of and superior to the government of the United States. Promoting intemperance by its habits of refreshment and making the concealment of crime and the shielding of criminals a virtue instead a vice when Masons are guilty.

Another argument for agents in obtaining subscribers is its value as a family paper aside from its specialty. "The Sabbath-school" department, the "Family Circle," the "Children's department," the "Farm and Garden,' "Health and Home" corner, the observance of the Sabbath, and the recognition of Christianity in our National Constitution. The news department, market reports, etc., etc., render it, according to the testimony of many of its careful readers, the most valuable and enterprising newspaper they receive.

With these and similar arguments for its support will not all friends of honesty, impartial justice, and common morality and especially of pure Christianity, aid in extending the circulation of the Cynosure?

We have received several clubs of twelve three months subscribers during the last week for which we were thankful. We expect to report our mail list again next week. Make it as large as possible. We hope all who renew this month try to send in a few new subscribers with their renewals.

From sixteen to twenty thousand names protesting against having the corner-stone laid by Masons have already been received. Let us have more still, but send in the protests to the office of the Cynosure before June fifteenth.

THIS WEEK presents another part of the National Convention, the Addresses by Mr. C. W. Greene and Mrs. C. B. Miller and the Secretary's Report; also the report of the proceedings are completed. There are several addresses yet to appear beside the remarkable document of Elder Bernard, which will come out next week. Every one should read his "Reminiscences." They will be republished in convenient form for circulation. The paper of Enoch Honeywell, so well received by the Convention will, appear soon.

MEMBER'S TICKETS.—At Syracuse a plan was devised for raising funds for the prosecution of our work. The plan is this: Tickets of membership are issued to be sold at twenty-five cents each. When any person by the payment of this sum becomes an annual member of the Association his or her name, age and post-office address are written out in a book prepared for the purpose. Persons desiring life membership can have it by the payment at one time of ten dollars. Five thousand member's tickets were printed at Syracuse and four thousand seven hundred of them are already in the hands of agents who will endeavor to dispose of them. Tickets will be sent to known friends of the cause who make application, and also papers for the enrollment of members names. Now let all who want to see these secret lodges overthrown set to work. Let us go into the churches and schools and get the names and address of one hundred thousand men, women and children who are opposed to organized secrecy on our roll before the year is out. This will give us twenty-five thousand dollars which will pay the salary of every lecturer now appointed and set others to work. Send at once for members' tickets and let us see how many we can get on record against the lodge. All application for such tickets and all lists of members should be sent to C. A. Blanchard, Secretary N. C. A., 11 Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Topics of the Time.

WHAT SIGN IS THIS?—Unitarianism is said to be dying out in England. No less than four of the principal pulpits of the denomination in London are vacant and no one accepts the responsibility of filling them. A division on the subject of Theism is the attributed cause, but it is also affirmed that the sect will return gradually to those creeds considered orthodox, with which its spirit and philosophy are entirely harmonious. If the aggressive spirit of Bible Christianity has brought about this change through the power of God, it is a matter of gratitude and encouragement. The metropolitan churches on this side the ocean seem at times likely to accomplish the same object, but by relaxing doctrine and discipline; so that were all in the condition of a considerable minority, Unitarianism would die for want of a mission.

COMMENCEMENT DAYS.—The dearest, swiftest, most filled with dread, most hopeful hours of college life are here, and the periodical notices of the embryo Demosthenian spirit begin to appear. The ubiquity of the modern graduate, the frequency of the occasion and the demands of our severely prosaic times have somewhat militated against the former grandeur of commencement as the index of future renown or oblivion. Instead of the camel that has sucked in nourishment for a desert journey, the age demands the swift engine licking up water from between its tracks, siezing, assimilating, creating with tireless energy. A successful man on leaving college will know best the measure and application of his own mind. He is a producer, a creator; seizing opportunities and experiences and effecting results through other men, or without them, by the force of his own will and the inspiration of his own enthusiasm. It is to the credit of our colleges that such men look back to them with something of the affection of sons.

INDIAN COMMISSIONERS.—The Commissioners appointed by President Grant to improve the condition of the Indians are now displaced. Four of them left the board some time since, and now the six who remained have resigned, being compelled to do so, it is supposed, by the conduct of Secretary Delano, a Freemason. The Chicago Tribune states that the board refused to audit accounts that the Secretary was determined to have paid, and that the unpleasant relations resulting from the desire to steal on the one hand and to deal uprightly on the other have forced the honest men out and given the rogues all the opportunity they desired. In this connection it is interesting to note that as these unpaid commissioners go out, an Indian war comes in; and that United States troops are already on the march to punish a few half-starved, cheated and abused red skins. We have not, on the one hand, the slightest sympathy with the sickly sentamentalism that can see naught but noble red men in the debased inhabitants of our western mountains; nor on the other, with the heartless and savage whites who would first steal land from them, craze them with villainous whiskey, and then from the trading post or distillery beg for soldiers to shoot them down. Even now after every treaty has been violoted and every pledge made to them has been falsified, if white men would keep off lands which they yet hold and fulfill but partially the promises they have made there would be no trouble. So long, however, as thieves are allowed to force the resignation of unpaid and honest men, just so long will Indian wars continue. Soldiers will be shot down in an ignoble warfare and corrupt politicians will have one more cord with which to bind the people they profess to serve.

AS IT SEEMS TO A MORMON.—The agitation in regard to the many-wived has come up again on a movement to expel one Cannon from his place as territorial representative in Congress because of his having more than one wife. It is very difficult to understand the apparent ignorance of intelligent men respecting this matter. The Constitution expressly declares that there shall be no religious test required as a qualification for any office under the United States, and to require a man to abandon his Mormonism as a condition of occupying a place in Congress is as unconstitutional as it would be to pass an act regarding the establishment of religion or prohibiting its free exercise. Under the Constitution of the United States men may marry two or twenty wives, burn widows, offer human sacrifices, or practice any other religion they choose. Of course this Constitution is wrong, and equally of course it will be amended by the authoritative recognition of the true God and the Christian religion, or our beloved nation will be destroyed. Max Muller, the great philologist, well says: "It is language and religion that make a people, but religion is even a more powerful agent than language." We call ourselves, and we are, a Christian nation, but already other and false worships are coming in upon us. The Constitution says that all are on a level before the law. If they are, any one man has the same right to be a Mormon that another has to be a Methodist; and the Ashantee has the same right to offer a man by fire to his God in New York that a Congregationalist has to baptize his child, or a Baptist to celebrate the communion in Brooklyn. The thing to be done is to alter an infidel, atheistic Constitution so that it may conform to the Christian laws and Christian hearts of the American people.

THE INDEPENDENTS.—State conventions, supposed to be of farmers, were held in Illinois and Indiana on June 10th. Judging from the tone of the press the meetings were rather disorderly and to a certain extent under the control, or, more properly influence, of decayed politicians of both parties. Admitting all this, however, it does not prove that the movement they represent is either unnecessary or weak. It is always the fate of reform enterprises to be unfortunately represented in many instances, and a collection of reformers is almost if not always a turbulent assemblage. When conventions are composed of men who are united in pursuit of selfish ends and well accustomto the party whip, there is very little confusion. When men are united in breaking down a system of injustice, fraud and oppression, individuality is strongly developed and would-be managers are generally unfortunate. The farmers' movement at present is the first awaking of a sleeping giant whose slumbers in the past have made it possible to bind him. The political affairs of this country have of late years been managed by a set of small post-masters and country lawyers, governed by larger post-masters and lawyers, who have been controlled by the dispenser of patronage. The people have had nothing to do but go to the polls and vote for these little wire-pullers of whom nine-tenths of the voters knew absolutely nothing. So long as this state of things continues it is very plain that the United States will be rendered contemptible in the eyes of the civilized world. Monopolies will grow stronger and the masses less powerful until the liberties of the people are subverted and the Masons or Jesuits give us one of their Grand Masters for a king. We hail this farmers' movement as an omen of good. We beseech them to keep clear of the secret society schemers who have need to hide their work. If the men who till the soil are honest and true to themselves, they can make this country the purest, happiest, strongest in the world.

THE SYRACUSE CONVENTION.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE CORRESPONDING SECRETARY.

To the National Christian Association in Annual Convention at Syracuse, N. Y., June 2d to 4th, 1874.

Honored and Beloved Brethren:—Having attended the Aurora Convention in October, 1867, and the Pittsburgh in May, 1868, where this Association was organized, and having attended each succeeding Anniversary, and, in the capacity of your Corresponding Secretary, presented at each an Annual Report, and still holding nominally the same position, you will naturally expect my attendance with the customary report, or at least a good and sufficient apology for failure.

My apology is threefold: 1st, infirmity; 2d, poverty; 3d, other reports are expected which will supercede the necessity of one from me. The last reason is more than the other two. Although with me the almond tree has blossomed, the grasshopper is a burden, and there are fears in the way, yet I have not the full apology of David's friend Barzillai for declining a journey with the King to Jerusalem. I could greatly enjoy the reunions, the meeting face to face of the true yoke-fellows in this cause whom I have not seen, the deliberations, the prayers, and all the exercises of this most important Anniversary. I could have taken from the supply of the necessaries of life enough to cover the expenses of the journey, had there seemed a necessity, a commensurate good not likely otherwise to be secured. In prosecuting the work of the Association by the Executive Committee there has seemed to arise tacitly, perhaps naturally or accidentally, a division of labor which has occupied your Corresponding Secretary with writing for the press, attending the meetings of the Executive Committee, and answering such calls for lectures as he has been able to fill. The auxiliaries and lecturers have been requested through the Cynosure to report to the General Agent, and the contributors to the Treasurer, who is also Recording Secretary. None of these, therefore, have reported to the Corresponding Secretary. The important business matters of Incorporation, of Organization, and of Political Action, have been referred to special committees. So also has the matter of Joint Stock Company for the purpose of establishing a Publishing House. The correspondence in reference to speakers and the preparation of a programme and other arrangements for the Anniversary have been also assigned to special committees, your Secretary being upon none of them.

Inasmuch, therefore, as these are the matters of chief interest to the Association at this time, and full reports upon them may be expected from those who have them in hand, a report upon them from me seems quite superfluous, and indeed presumptuous, since my opportunities of information must necessarily be inferior to that of those who hold whatever documentary information exists upon the topics.

Yet I may perhaps be indulged a few general statements and a few parting words.

Since our last Convention, two prominent members of the Aurora Convention, Rev. Milton Smith, of the Wesleyan, and Rev. Lewis Bailey, of the Free Methodist church, have left this scene of conflict with the powers of the darkness of this world, and, we doubt not, have gained that world where there is no night, no desire for unequal and unjust advantages, and no guilt to demand the concealment of perpetual or oath-ensured secrecy.

Elder John G. Stearns, one of the earliest, ablest and most faithful witnesses against Freemasonry, has also finished his testimony. He died January 10th, aged seventy-eight years. His worth entitles him to a tribute of approbation from this body. A tribute he is sure to receive from the whole world when once the abominations of secretism shall be fully manifested to all men, and the angels of God shall announce that this Babylon has fallen. Meanwhile, he rests with Colver and Southwick, and a bright company of witnesses of like enduring faith and courage. Let it be our consolation as it is his joy, while he rests from his labors that his works do follow him. His testimony has been revised and put on record, after ample opportunity to vindicate it against every assault. His case is proved; and the proof can never be invalidated. Should the time of rendering up the verdict be delayed, should the millions continue to shout the praises of Masonry, still that testimony will remain to confront and transfix and bleed it until the giant error dies amid its worshipers. Thacher and Greene and Bernard and Finney are still with us; all past their four score years, yet their eyes are not dimmed nor their natural force abated, able to say "what I have written I have written." And what they have written an host of their coevals still remain to confirm. That so many of these old soldiers remain to renew the war after a more than forty years armistice, is a fact worthy of especial notice as showing the working of Him who is never sparing of time in accomplishing his designs, and whose instruments and agents are never wanting when the moment for their use arrives. Although when they appear upon the scene of action men are often ready to exclaim, "These, where have they been?" For such a crisis as this were these veterans reserved. And until their allotted parts are performed they are immortal. Should their numbers now rapidly decline by nature's mortal process, this will not extinguish their "light on Masonry," nor cement again the seals they have broken; nor relieve Freemasonry of the new born hosts of living witnesses that are springing up on every hand to confront it with the same charges. More rapidly than the veteran soldiers fall, are the youthful recruits springing to the front, with all the father's early fire and energy, and better opportunities of profiting by the experience of those who have gone before in this war.

More Freemasons and Odd-fellows have openly renounced and denounced their orders during the last year than during all the five preceding years of this reform movement. More newspapers have spoken out against secret societies. More lectures have been delivered. More anti-secret literature has been circulated. More startling providential events favoring the reform have occurred. Such as the Ithaca tragedy and the Ithaca mob, the mobbing of our Agents in Indiana and other places, the discovery of Masonically mutilated corpses, and the attempts to assassinate seceding Masons. More of these things have characterized the past than any preceding year since our organization. The labored defenses of the champions of secret orders have less and less power over their hearers as they become acquainted with the other side of the question. The grandiloquence that once inspired wonder and awe now often provokes the derisive laugh. And so do the pompous procession and mock robes of royalty and titles of superlative majesty. A movement to glorify Masonry by the grandest of grand displays in laying the corner-stone of a public building, now calls forth indignant remonstrances from men of all classes who are nauseated by the silly make-believe by men of reputed intelligence with respect to an art of which they know no more than street scavengers; remonstrances from men who deem their religion insulted by the intrusion and installation of deism where Christianity of right belongs; and from patriots who see in such institutions the evidence of the intent of these secret conspirators to control the government, slyly to usurp the offices, clutch the revenues, and leave our freedom but a name. In every funeral pageant of these orders men are now discerning the intrusion of an intensely insolent and mawkish paganism, like the abomination of desolation standing where it ought not. When a Mason denounces a seceder as a perjured wretch, multitudes are now sufficiently enlightened to reply, "Then his testimony against Masonry is true." When the Odd-fellow says, Our institution is not Christless, for in our lodges we pray in the name of Christ, the answer is, "Then our accusation is true. By that act you practically confess that the fundamental religious basis according to which the prayers prescribed in your ritual are framed, is anti-Christian, and those prayers are unfit for a Christian to use. Else why do you not use them? Why do you thus trample upon the fundamental principle of your order to Christianize it? If you have to depart from your ritual in order that your prayers may not be Christless is it not a confession that your ritual is Christless?" Thus their weapons rebound upon their own heads.

Even the mighty effort of the Masons and Odd-fellows to organize the farmers and mechanics on the basis of secrecy, as outer lines of defense, can have, in the end, but the same result. First, it shows that the brandishing of the sword of truth against the old secret orders has inspired them with no common terror. Then the sudden and tremendous expansion of secretism demonstrates the presence of a power more than human, even of the prince of the power of the air, who seems to have come down having great wrath, because he knoweth he has but a short time. But, by as much as we know that Satan is against us, by so much we know that Christ is with us. This adversary operates for the most part in disguise, as Milton in poetic vision saw him abject and loathsome essaying by his devilish art "to reach the organs of her fancy," and instil his moral venom through her dreams. But touched by Ithuriel's spear, instantly "as when a spark lights on a heap of nitrous powder" and inflames the air; so "started up IN HIS OWN SHAPE the fiend." In like manner will this sudden and vast expansion of secretism mightily quicken investigation and aid men eventually to discern the real character of the giant evil we oppose. This done, its power is gone and the day of its disgrace and overthrow is come. Whether this deliverance will be reached without revolution and blood God only knoweth. But Christ must reign until his enemies are made his footstool, and all their violence must rebound upon their own heads.

Not to be further tedious, I repeat the hope that the reports of the General Agent, the Treasurer, and Recording Secretary, together with those of the special committees heretofore alluded to, will put the Association in possession of all important facts in reference to the business of the present session. This hope goes far towards reconciling me to an absence for the first time from your annual convention. If realized, I trust it will also dispose the Association to accept with leniency my apology for absence.

Twice you have re-elected me against my earnest request. I must now repeat that request, and must be permitted to say that this time it must be peremptory. The weight of seventy-two years is upon me. I ask no post of honor, much less a sinecure. My heart is toward the brethren of this Association. I can never sufficiently thank them for their kindness to me personally, while I have endeavored to serve them. I can never sufficiently love and honor them for their fidelity to justice, liberty and true religion, which are so fearfully imperiled by the invasion of our land by so many legions of secret societies. While I live I hope that my prayers and counsels and whatever aid God's providence may permit me to render shall not be wanting to your cause. But the wounded and enfeebled soldier must fall out of the ranks, that he impede not the advance of those who, if not more valiant, yet are more strong.

On, then, brethren, in this holy war! Only see that it be "the fight of faith" with weapons that are not carnal but mighty through God. "I die but God shall be with you." God shall clear the right. Be strong then and patient unto that coming of the Lord whose brightness shall dispel all this threatening darkness and destroy its author. Farewell!

And the Lord of life and light be with you to give you victory in his own best time and way.

I. A. Hart, Secretary.

Men of Thought and Men of Action, Clear the Way.

Sung by Mr. Clark in the Syracuse Convention, at the close of Mr. Greene's Address upon the Grange.

Men of thought be up and stirring,
Night and day, night and day;
Sow the seed, withdraw the curtain,
Clear the way, clear the way;
Men of action aid and cheer them,
As ye may, as ye may.
There's a light about to beam,
There's a fount about to stream,
There's a warmth about to glow,
There's a flower about to blow,
There's a midnight blackness changing
Into day, into day;
Men of thonght and men of action,
Clear the way, clear the way.

Once this welcome light has broken,
Who shall say, who shall say,
What the unimagined glories
Of the day, of the day,
What the evils that shall perish
In its ray, in its ray.
Aid the dawning tongue and pen,
Aid it, hopes of honest men,
Aid it, paper, aid it type,
Aid it for the hour is ripe,
And our earnest must not slacken
Into play, into play;
Men of thought and men of action,
Clear the way, clear the way.

Lo! a cloud's about to vanish
From the day, from the day,
And brazen wrongs about to crumble
Into clay, into clay.
Lo! the right's about to conquer,
Clear the way, clear the way.
With that right shall many more
Enter smiling at the door;
With that giant wrong shall fall
Many others great and small,
Which for ages long have held men
For their prey, for their prey;
Men of thought and men of action,
Clear the way, clear the way.

The Grange in its Relation to American Principles.

ADDRESS BY CHARLES W. GREENE.

Mr. President:—In discussing the subject assigned me, which is essentially a political one, I do not desire to arouse passion nor to appeal to prejudice. Impressed as I am with the great responsibility now resting upon every good citizen of our Republic, in the presence of an impending danger which seriously threatens the national life, I ask your careful and prayerful consideration of the thoughts which in the midst of other pressing duties I have hastily thrown together. They can at best be only suggestive. The subject is so vast, and the influences to be considered so ramify through every relation of society that the time which is permitted me here will be entirely too limited to allow its careful elaboration. While I am in perfect sympathy with the noble purposes which have banded you together in a Christian brotherhood, it is not now necessary for me, even though I was prepared to do so, to devote any share of my time to other topics than the one specially assigned:

THE GRANGE IN ITS RELATION TO AMERICAN PRINCIPLES.

The question arises, naturally, what is the grange; by whom conceived; what its purposes; who its sponsors? Popular uprisings indicate the development of progressive ideas or of latent principles of governmental policy. Does the grange represent either?

There has never been any official announcement of its originators. Whoever they really are, they show a degree of modesty not characteristic of the American people in failing to claim the distinguished honors which await them. There is a significant mystery surrounding the affair, very significant in view of some recent developments.

Its birth place was Washington, D. C. The acoucheur was, so far as known, Mr. Wm. Saunders, Superintendent of the Public Gardens, which suggest that its origin may be traced to some foreign land. Perchance it is the development of one of those noxious germs which have been so freely distributed with Pennsylvania garden seeds "grown in France, expressly for the Department of Agriculture." It is a plant of wonderfully vigorous growth, even excelling the marvelous Yankee pumpkin vine, which, springing from the prolific soil of Cape Cod, crossed the State of Rhode Island in a single night, and the Land of Steady Habits next day, jumped the Hudson at a single bound and wended its way still on in the track of empire, bearing fruit as it went as convenient for habitation as a Pullman Palace Car. Certain it is that, although nurtured at the National Capitol, its fruits were garnered in the far off Northwestern States of Minnesota and Iowa. Just here let me remark as quite singular, that the promoters of the grange, as well as of its imitator, the Sovereigns of Industry, should get as far from home as possible for the first presentation of their beneficent schemes for the amelioration of all human woe.

It is difficult, when such inviolable secrecy is observed, to speak with exact certainty of the details involved in the organization. I have given much thought and time to the study of the grange organization, and have had opportunity to converse with quite a number of its chief officers and to draw from them materially different constructions of certain provisions of their magna charta. If, in the history I give, there are errors of statement, they are certainly unintentional, and the secrecy which is so earnestly persisted in is chargeable with any misconstruction or misapprehension as to the meaning of the public utterances.

From the best information obtainable the present Secretary, Mr. O. H. Kelly, a department clerk at Washington, was sent to the Carolinas some time about 1866 or '67, on business connected with the Freedman's Bureau. He became acquainted with a small colony of Scotchmen who had transplanted an old country system of association, of a purely social character, and who, to keep themselves free from unpleasant intrusion, had adopted a system of passwords and signals. This was called a grange and this was the seed which found its full development under the nurturing care of Messrs. Kelly, Saunders, Grosh, Trimble, Thompson, McDowell, Ireland, Curtiss and Bryan.

These were the figure heads and principal operators, but that they had silent partners and advisers who were to receive compensation in political preference there is getting to be quite abundant evidence. Those above named were apparently the investors in the undertaking and their chief interest was the profits to arise.

I have been informed from various sources, and in all of them the information has proceeded directly from grange headquarters, that ex-President Andrew Johnson was consulted in the incipiency of this organization, and that he expressed the opinion that any system which would band the farmers together in a common brotherhood would certainly wield the political power of the country. While this story may be received with some grains of allowance and may perhaps be told to gratify the vanity of some of the gentlemen above named, who feel a pardonable pride in having conversed, in private, with the "great commoner," it is not lacking corroboration in the recent movements of the irrepressible "people's" politician. He has recently announced himself as a granger candidate for United States Senator from Tennessee, and as he places implicit confidence in the combined power of Freemasonry and grangerism, he proposes in his Memphis speech to substitute for the legislative selection of Senators, an election by the popular vote.

A few years since I listened to a speech delivered by the then lately retired ex-President among his friends at Jackson, Tenn., in which, for a full half hour, he compared his trials and tribulations to those of the great exemplar, Christ. He traced the similarity of circumstances of humble birth, and gradual elevation to place and power, and of the persecutions which the victorious North were heaping upon his disciples of the South, finally culminating in his political crucifixion. Is it possible that he expects now to complete the simile by a resurrection, and finally by a translation from the floor of the Senate into the millenial higher life, foreshadowed in that remarkable declaration of principles recently adopted by the apostles of the National Grange?

The constitution of this order, though drawn in careful detail, has proven very defective, and a number of amendments were submitted at the St. Louis meeting. It is chiefly notable for its ingenious provisions looking to the perpetuation of power in the persons of its originators. Installing themselves in the national offices, as grand deputies; they go forth to plant the seed of the order and make a living. Thirteen persons constitute a subordinate grange and fill the thirteen offices. These, called charter members, are inducted to the inner temple without superfluous ceremony, since the deputy performs his share of the work on business principles and appreciates the value of time. The dues are paid immediately—the business of the grange being upon an exclusively cash basis, in accordance with the healthy principle which they seek to inculcate. The officers are elected to serve one year. As the best and most substantial men are cautious and slow to adopt new-fangled ideas, it is by mere accident that the list of officers can include any of that class. The first business in order is the appropriation of fifteen dollars to the National Grange, to pay for a dispensation, tin box and lock, a dozen rituals, some specimen song books, and regalia, and the never-forgotten price list of articles furnished at the office of the National Grange. These are represented to cost about $9.00 of the $15.00. They should cost not exceeding $4.00. Next in order is an appropriation for deputy's fee, and the balance, if any, and subsequent dues are expected to go to the national furnishing store for seals, ballot boxes, regalias, song books and jewels—the latter furnished, "without the intervention of middlemen," by Joseph Seymour & Sons, of Syracuse, N. Y. Each of these members are solemnly pledged to observe the constitution and rules of the order, and to recognize the authority of their "Worthy Masters" in the several degrees.

Fifteen of these subordinate bodies must be organized before the State Grange can be instituted. Here again are thirteen officers elected for two years from among the masters of the subordinate grange, who alone are entitled to seats in this higher body. We have seen from what material these officers have been selected, and we find a corresponding quality in the State offices.

The State Masters again, who appear to have supreme power over their respective constituencies, inasmuch as their rulings are at wide variance one with another, constitute the National Grange, whose officers are installed for a term of three years. You will readily perceive that a National Grange cannot be properly organized until at least thirteen States have perfected the State organization, which was not the the case until during the year 1873. Hence the officers of the National Grange had usurped all the powers of a constitution by themselves devised, and we find the Grand Master an officer who has never served as a subordinate or State Grange Master. They have had full control in the appointment of deputies evidently selected to perpetuate their rule. They have controlled the disposition of the entire receipts at headquarters, with nobody to hold them responsible, and even now re utterly indifferent to the demands of their victims for a statement of receipts and expenditures for the past year.

Notwithstanding the ingenuity displayed in the presentation of specific inducements, such as the promise of savings in the exchange of farm products for needed supplies, and the shrewd appeals to sectional and class prejudices, the business languished until the popular mind became indignantly excited by the exposition in 1872 and 1873, of astounding municipal and national frauds, perpetrated through the agency of corrupt legislators. Promptly availing themselves of the favorable opportunity, and following in the track of the pioneers who had, by boldness and enterprise, blazed the way for them, they have encouraged and stimulated the animosities of those whose information is most limited, until they have produced a superheated enthusiasm which is sweeping the country as a simoon, threatening indiscriminate destruction to good and evil alike. They claim that their primary purposes are social and educational advancement, and yet they cut themselves aloof from association with other classes than their own, and from the poor as well as the more independent among themselves. They are inculcating clannishness among people whose boast is social equality. Their system of education is as original as their social system; that is, it was original many centuries ago when narrow-minded bigotry tolerated no departure from the established creed of the Jewish church—ante-dating the Christian era. They, the Masters, presume to educate the farmer in his political duties and as to his commercial relations, and yet carefully preclude a presentation of both sides of the question under discussion. They spend hours and days in learning and reciting "the beautiful unwritten work" of the order, a senseless mummery and waste of time. They utterly ignore the progressive civilization represented by the remarkable growth in power and influence of the public press. If their members suggest any good ideas they are monopolized for their exclusive benefit by the few favored ones who have paid their five dollars towards the support of their "Worthy Masters" and itinerant deputies. The excessive waste of time to which reference has been made debars the discussion of topics which should have careful consideration, and which discussion more than all else is the special and only real inducement for association. Thus the educational advantage of the meetings is sacrificed, or if not, is perverted to the inculcation of one-sided, prejudiced opinions. The constant alarm manifested by managers of the order lest some educator with views at variance with their own, should steal inside their gates, is suggestive that there is a hidden motive prompting their rigid exclusiveness.

Let us now for a moment consider the nature of the obligation which pledges each member to inviolable secrecy. Perhaps my own experience will illustrate this sufficiently. As an early advocate of farmers' co-operative associations, my attention was directed to this particular organization. Soon after it began to make headway in Iowa, some editorial comment and suggestive questions called forth, very promptly, communications from the Grand Deputy, Col. Curtiss, setting forth in glowing language the high purposes which the grange was organized to promote. Names of those whom I held in high esteem were given as endorsers to its integrity. I regret that some of these are now monopolizing grange commission agents, profiting from their identification with the order. After a while the Master of the Mississippi State Grange came to Tennessee, as a special deputy from the National Grange, to organize a sufficient number of subordinate granges to complete a State organization. He came to Jackson, where I then resided, and upon invitation quite a number of gentlemen met with him. He presented the plan of the organization and made a very favorable impression upon those present. Questions were asked as to how far the pledge of secrecy debarred the expression of individual opinion, and were answered by a full disclaimer of any intent to debar the freest discussion. The order was wholly good, and the most thorough investigation was courted. It was further stated that a member was at liberty to withdraw as it might suit his pleasure. Prompted by a desire to assist in any good work, and feeling no captious antipathy towards any organization which was engaged in the cause I had espoused, I consented to joining the grange. As there was not a sufficient number of members present to go into an election of officers, and receive the private instructions, only the pledge was administered to those present and a future day set for the completion of the ceremony.

It was just before the convention or congress at Indianapolis, and I anticipated much pleasure in meeting and forming the acquaintance of the National Grange dignitaries. They were there, and I did meet them, but happily under circumstances which afforded me an opportunity to discover the private character of several of them. I discovered that they were dignitaries without dignity, that they had met there as spies upon our action, and as plotters for our discomfiture. As they expressed it, they had met on their own business. I discovered too that their power was so absolute that when they said to a subordinate, "Take no part in this meeting," he forthwith obeyed. I discovered that the chaplain not only prayed, but indulged in vulgarity in common with his business associates. In fact I discovered that they were men who would hardly be tolerated in refined society.

My ardor was cooled effectually, and it occurred to me that this grand order which was presented with such a flourish of trumpets, its merits discoursed of in such honeyed phrase, would, like some other of the great schemes of the present day, be a proper subject for investigation. It is needless to say that further "instruction" into grange mysteries was not sought in the regular way. For a time I hesitated about making a direct attack upon this order, into which, by the means I have suggested, many thousands of honest men and women had been inveigled under the impression that they were promoting the public interest. Careful and pleasant criticism of the most obnoxious features of the order were spoken and published, in hopes that there would be sufficient integrity among new members of the National Grange to discard these specially objectionable features. These criticisms were published in the St. Louis papers just previous to the meeting of the National Grange, but instead of receiving candid consideration, prominent members of the order pounced upon me with envenomed bitterness and unbecoming personality, sought to cripple my opposition by destroying my business and my personal character. Fortunately the chief spokesman was a prolific writer and promptly noticed everything said of the order. By keeping him well stirred up, he has enlightened the people somewhat as to the animus which prompts the action of the National Grange. One of the first expressions at its annual meeting was decidedly as against the abolition of secrecy. Such a proposition could never be entertained. Annoyed beyond measure by the discussion of their weaknesses, Master Allen at last charged me with violating my solemn obligation and admitted that my action in so doing had been the subject of discussion by other members of the National Grange and closed his article with the touching appeal: "Take the advice of a friend now, and let us alone. I have no desire to harm you, and know that you cannot harm us.' Could he have known how anxiously I had awaited the official announcement of that construction upon the grange obligation he would probably have hesitated before putting it in print. Admitting it to be so held, there are a million or more of American citizens who have joined an organization, and in so doing have pledged themselves to refrain from all criticism of their "worthy masters," (as all are entitled to be designated in the State and National Granges). Can we comprehend the full force of such a statement? These masters are given a supreme power to discipline their members, to cast them out in disgrace, as they did the commission merchants of the Boston grange and the deputy who organized it. These oligarchs, self-appointed and self commissioned, demand and receive the sweat-bedewed earnings of the toiling farmers, refusing to account for it. They trundle themselves and their families around the country and pay for it from these funds. They vote themselves fat salaries in addition to traveling expenses, and probably participate in quiet commissions from the furnishing business. The poor farmer is compensated by the privilege of doing as he is bidden. If he rebels they clap on the obligation muzzle. This, then, is the grange. Let us examine now its relation to American principles. We proudly boast that ours is a land of freedom; that we are citizens of the grandest republic ever established. We laud the founders and fathers of our government as the purest of patriots, and claim to ourselves the inheritance of free speech and the right of self-government, which they bequeathed to their children. We say it is a government of the people and by the people, and it is assumed that the general intelligence of our citizens is an assurance of good government in perpetuity. We indignantly resent any attempted curtailment of our privileges by legislators or executive officers, or any proposed usurpation of our prerogatives.

This is our theory. Unfortunately our practice is not in full harmony with it. We have been almost criminally careless in the past in the exercise of our citizenship, and we find that instead of having public servants to represent us, we have established a cordon of office-holders, whose will is imperious, who consult their own interests, act their own pleasure and assuringly ask the people to pay them for it; and not only this, but they have connived with the money changers and with soulless corporations to give them unheard-of subsides and special privileges, dividing with them the spoils. This lamentable condition of affairs is not of recent development. It has been steadily encroaching upon the rights of the people until vast accumulations of ill-gotten wealth has rendered the money power insolent almost beyond endurance.

The people, who are reading more than they used to, and are, consequently, thinking, are kept well advised now of current events. They have become alarmed, as well they may be, at the unmasking of rottenness which seems to abound wherever public funds are to be disbursed. This alarm is general throughout the country, and all the people are impressed with the necessity for prompt reform. The evil has resulted from the secret methods of conducting our political campaigns, and in due sequence the legislative bodies resulting from those campaigns. We have elected members of Congress and State legislatures, but it is only in exceptional cases that they are free to act for their constituents. Almost invariably they have bargained for the office with the political wire-pullers, who pull when and where it pays best. Not only is the preliminary bargain made in the caucus or committee room, but it is enforced in the lobby to the very letter of the contract. Now, the grange proposes to remedy this evil. It says legislators make their bargains in secret, and monopolists preserve secrecy in their business, and so to circumvent them the farmers must retaliate and act in secret too. What have we as a result. We see the secret congress and legislatures standing aghast waiting to discover how the secret grange, which can cast a half million of votes, proposes to cast them. We see the secret grange by its masters going into the wire-pulling business, bargaining with the committees, offering to sell their votes to the Democratic party or the Republican party, or threatening a new party if neither will pay liberally enough. We see the secret grange and the secret monopolist both with their backs up ready for war, each unfurling the black flag and crying no quarter. We see the secret banking associations scared almost out of their wits, hoarding their money in the vaults and refusing to pass it into circulation lest they may never see it again. We see the manufacturing establishments closed altogether, or running on half time. We see commerce stagnated because of the uncertainty attending every venture. We hear the farmer grumbling because he cannot find consumers for his products. Indeed we see every legitimate, honest industry paralyzed by the lack of confidence between man and man,—all the direct result of this secret action. Europe and the older States of our republic have accumulated surplus capital, and it is constantly seeking investment. The West has been the favorite field for their investments. The holders of it have been content with a moderate rate of interest, and private and public enterprises have given employment to immense sums. Millions of acres have been brought under profitable cultivation; thousands of miles of railway give access to it and furnish transportation for its products; great cities and thriving towns are dotted all over the immense territory known as the Northwest; schools and churches have been established, and the people who dwell there are perhaps as prosperous and happy as any in the work. But they had been too prosperous and money had been too easily obtained. They had incurred more of debt than they could carry comfortably, and two or three years ago the reaction commenced. While they were so prosperous they were indifferent to the corruption which was festering in public places, and when they became embarrassed they failed to trace their troubles to the true source. They lost their senses in a mea-

ure. In attempting to combat corruption and real monopoly they indiscriminately attacked both friend and foe. They sowed the wind and are reaping the whirlwind. Millions of capital have been withdrawn and credits have been contracted and all because the capitalist is afraid to trust his money where the "masters" of a million people are insiduously inculcating the principles of the commune. Who are these masters? Are they men of wealth? None of them. Are they men of standing in their respective communities? None of them were ever heard of until they were installed as "masters." It is not strange that capital is timid. I have somewhat digressed from the line of thought suggested by my subject, but I could not forbear to show the evil effects upon our material progress, which result from the secret action of the grange. I have spoken of the theory of our government, which, briefly formulated, recognizes the citizen voters as the rulers and chief actors. Their votes make all of the elective officers directly, and indirectly all appointees. The duties of township, county, State and national officers are distinctly defined, and there is no conflict of authority. Those duties are performed in the service of the people. They act as instructed by their constituencies, and they are supposed to keep well informed of their desires. True, we haven't experienced much of such a system, not so much as we expect to hereafter. Do we find anything here which has a counterpart in the grange? We ought to, as it proposes to be the great reforming agency of the government. On the other hand, have we not found it to originate in an unknown and secret cabal, which, usurping all authority at the outset, has whipped in its adherents, tying their tongues so that they cannot raise their voices in complaint?

The Grand Master of this body waves his hand towards Washington and his puppets in Congress dance at his bidding. He says he cannot understand the transportation question, and forthwith hands it over to Congress with instructions to regulate commerce between the States. The House of Representatives immediately passes a law providing that all the railroads of the country shall be consolidated under the contro of nine men. This is a mere trifle of power to delegate to such a body! The Senate transportation committee spends a year or more gathering information in regard to this great question, and, according to Master Maxwell, of the National Grange, bowed itself humbly upon its knees before this august body and prayed them to designate what sort of a report they desired them to make. They answered, three great water routes across the continent, and lo, it was so recommended. The masters of the grange being heavily in debt, and conceiving the idea that the Government printing press can turn out money for general distribution, which will pay their debts, directs Congress to expand the currency. Prominent Senators of the dominant party, thinking to conciliate or capture this great voting power, lend their influence to the scheme and carry it triumphantly through both branches of Congress. Their action no more represented the desire of their constituencies than it did in the passage of the salary grab law. Had it not been for the unsuspected integrity of the President, or because he saw a promising opportunity to kill off his most formidable rivals for the next nomination, our country would have been disgraced before the world as a virtual repudiator.

The discussion of this question aroused sectional animosities almost as bitter as those preceding the rebellion, and has planted seeds of dissension which will require only a modicum of nourishment to develop into a fructifying hostility. We wasted oceans of precious blood and millions of treasure in relieving the country of a system which every thinking slave-holder admitted to himself was an unmitigated evil, and one which ought to be eradicated, simply because demagogues kept the masses in a foment and would not permit them to give the subject dispassionate consideration.

The Grange Masters, like their predecessors the secession leaders of the South, are uniting elements over which they may not long retain control, and are forming such a combination that spontaneous combustion may at any moment ensue. And here a word of what the farmers' movement, so-called, really means. I asserted editorially more than a year ago, that opposition to railway or other monopoly, was only a tangible presence which was being made available to arouse the people; that the relations towards middlemen must be reformed, if at all, through the adoption of truer business principles and by mutual concession; that such subjects as the tariff, taxation and finance could only be legitimately discussed by individuals having special fitness. I insisted that the movement was the assertion of the intelligent individuality of the citizen, gradually evolved through the general diffusion of common school education, coupled with the vivifying influences of the steam moter and electric telegraph, or, as Mr. Schurz has recently expressed it very pointedly and aptly, the question is simply, "Shall the people govern themselves?" It is an effort to free themselves from the chains of party thraldom. We have seen a perfect medley of local and state bolts from established parties, meeting with varied success, and we have seen, too, one abortive national movement, defeated by an affiliation with a defunct party, which one of its old organs designates as a "putrid reminiscence." The volcano appears now to be at rest, but within it is still bubbling and seething, gathering force for a still more powerful eruption. The grange with its secretly marshalled forces, will soon attempt to assert its power and it, too, will ignominiously fail. Of its failure there can be no doubt. The enthusiasm is waning, its members are impatient o restraint, and it must necessarily do something in the coming canvass. In itself it is not strong enough to win success, and it must necessarily seek a combination with other forces. If it joins with the Republican party it cannot change the present status of the government. If it unites with the Democrats it will certainly be disintegrated.

In its failure lies the danger. So long as the slave power could rule they were content, but when defeated they attempted to ruin. So with an unscrupulous leadership which has tasted the sweets of unlimited power, the incongruous elements of the grange may be incited to any violence which may promise to yield to the masters power and profit.

Have I overstated the danger? Are my conclusions not legitimately drawn from the given premises? Does not your own judgment accept them as just? Is there the faintest resemblance between the independence of thought and action, the freedom of speech and of the press, the supremacy of the people as self-rulers, the representative character of chosen officers, the thorough discussion of public questions by the masses, which enables judicious action and through which the public officer is advised of the popular will, all of which are primary principles of a true democratic republicanism, and the imperious, dictatorial, one-man power of the grange which indirectly assumes to control Congress and the State legislatures, to usurp all local authority, to monopolize commerce and manage the transportation companies, to gag its members, making them mere time-servers, and virtually serfs, and seeking, too, to intimidate the Press and the forum?

I appeal to you, here before me, and the good citizens of our noble Republic everywhere, to rise in your might against the inciduous encroachments of the arch enemy SECRECY, the monarch of darkness. Christian duty, love of country, every consideration of right, and truth, and justice demands this of you. And may we not hope that the better day has already dawned upon our nation, when wise counsels, mutual concessions and Christian goodfellowship may substitute the stern arbitrament of war, which in the ages past has appeared to be the only agency available in combatting error and upholding the truth.

Recollections of the Morgan Trials as Related by Hon. V. Birdseye, State's Attorney.

ADDRESS BY MRS. C. B. MILLER.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:

Permit me to recognize the courtesy of this Convention, in according me a seat therein, and in inviting me to address it, as in some sort, an expression of its respect for and interest in my honored father, Victory Birdseye, who many years ago helped to fight Freemasonry.

I have been impelled to put in writing the following record; partly as a matter of interest to this assembly, and partly from a more private motive, namely, that my two boys, who never saw their grandfather, may, when they are old enough to understand it, find on record the lesson of his experience on this subject. I do not propose to see them enter a lodge if any influence of mine can prevent it; but if I cannot prevent it, they shall not need, when at the entrance they are asked "Who comes there?" to reply, "A poor blind candidate, seeking light;" for I intend to throw upon Freemasonry all the light I possess or can obtain, that they may plainly behold it, beforehand, in all its hideous deformity.

The murder of Morgan took place before my birth, and when I became old enough to understand the conversation of older people, the excitement, political and social, which the event created had in a measure subsided. I was about sixteen years old when the following incident aroused my attention and taught me a lesson that will never fade from my memory should the days of the years of my life equal in number those of Methuselah. I had been visiting for a fortnight with a schoolmate in a neighboring county, and on my return I was detailing to the family my adventures, and the occurrences of my visit. Among other things I told of a Tent of Rechabites in the town I had visited, and of the good they did in reforming inebriates.

"What are the Rechabites?" asked my father, with interest. I replied that they were a secret order whose object was the reformation of drunkards and their restoration to society. That they took their name and style from a text in Judges where the sons of Rechab are spoken of as dwelling in tents and drinking no wine. "But," said he, "why are they a secret order?" "I suppose because they can work to better advantage secretly," I said. "But if their object is a good one, why is it not better to work openly, and have, as they might, the aid and countenance of all good people?" "I suppose," I replied, "that there is danger of their being imposed upon by those who act from unworthy motives, or who would use the influence of the order to gain private ends. Their secrets, I am told, are only for the identification of each other and for the maintainence of discipline." Said my father, "If their aims and objects are good, they cannot admit too many to the benefits of their order, and it is only a form of selfishness to be exclusive. And do you think the danger of their being imposed upon greater than that other danger—that they may themselves be tempted to use the machinery of the order to gain private ends? Depend upon it, my daughter, there is a screw loose somewhere! Organizations for purposes undeniably good don't burrow under ground. They are willing to stand upright upon their merits before an intelligent community."

I suppose my father thought that when a child of his had begun to defend secret societies, it was high time she was taken in hand, for he led me directly to his office, showed me his commission from George Throop, appointing him Special Counsel in the Morgan case, and then quietly, but with a restrained vehemence that impressed me deeply with a sense of his earnestness, he entered into the details of the case. He read to me the Masonic oaths published by William Morgan, and briefly pointed out the fact that when the demands of justice and the public welfare conflicted with the interests of a brother Mason, a member of the order must prefer the latter, even if he perjured himself by so doing. He painted in vivid colors—the puerility, the indecency, the blasphemous nature of Masonry. He detailed the abduction and murder of Morgan, giving minute particulars of his enforced journey from Canandaigua to the Niagara River, his confinement there in the old Arsenal, and the final consummation of the outrage in his death, by being thrown overboard from a boat in the middle of the river, where his body, heavily weighted, sunk, as his murderers supposed, to rise no more. He told me how that body, after lying beneath the water for a year, when the rope had decayed became loosened from the weight, floated to the surface, was cast on shore, and afterwards identified by certain peculiarities of the skeleton and teeth, as the body of Morgan. He recited this harrowing tale with a vividness and force that caused my young blood to curdle with horror, and produced upon my mind an impression never to be effaced.

He then entered into the details of the many and vain attempts to bring to justice the perpetrators of the deed; how one agent after another, appointed by the State on the part of the people, was wearied out with the treachery and perfidy of Masonic judges, Masonic juries and Masonic witnesses. In every direction Masonry presented itself to defeat the ends of justice, covertly, it is true; effectually, nevertheless. He told me of that "Sly old fox," Enos T. Throop, who with one hand patted on the back the agents of the people, while he kept the other busy pulling wires behind the curtains of the lodge to counteract their efforts.

He showed me how this case illustrated the tendency of secret orders to make use of their machinery for private ends; to gain for their members unfair advantages over their fellow-citizens; to screen the criminal from the penalty of the law; to sacrifice the public good to the private interests of individuals; in short, that their tendency is diametrically opposed to the perpetuity of republican institutions and the liberty of the people. We hold up in its true light the sham benevolence that receives no one into the order who cannot pay his quota, and then disburses not to the needy alone, but likewise to the wealthy; thus proving itself a mutual insurance, not a benevolent society, —that benevolence that uses the funds of the order, given ostensibly for doing good, for the purchase of gew-gaws, to gratify a paltry love of finery and parade that is unworthy of reasonable beings. In less time than it takes me to tell it he swept away that refuge of lies by which Freemasonry plays the role at a benevolent society!

He told me of the storm of popular wrath, that, after the murder of Morgan, nearly swept the order from existence in this country; but he said that there was enough left of it for a nest-egg, and that when the generation that had witnessed this affair had passed away, he feared that the impression would be lost; that a fresh brood of vipers would be hatched out to threaten the perpetuity of our institutions. And through his honored head, white with the snows of three score and ten winters, white as the whitest of these crowns of glory that I see before me, has not yet lain twenty-one years beneath the clods of the hillside, I cannot but believe that I see his prediction in process of fulfillment. And why is it that in this professedly Christian land, and after such a general uprising of the people against the baleful thing, why is it that it dare again to raise its once crushed head? What power is healing its wounds, renewing its vigor and covering it with the garment of respectability? I grieve to say that this service is being done in a degree, at least, by Christian ministers and Christian people. Can Christian ministers befoul themselves with these unclean and blasphemous ceremonies and at the same time keep themselves unspotted from the world? Can Christians serve God with all their heart and at the same time keep the Masonic oath? Will Christian pastors be beguiled by smooth words into covering these impurities with the mantle of religion. Freemasonry would gladly hide her bruised and battered form under the priestly robe. Ministers who can be persuaded to lend it their countenance will generally find some worldly church member ready to pay their initiation fee. Are you ready to accept the bribe and handle the accursed thing?

I am aware that I have but feebly portrayed the intensity of my father's convictions on this subject. I do not think that the Anglo-Saxon tongue is capable of embodying the sentiments of disgust and loathing, that possessed his soul when Freemasonry was mentioned. But the lesson that he taught me on the above, and other occasions, I look upon as a sacred legacy, to be handed down to my children and my children's children,—the lesson of perpetual hostility to secret orders, and to Freemasonry in particular.

During a somewhat protracted residence at the South, I was struck with the remarkable vigor of this order there. I was in a town of about 1800 inhabitants, and I learned that there was scarcely a white man of full age in the town that was not a Mason; and I learned from different sources that this state of things was nearly universal throughout the South. And when the secession heresy began to spread before the war, and State after State either lapsed, or was hounded, into rebellion, I could not but recall one of my father's sayings, that Freemasonry eats out the heart of a man's patriotism till it is a mere shell that yields to the first approaches of treason.

REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE SYRACUSE CONVENTION, Concluded.

The Finance Committee reported as follows:

Your committee would report, that they have had under consideration various plans contemplating a financial support which shall be amply sufficient to carry forward the great and important work of this National Christian Association. It requires no argument to prove that the personal endeavors of the active officers and agents of the Association, however prompted by philanthropic motives, must be seconded and fully sustained not only by the good wishes but by the contributions of the friends of the cause. In our endeavors to devise a plan which should afford ample pecuniary support we have thought to so distribute the work that the burden should be as light and as nearly uniform to all as possible, and at the same time to secure the active co-operation of each man, woman and child of the many thousands in our broad country who are in active sympathy with us in broadening the field of labor and increasing the working force.

We therefore recommend that the National Christian Association shall be composed of such members as shall have paid into its treasury the sum of twenty-five cents each, as an annual fee.

We recommend that a system of membership tickets shall be prepared under the supervision of the Executive Committee which shall at once be evidence of membership and a receipt for the membership fee, the same to be furnished by the secretary to the State agents and other officers of the Association and to such ministers and active friends of this great cause will interest themselves in extending the membership. All tickets so issued are chargable to the parties receiving them from the secretary and should be accounted for by them.

It is recommended, too, that an enrollment shall be made by each person receiving the subscriptions upon blanks furnished by the secretary, setting forth the name, age and post-office address of each individual member, these rolls to be returned and to become matter of regular and classified record in the office of the secretary.

Believing that this plan will not only afford an ample financial support to the Association, and that every delegate here present, and our good friends who are not able to be with us, will interest themselves to promptly secure the enrollment of the one hundred thousand members whose names should be on record before the next annual meeting, it is very respectfully submitted to your consideration.

At the request of the chairman of the committee Mr. C. W. Greene, of Indiana, spoke in support of the report. He said this reform should be conducted on business principles if we would secure success. The reform would not make headway unless funds were provided. He believed this to be surest and speediest way of securing them, and if this matter was pushed there might be 100,000 annual memberships taken out. Multitudes throughout the country would join and help on the reform by influence and contributions.

Mr. Levington saw in this measure something that looked like imitation of the secret orders. The fee and the pledge, he said, are the soul of the secret societies, and now they are embodied in this plan; and it was besides changing from the voluntary system.

Others spoke in favor of the plan as presenting nothing really different from the voluntary plan; every one could support the cause in this way or any other he might prefer. And if the fee and pledge were the soul of secret orders, what account is made of their secrecy which is the main issue with them? The report was finally adopted without dissent.

The resolutions (published in last week's paper) were then read and acted upon separately. Several of them called out much discussion, the fourth and sixth especially.

Upon the fourth resolution, respecting temperance organizations, Elder Barlow remarked upon his connection with the Good Templars. He found it amounted to nothing but a small "sparking" society and learned with surprise that its ritual was modeled after the Masonic; and he left it as soon as possible.

Rev. John Levington said that it is under these disguises of temperance and Christianity, that Masonry is creeping into power and recognition. He quoted from the Masonic ritual that "the strength of our order lies in its concealment."

Rev. Mr. Dempsey, of Black River, N. Y., described Masonry as a tortoise keeping within its shell, while Good Templars and Odd-fellows are the feelers doing its work outside. He favored open temperance meetings as the only way of succeeding against the rum power, and as cutting off the supplies of the lodge.

George W. Clark, of Dansville, N. Y., said that the temperance cause never prospered so greatly as when it was advocated openly. The dark-chamber system was disastrous to that cause.

Rev. C. F. Wiggins, of Indiana, called attention to the fact that under the impulse given by the Sons of Temperance, Masonry increased a hundred fold in a single year.

Rev. N. Wardner, of North East, N. Y., said the minor secret orders are a shrewdly devised snare of the devil to catch such men as would be leaders in the reform, but for their former connection with Good Templars, Sons of Temperance and like secret societies. All good causes suffer severely by the ruinous influence of secrecy.

Mr. Richard Greene, of Indiana, congratulated his co-workers that the press has become enlisted in their cause. He favored thorough work and believed that not only Masonry, but Odd-fellowship, the temperance secret orders and the granges should be exposed and uprooted.

Rev. James Mathews, of Brooklyn, called attention to the wiles of Masonic preachers who artfully induce men to join the order, while professing service to Christ alone. They follow our workers and say to converts, "Now you must aid the temperance cause," and get them to join the Good Templars and then soon the Masons, and thus keep them from joining Free Methodist or Wesleyan churches. They have even pushed the matter so far as to bring the question before some conferences whether members of restricting churches may not join the Good Templars. We must go the whole thing against the secret organizations. An old English saying is, "You may as well eat the devil as to drink his broth." Temperance is not the handmaid but a part of Christianity, and secretism is its death. Masonry has stolen temperance as a whitewash to cover up its own dark deeds.

The resolution was unanimously adopted. Upon the sixth resolution an animated discussion arose, especially upon the last clause which originally read thus:

"And that we are compelled by our convictions to withhold from all such that confidence and support due alone to the good and true."

Mr. C. W. Greene thought the resolution a restatement of what was already contained in the paper and therefore unnecessary. It was also passing judgment upon all connected with secret orders of any kind, classing them as evil and untrue men, which was more than we had any right to say. Such severe judgment would repel many who might otherwise leave the lodge.

Mr. Levington sustained the resolution. He said this question is between the good and the bad. We must give confidence and support to one or the other.

Rev. A. Hard, of Painted Post, N. Y., was opposed to the use of such severe terms. The resolution seems to be intolerant and uncharitable. We have come to renouncing and denouncing all not agreeing with us. He believed all who used severity were sincere, and was willing to divide the last dollar with those who suffer for righteousness' sake. He protested against such an extreme position as misrepresenting many who were strongly opposed to secret societies.

Elder Barlow, chairman of the committee, explained the resolution. He believed the idea presented to be right, that any man who intelligently adheres to Masonry forfeits his claims to the same confidence and support as a Christian. He sets Masonry above Christ, and cannot be a good Christian.

S. B. Erwin, of Brooklyn, a man of strong frame and great earnestness, had been a member of five secret societies, and seemed from his remarks to have been acquainted with other forms of iniquity, but saved by grace from them all. He said he had been connected with the Masons and Odd-fellows. He had little charity for those who come so slowly to the light. He believed the power of God's grace would save men from these secret orders and break off their chains. When he was converted the minister in shaking his hand gave him the Masonic grip. He was astonished, and said to the preacher, "What, are you a Mason?" He thought every man as soon as he was born again would give up Masonry with the rest of his sins, and it sorely grieved him that a minister should be still adhering to the dark institution. Another prominent preacher who was at the meeting when he was converted shouted long and loud for joy, but soon afterward said, "Erwin, you ought to be Morganized;" because the speaker had publicly renounced the lodge along with the rest of his evil deeds. The Masons had tried to break public confidence in his statements about them by accusing him of lying and saying that he never was in a lodge and his name could not be found on the lodge rolls. But every body knew better and his brother owned a hall where lodges met.

Rev. A. L. Post suggested that the words "in their official relations to God and their country" be added. He believed that we all might give confidence to members of secret orders personally, but in official relations in the church or government we might not. This was made as an amendment, but tabled.

Rev. John Levington spoke again; said he was surprised at the opposition developed at this resolution. He would pledge himself to prove that opposition to the original resolution was no better than an argument for the lodge.

A motion to lay the resolution on the table until taken up by vote, so as to allow members to think of some better form of expression, was lost. The discussion so far as it developed any difference of opinion seemed to be more on the form of words than the idea to be expressed.

W. M. Givens, of Indiana, said he could endorse the resolution as it stood, and he believed it expressed the sentiment of his conference (Lower Wabash) numbering three or four thousand persons.

Rev. Joseph Travis, of Illinois, said he could speak from personal experience on this matter. He had been a seventh degree Mason, but left the order when he was converted. He could not be intolerant, for he knew there were good men left there. He would not extend official confidence to them, but he would not withdraw his personal confidence from men at whose hands he had been well treated. He could not vote for the resolution as it now stands. As now worded it not only was an expression of our opinion that we were good and true, and members of the lodges were not, but also drew the line not upon the fact of membership, but of moral character, and the Convention would be misjudged by thoughtful men outside. We all believed the sentiment, that a difference should be made on the line of intelligent membership, but this phrasology should not be forced by brethren.

Prof. C. A. Blanchard said we must distinguish between men who are intelligently and of purpose connected with secret orders and those who have not a clear apprehension of such membership, many of whom have honesty enough to renounce if we go to them in the spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ and show them the incongruity of such membership with the Christian profession and honest citizenship. He had found such cases. But harsh and repelling language always shut the heart and prevented any hope of conviction. We are to gain these men if we are to succeed; we have a mission to them, not to those who agree with us. We are to recall those who have been misled.

Rev. L. N. Stratton spoke to the same effect. We could not go to men call them hard names and expect them to be impressed by our arguments or be won to our views. Christ's mission was to the lost. We must follow his example in our efforts to reclaim men. He believed there was less difference of opinion than there seemed to be on this subject, and urged reconciliation of terms so as to come upon common ground, and leave us in the best shape to prosecute our cause.

Rev. J. K. Alwood, of Indiana, said he believed the resolution was not so unfortunate in expression as to prevent his voting for it as it read; and the discussion had gone so far that a modification of the resolution might be construed as timidity on our part. The United Brethren churches of Indiana would stand by it.

President Roberts suggested the words "the same confidence" for "that confidence," which was accepted; and a second amendment to read "those free from Masonic obligations" for the words "the good and true" was discussed, assurances of substantial agreement were given, and the resolution as amended passed. The seventh resolution was adopted by a rising vote, as was also the last. The time of adjournment had been already postponed, but considerable business was yet undone.

Mr. D. Kirkpatrick, from the committee on the memorials to the President protesting against the Masons laying the corner-stone of our public buildings at Chicago and elsewhere, reported about 11,000 signatures returned and the number will probably be increased to 15,000 at least. He also reported the form of a letter to the President, prepared by the committee, which was approved by the Convention. This letter is to be signed by the officers of the Convention, and the Rev. J. W. Ellis, of Pittsburgh, Pa., is delegated to present the letter and memorial to President Grant. Mr. Kirkpatrick and Aaron Floyd were afterwards associated with Mr. Ellis to facilitate the collection of signatures and assist in presenting the matter at Washington.

The committee to whom was referred the matter of Incorporation, presented a form of Constitution and By-laws which were partially adopted after slight amendments; but, on account of the lateness of the hour, were at length laid on the table for future consideration. A notice to delegates of the New York State Association to meet in the afternoon was given by Elder Barlow, and the Convention adjourned to meet at the call of the chair, after benediction by Pres. Roberts.

EVENING SESSION.

The afternoon of Thursday was devoted to the political mass meeting according to the vote of the day before. The Convention reassembled at the call of the President at 8 o'clock in the evening, with a large audience present. After devotional exercises led by Rev. James Mathews, business proceeded. The Finance Committee reported through Rev. A. Crooks ample funds for all the expenses of the Convention, which statement was received with hearty expression of approval. Their further recommendations concerning the raising and reporting of funds by State lecturers were adopted. These will appear hereafter.

The Committee on Organization completed the report laid over from the morning session. The remaining articles of the constitution and by-laws were read and adopted separately, and finally as a whole. The names of eleven directors, provided for in the Constitution, were presented by the Nominating Committee and elected.

The Committee on Enrollment reported 200 names on the roll, representing nine States and the province of Ontario, Canada. An opportunity was also given to any whose names might have been omitted to be enrolled. The report was adopted.

Where shall we meet next year? was the question then brought up, and the following cities were presented as having claims for the honor of entertaining the seventh anniversary: Chicago, Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, New York and Aurora. Pres. Blanchard urged the claims of Chicago; the change in the tone of its daily press for the better; presidential candidates are apt to be named there; and there is room for a large delegation. Rev. Mr. Ellis spoke for Pittsburgh, of its central location, large number of United Presbyterian churches to give their influence and prayers for the Convention and assurance of warm welcome. Mr. C. W. Greene wanted the Convention at Indianapolis. The final vote, however, was strongly in favor of Pittsburgh, and that city was announced as the place of holding the next annual meeting.

Elder J. R. Baird, of Pennsylvania, was then called upon for the first address of the evening which was given in his usual pointed style, and drew out frequent expressions of satisfaction.

Mr. Clark, at its close favored the audience with beautiful song

"If I were a voice, a persuasive voice,
That could travel the wide world through."

Mrs. C. B. Miller, of Syracuse, was invited to the platform and read a most interesting and ably written address, a valuable record of the statements of her father, Victory Birdseye, Esq, the attorney appointed by the State of New York to conduct the Morgan trials. The thanks of the Convention were voted to Mrs. Miller and a copy of her address requested for publication.

Rev. J. W. Ellis, of Pittsburgh, was introduced and made a brief, but interesting and scholarly address. He said he had been greatly instructed by this Convention; had received a new zeal, an inspiration in the reform from attending its sessions. He assured the Convention that when they came to Pittsburgh next year they will be cordially welcomed and hospitably entertained, though they perhaps could not be prevented from going away with dirty hands and faces. He thought the Convention should take decided ground on one or two points. One of these was the ballot for woman. If ever a political party was formed it should accept this proposition and be the first to urge it before the people as an act of justice, humanity and expediency.

Mr. J. A. Conant, of Willimantic, Conn., also spoke briefly in favor of the ballot for woman. It would give the reform a new impetus, beside he considered it an act of justice. He spoke touchingly of the influence of a wife in preventing her husband from becoming a Mason.

President Roberts resigned the chair to Vice-president Stratton, it being necessary for him to leave the meeting. The hour was late and time for adjournment arrived. Much confusion attended the transaction of business during the remainder of the session.

All the seceding Masons in the Convention were invited to the platform. Six came forward and were presented to the audience and the year in which they left the lodge announced, namely: Elder Bernard, 1826; J. B. Nessel, 1829; Linus Chittenden, 1828; William M. Givens, 1857; J. R. Baird, 1858; D. P. Rathbun. The Recording Secretary was appointed to secure the signatures of seceding Masons throughout the country and their endorsement of Bernard's revelations.

A motion was made by Mr. Merrick, of Syracuse, to appoint Rev. John Levington "a National Lecturer like Mr. Stoddard." Mr. Levington remarked that for various reasons he had decided to leave the lecture field unless so appointed by the Convention. This motion passed after an effort to refer to the Executive Committee, over a considerable negative vote. This vote was evidently a mistake as the Constitution (which see) provides for but one lecturer at large.

The Convention then adjourned sine die, after sinigng the doxology

"Praise God from whom all blessings flow,"

REPUGNANCE.—Dr. Curry, of the New York Christian Advocate, the largest and the best of all the Advocate family, in a late editorial on the temperance movement after stating his connection with the old temperance movement, in the days of Washingtonianism, and his support of legal suasion and prohibitory laws, says: With 'Sons of Temperance,' 'Rechabites,' 'Good Templars' and the whole race of 'secret' temperance associations, we have had no connection, both because they require too much time and attention, and because we have a decided distaste, not to say conscious repugnance, to all secret societies. Here are three clear thoughts. First: Secret temperance orders require "too much time,"—time spent in the foolishness and superfluities of the lodge. Second: Every noble-souled man ought to have "a decided distaste to all secret societies,"—to all the den-shaded works of darkness, where underhanded measures are prefered to the open plans of light and fair dealing. Third: Every Christ-like soul ought to have a conscientious repugnance to fellowship with any and all the unfruitful works of darkness. Well it is that the Methodist Episcopal church of America is blessed with one editor, at least, who voluntarily speaks out words so noble as those of Dr. Curry. Especially is there satisfaction in the thought that he is standing at the very head of the Methodist Episcopal press. May we not pray as some of old: "Lord, grant unto thy servants, that with all boldness they may speak thy word;" and counsel thus: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Yes, that is the word, reprove them.—Telescope.

Chicago, Thursday, June 18, 1874.

At home at last. Returning from Syracuse several members in the cars bound for their homes in Ohio and Indiana, said of the Anniversary, "It is the greatest meeting yet." Donald Kirkpatrick, Esq., writes from Syracuse, since the meeting, that the local effects are good and prospects cheering. Let us thank God and take courage.

The Platform Committee, one from each State, held a called meeting in the Hall, after the Convention adjourned. Charles M. Greene, Esq., of Indianapolis, was chosen Secretary. We voted to open a "Platform Column," and publish, in the Cynosure, the political opinions of all who will take pains to write them. Opinions, mind, not arguments. I have received a single letter on politics which would cover a page or two of the paper. But every person's opinions shall go in. "I also will show mine opinion."

Next, we voted to hold a meeting of the Platform Committee, and mass meeting of citizens at Indianapolis on the third Wednesday of August: this, on motion of Mr. Greene. It will be remembered that I begged to be excused from serving as chairman of the Platform Committee, but the Convention declined to excuse me. I repeated my words to the committee, that I could not be relied on to attend the Indianapolis meeting. So much for Platform.

The Putman Record, Hennepin, Ill., publishes a very sensible sermon by Rev. H. V. Warren, of Granville, to boys and young men on tobacco, loafing, and cognate vices. Thoughtful and observant people begin to see that the rage for stimulants of other kinds will increase as the rum-shops goes down. Men must be kept crazy or stupified in their moral sense, in some way, or they will come to Christ and be saved eternally. This the god of this world will prevent if he can do it, by amusing the intellects, bewildering the consciences, and exacerbating and enflaming the passions of men. Rev. Mr. Warren's sermon is a center shot as his "wiles."

FUNDS, LECTURE-WORK, ETC.

No pledges were taken at Syracuse for funds. But 5000 cards were distributed to execute the plan of our Constitution to raise funds by memberships, $10 for life, and twenty-five cents for annual memberships. One hundred thousand twenty-five cent members would give us twenty-five thousand dollars. If this money is put promptly into the treasury, we will show you next year at Pittsburgh twenty State Lecturers in as many States. And the year following we will put a State Lecturer in every State in the Union, and face the question who shall be President? Just twenty-five cents apiece from 100,000 members will do this. "But how do we know that there will be strict honesty and rigid economy in handling funds?" I answer, you must trust Mr. Carpenter and the Committee. A man who gives steadily to the cause as Mr. Carpenter does, and who attends every meeting of the Committee, is not going to look on and see his money squandered or fooled away. For myself, I have had no salary as editor and do not propose to have any. And if I never touch a dollar in the treasury for my support I shall not certainly waste our money.

Now, let me tell you, our lecturers must be paid and paid regularly. If we have money to promise and perform that, then we can get men into the field who will sustain the Cynosure and carry the cause through. If not, we cannot. The way to do is to distribute those membership cards and send in five thousand times twenty-five cents, which is just twelve hundred and fifty dollars. If you do this promptly so that we are likely to have something to pay with I will at once call an Executive Committee meeting and venture to raise a distinct understanding with Hinman, Caldwell, and Kiggins who are already in the employ of the Committee; and when those men find they have a treasury and a vigorous Committee behind them, it will multiply them by ten, and they can look the enemy in the face.

Mr. Stoddard has hitherto done something more, I believe, than to raise his own salary. He has also attended to incorporating the Association, written our Constitution, introduced Kiggins and Caldwell into the field, and lectures constantly and very acceptably. He will continue as heretofore to have general superintendence of the lecture-work and co-operate with the State Lecturers. He will go to their help when needed in exigences; look up and recommend new lecturers, and be a medium of communication between the State Lecturers and the Committee.

Prof. C. A. Blanchard was appointed in the place of Rev. I. A. Hart (resigned) as Corresponding Secretary. His duties in the College must claim his first attention. But his known and proved devotion to the cause, and his youth and vigor make him an acquisition. He will as Corresponding Secretary, represent the National Association in religious and political bodies; counsel and co-operate with the General Agent and Lecturer, and do what speaking he can. They will do their utmost to make our next annual meeting in Pittsburgh, on the eve of our next Presidential canvas, an epoch in the history of the cause.

THE NATIONAL PRINTING-HOUSE.

Rev. A. Hard, of Painted Post, N. Y., said to me on the cars from Syracuse: "We came prepared to do our part toward raising the $70,000 to secure Mr. Carpenter's building, so that this great cause can set up house-keeping and have a national center." "Why is nothing done to meet the offer of Mr. Carpenter and secure the building?"

The answer is, Because nothing is done. This naked fact is all there is about it, and Mr. Hard is the only man who seems to comprehend the case in its importance and extent. Unless a National Printing-House, Tract Society, and daily paper can be given to this cause, it will go to wreck. Mark these words! And if this cause goes to wreck, the country goes with it. The cause is simply opposition to the Masonic shams and shelters of civil and ecclesiastical despotism. But the reality is under and in the shams. The power of the Beast is in his image.

Now the grange folly is crumbling; but it has sent and will send thousands into the lodges; and folly is not exhausted, nor the race of fools dead. Other granges, with new names and jackets, will arise.

Then, opposition to secret societies is already becoming popular, and its popularity will prove its ruin, as of the Morgan movement, unless somebody who understands it shall put a strong hand on the mind of the United States. And this can only be done by a national center and Printing-House, or their equivalent. If the Cynosure goes on, as a weakling, published under a skylight, its novelty will wear off, and we shall tire of it. Political and religious party-papers will publish just enough against secret societies to ease their consciences, and keep the children of God on their lists! Sanballat, and Tobiah, and Geshem the Arabian, will join the movement to spoil it, as they proposed of old to help Nehemiah build the city of God, when they could not suppress him. Freemasons will talk against Masonry as slave-holders did against slavery, while you leave them in the jury-box, court house, legislature and at the communion-table, and in a little while again the grip of the lodge will be on the throat of the nation.

Now the thing to be done is this. Let Mr. Hard, all who, like him, understand this thing, write to our Corresponding Secretary exactly what they will do, provided Mr. Carpenter will give us a Printing-House, and these letters will be laid before him and report made through the Cynosure. Hear and understand.

Mrs. Miller's Address at the Syracuse Convention appears in this number. It will be read with eager interest by thousands. It is another strand in the cable of truth that is relentlessly dragging this monster from its abyss of secrecy and crime. The following paragraph should be added to the address as a conclusion:

"My father died in 1853. Had he lived to see the rebellion of 1861, I have no doubt that he would have said that Freemasonry in common with slavery should bear the responsibility of that terrible war; for by undermining southern loyalty it brought about a state of things without which the rebellion would have been impossible."

WHEATON COLLEGE.

Every reader will bear witness how faithfully the Cynosure has stood by colleges and theological seminaries which exclude the unfruitful works of darkness. I assume that all the readers wish well to Wheaton College.

One year ago there was a debt on our new and beautiful buildings of close to $20,000. The trustees appointed Prof. C. A. Blanchard financial agent to pay that debt. He has done a heavy year's work in New York, Philadelphia and other parts of the country, and our united efforts have little more than kept the interest down. God willing, our debt must be paid this year ensuing. He or I will lecture against secret societies in every locality where $100 shall be raised toward our college debt, with expenses of travel.

This can easily be done. Let four neighboring points agree to raise twenty-five or thirty dollars, write to him or to myself at Wheaton forthwith, and you will have a visit from one of us.

I need not repeat, I have taken no salary from the treasury of our National Christian Asseciation, and I never intend to. But this college debt has my pledge of honor that it shall be paid. The relation of the college to the secret societies of the land is expressed in the fact that the Master of the Wheaton Lodge sued the college in our Circuit and Supreme Courts. The suit was an application for a mandamus to command us to revoke our rule against secret societies. This suit was doubtless the result of a general understanding among the lodge-leaders of the State. They surely regard the college as standing in their way to seize on the throat of this country.

Brethren, help us, and help the cause by raising $100 for a week's lectures in any locality. I speak in Princeton, Ill., July 5th. After that I am free to come and see you. Prof. C. A. Blanchard is "resting awhile," after the example of the Master, but will soon be on duty. We must give our first attention to this debt.

Come to our Commencement, July 1st.

J. Blanchard.

NOTES.

—In the letter from Bro. Samuel Hale, in the Cynosure of May 28th, page 5, is the passage "even if he does carry the day and serves on their committees." Read "bag" for "day."

—The Peoria, Ill., Freemasons consider themselves snubbed by their Chicago brethren about the corner-stone business, and have arranged for an opposition show on their Masonic saint's day. Invitations have been sent throughout central Illinois, and are so favorably responded to, that 5000 Masons are expected.

—Protests on the corner-stone laying by the Masons continue to pour in; and from every quarter come expressions of the public interest in the matter. Some say they could get one hundred names per day if they had the time; others that two-thirds of the male population of their counties would sign if an opportunity was given them. We hope to report the number received next week. Nothing has lately shown with such force the wide-spread heart-felt hostility to the lodge.

—The Grand Lodge of the State of New York met during the first week in June. Grand Master, Christopher V. Fox, in his annual address calls upon the craft to be very cautious as to the qualifications of andidates for initiations. The Secretary reports the number of lodges as 682, of which seventeen received their warrants during the year, while fifteen are working under dispensation. The total receipts were $61,846,54, including $59,576.04 for dues. The total membership is 79,840, against 79,079 last year. During the year 5,300 were initiated, some 1,777 admitted, 49 expelled, 25 suspended, 2,840 stricken off for non-payment of dues, 495 died.

Notice of Lectures at Howell, Michigan.

Rev. L. N. Stratton, editor of the American Wesleyan, Syracuse, N. Y., will deliver a course of lectures against secret societies in the M. E. church in Howell, Levington county, Michigan, on the 23rd, 24th and 25th days of June, 1874. Lectures free; all friendly to the cause are cordially invited to attend.

NOTICE is also requested that Rev. J. T. Kiggins is to give a course of lectures in Waverly, Iowa, during next week, commencing about the 16th. A local Association will be formed at the same time.

DO NOT FORGET to write to Rev. L. N. Stratton, Syracuse, N. Y., for lectures on his way to Wheaton Commencement and back again. It is a great opportunity for good. See notice of meeting in Michigan.

COMMENCEMENT AT WHEATON occurs this year July 1st. The exercises of the week will be the Baccalaureate sermon on Sabbath, June 28th, by President Blanchard; address before the Society of Inquiry by Rev. Lyman Whiting, D. D., of Janesville, Wis.; address before the Literary Societies by Rev. R. B. Howard, of Princeton, Ill.; annual meeting of the Alumni Association with an address by Rev. L. N. Stratton, of Syracuse, N. Y.; Master's Oration by W. B. Lloyd, of St. Charles, Ill. Ample entertainment for all friends from abroad, who are cordially invited.

Supper Clubs.

The following article appeared in the New York Semi-Weekly Tribune of June 2d. As that paper can be taken as good authority I send it to you:

"There is already, as we have previously noted, a little dissention among the grangers. Some of 'the embattled farmers' want to know where all the money goes which is paid into the grange treasuries. There are 12,000 granges, it is urged, in existence, with an average of fifty members each, and $2,000,000, it is estimated, have been paid in initiation fees and dues. 'What has become of all this cash? Who is enriching himself by his grangership?' are questions which the curious are beginning to ask. It is not a point upon which we can give any information. Perhaps the estimates are too high; and possibly the granges are too much like supper clubs."

I have no doubt that the grange is "too much like supper clubs." A friend told me the other day that "secret societies are a nuisance. The members pay their money to the lodge, and when enough money has accumulated it is used by some of the big ones to pay for a grand supper, and not one of the common members are invited. I will have no more to do with them. They are all a nuisance." This man is a Mason, and knew of what he spoke. I told him that Morgan's book sad that the candidate for admission had to divest himself of his clothing before he could be initiated. His answer was: "You join and you will find that you have to take your pants off." This is evidence worth saving.

I do not wonder that members want to know where the money goes. And I do not doubt that the $2,500,000 which have been paid by hard working farmers, who have been duped to join the grange, have paid the bills of a great many supper clubs, and perhaps rum clubs. Every farmer had better be at home rooting out the weeds and thistles that are growing in his crops, or, perhaps, morally speaking, in the hearts of his children, who need all the attention and instruction he can give them. He had better keep grange money in his own pocket, or buy books with it for his family. Then he will know where his money goes, or at least he will not be paying the bills of supper clubs.

Religious Intelligence.

—The religious statistics of Australia now show 73,700 Episcopalians, 263,537 Presbyterians, 213.436 Methodists, 45,932 Independents, 388,412 Baptists, 49,500 other Protestants, and 436,436 Roman Catholics.

—A New Haven paper states that the Rev. Dr. John Hall will succeed the Rev. Mr Beecher for the next year as the lecturer on preaching before the Yale divinity students.

—The Rev. Naryan Sheshadri proposes to establish a model Christian village in India, to be called Bethel, and which will have well-ventilated houses, a church, manse, industrial schools, etc. It will cost about $50,000.

—Arrangements have been made for holding at Montreal next October, a conference of the Canadian branch of the Evangelical Alliance to which the leading clergymen and laymen of the various provinces of Great Britain and the United States have been invited.

—It is said to be a fact, that one of our Chicago aldermen is more at home teaching his Sunday-school class than sitting in the meetings of the Common Council. In the present character of that body no respectable, Christian man would be otherwise.

—The National Sunday-school Teacher says that the Ross Street Sunday-school, Brooklyn, has begun a thorough purification of its literature, and has committed five hundred volumes of its library to the flames. "For the benefit of buyers and of publishers could'nt we have a list of the martyr books?"

—The Wesleyan Missionary Society (England) employs 1,125 missionaries and assistant missionaries, 4,783 catechists and schoolmasters, has 170,360 church-members, 500,000 persons attending the ministry, and 270,000 in the schools. It has 874 principal stations or circuits and 6,647 chapels and other preaching places.

—The United Presbyterian General Assembly met at Monmouth, Ill., during the last week in May. Resolutions against the grange and the use of tobacco were passed, although an effort was made to avoid raising an issue on the first. A large number of the members signed the protest on Masonic corner-stone laying addressed to Pres. Grant.

—As an instance of modern superstition the following from Cardinal Cullen, in his May pastoral to the clergy of Dublin, is somewhat remarkable. He says: "It is only by the Cross, which triumphed over pagan persecutions, that the church can overcome. We are engaged in building a new church in which is to be deposited a large piece of the real cross on which our Lord died, given to me by His Holiness Pius IX."

—The Woman's Union Missionary Society is doing a great work through its thirty-two missionaries in India, China, Japan, Turkey, and Greece. It directs the labors of seventy-one native Bible readers or teachers, and maintains about seventy day schools, containing 1,500 pupils. Its receipts and expenditures the past year were $46,178. It is the pioneer in the very general efforts Christian women are now making on behalf of their heathen sisters.

—A newspaper which has gathered some statistics about Roman Catholic pilgrimages says there will be seven great pilgrimages this year in France. The first, at the end of the present month, to Rome; the second, in June, to Paray-le-Monial; the third, in July, to Ste. Anne d'Auray; the fourth, in August, to Lourdes; the fifth, in September, to Notre Dame de la Garde, Marseilles, and to the St. Baume, the tomb of Mary Magdalene; the sixth, in October, to St. Denis, and the seventh, to Tours in November.

—That good Presbyterian women may know when it is meet that they should expound the Gospel to fallen humanity, a contributor to the Evangelist thus specifies for their benefit: 1. Not where there is a sufficient number of well-qualified men. 2. Not where pride is the prompter and vanity is the result, where notoriety is sought and a morbid curiosity is encouraged. 3. Not till the duties prescribed by their mental and physical constitutions and circumstances are performed, and it shall appear that they can preach better than men. 4. Not till sons of thunder are obsolete, and daughters of thunder are demanded.

—The king of Siam, who was crowned in 1868, on attaining his twentieth birthday, September 21, made over the government to a regent, laid aside his royal prerogatives, entered a monastery, and was ordained as a Buddhist priest in conformity with the requirements of that religion. As a priest must be free from all family and secular cares, his crown wives and children had to be renounced. It was not, however, for life, but only for fifteen days, when his government, crown, palace, and family were restored to him. The people were pleased that he conformed to their religious customs, and Buddhism was strengthened in its hold upon them.

News of the Week.

The City.

—The great Reunion of old line Abolitionists came off last week. Numbers were present from nearly all the Northern States, and took part in the meeting. Prominent among them were Dr. Edward Beecher, Hon. Philo Carpenter, Hon. Geo. W. Julian, Hon. J. B. Grinnell, C. C. Burleigh, John G. Fee, Pres. J. Blanchard, Dr. J. B. Walker, Geo. W. Clark the "Liberty Singer," Mrs. Jane G. Swisshelm, George Thompson, Levi Coffin, Dr. Morgan, of Oberlin; probably all were in past years noted men in their localities. The general criticism is that the meeting was continued too long and topics of an extraneous nature brought in. At the request of a number of citizens of Wheaton, Pres. Blanchard will repeat his address in the Chapel of Wheaton College, and Mr. Clark will sing on the occasion.

—The Masons of the city are in some trepidation in regard to their corner-stone elephant. The widespread opposition to their arrogant measures has caused the issue of a circular carefully prepared with the intent to entrap non-Masons into consenting to the fraud. An enthusiastic meeting was held in the basement of the First Congregational Church on the 10th, immediately after the closing of a session of the Anti-Slavery Reunion, and petitions circulated to secure the services of Vice-president Wilson or some other government official to lay the stone.

The Capitol.

—The House has passed the bill admitting Colorado as a State. The vote was 170 ayes and 65 nays.

—There seems to be general satisfaction at the appointment of Gen. Bristow to succeed Mr. Richardson as Secretary of the Treasury.

—The President and most of the general officers of the government are preparing to leave Washington on the adjournment of Congress next week.

—The passage of the Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill has put out the life of the Civil Service Reform by withdrawing all funds used to carry it on. This Reform has long been in the way of ambitious politicians.

The Country.

—During the great storm in Central New York, the steeple of the Congregational church, Rev. R. T. Cross, pastor, was blown down and the building injured.

—The leading saloon keepers of Cincinnati, Ohio, were all arrested June 11th, by the Young Men's Temperance League on a charge of performing common labor on the Sabbath.

—The Union miners of the Hocking Valley, Ohio, have inaugurated a great strike. The attempted importation negroes from Memphis to work the mines last week was only partly successful, many of them being persuaded to join the strikers. A military force has been on the ground to prevent bloodshed.

—During the second week in June terrible storms were experienced in various parts of the country. The village of Tampico, Whiteside Co., Ill., was wholly demolished, twenty-one dwellings and two grain elevators were blown down; none were killed. A number of persons sailing and fishing on Oneida Lake near Utica, N. Y., were drowned by the upsetting of their craft, and the storm was one of the most severe known in the region. The storm visited Troy, N. Y., and demolished one span of the new bridge which fell upon and sunk four canal boats.

—Among the large gifts for scientific and philanthropic purposes those of Mr. Thompson, late President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and Mr. James Lick, of San Francisco, are to be mentioned. The former wills $2,000,000 to the education and maintenance of the female orphans of railroad employees who may have been killed while in the discharge of duty. Mr. Lick has given $1,855,000 to observatories, monuments and charitable institutions, reserving a homestead and $25,000 a year for himself.

—News from the far West of Indian outbreaks are becoming frequent, a dispatch from Bismark, Dakota Ter., says that 400 Sioux attacked the Ft. Berthold Indian Agency lately but were repulsed. Four agency Indians were killed. Reinforcements were sent from Ft. Stevenson and no further danger is anticipated. During the last week of May Lieut. Heyl had a fight with the Apaches, and letters from Alaska tell of civil war among the tribes of that remote region which the U. S. troops do not dare interfere to prevent.

The Mocker.

"Wine is a mocker."
It will smite yon,
It will bite yon,
It will scorn yon in yonr paln:
It will bnrn you,
It will spurn yon,
Thongh in madness yon complain;
With a syren's crnel spell,
With a purpose deep as hell,
It will lure yonr feet away
And o'ercome yon In dismay.

"Wine is a mocker."
In its smiling
And beguiling,
It will sparkle in your eye;
Ever sipping,
Ever tipping,
'Till the merry glass is dry;
It will turn with demons rage,
Sparing neither youth nor age:
Look not then upon the wine,
Though so bright its beauties shine.

"Wine is a mocker."
'Twill betray yon,
Then 'twill slay you,
Though yon cry on ruin's brink;
Hark the moaning
And the groaning,
Where the lost ones drop and sink;
Turn and leave it, let it mock,
Plant thy feet npon the rock,
Turn away from ruins edge,
In the safety of the pledge.

Continuance in Well-Doing.

To begin some good work, to start out upon the Christian life, to commence to train one's character in this particular or that—all this is well. But merely this is not enough. To reach a journey's end, it is not enough that with the bright and cheerful light of opening day you set out upon the road. You must tramp on hour after hour, while the sun mounts to the zenith, and his rays come down with scorching power, and the path is dusty, and water fails you. Only by patient continuance over the toilsome way will the evening hour find you at the proper halting-place.

We need not wonder that the Bible lays great stress upon continuance in well-doing. It is the true test of Christian character; it is the only way of gaining the immortal crown. Not he that enters upon the battle-field simply, but "he that overcometh," receives the reward of victory.

Here is the matter of the achievement of a Christian character. A great many men begin well; they enter upon the course with enthusiasm. The prospect seems bright, and in so good an endeavor the way, they think, must be easy. But soon the fact that they have entered upon the course seems to satisfy them. They forget that he that putteth on the armor must not boast with him that layeth it off. Difficulties rise about them; unexpected obstacles interrupt their easy progress; dangers of which they had never dreamed yawn at their side.

Just here is the test of character. It turns upon the question whether there shall be a yielding to these difficulties, or a patient continuance in well-doing, and thereby "glory and honor and immortality."

Here is the matter of Christian activity for the good of men and the glory of God. How many enterprises have been entered upon only to be abandoned. They promised well; they were adapted to do good; but there was no patient continuance in them. And how many persons there are that in some transient glow of enthusiasm enter upon some good work already begun, but shortly give it up. They will present many plausible reasons for their course; but the secret of it is they were not willing to persevere. They were willing, even anxious to do well for a little time; but they did not continue in well-doing.

The real labor of Christian living and Christian doing is met just at this point of continuance. And it is no easy thing to hold on day after day, year in and year out, in the face of mighty obstacles, patiently to stem wind and tide, slowly and painfully to "wrestle on toward heaven."

But there is encouragement in this thought, that the work is not all to be done at once, but piece by piece, each day witnessing progress. Continuance in well-doing accomplishes wonders.

And, again, there is encouragement in this, that for this daily continuance in toil, as for its beginning, we can have Divine help. "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness," is evermore the assurance of the "present Helper" to each one of his struggling, toiling servants. —Am. Messenger.

Correct Landmarks.

As I was riding over the open prairies of Illinois, east of the village of New Rutland, one fine spring morning, I came across some men who were tearing and digging the earth, in the road and by its side, with picks and shovels, as if they were searching for something very valuable that was covered there somewhere. I asked them what they were searching for so carefully. They told me they were trying to find a small stone that was covered there somewhere. Now in the East this would be needless, for the stones are plenty there, and it would seem strange to find a place where there were none, but on these prairies they are seldom seen. There was one near where these men were digging, but they could not easily find it. It was only a common stone. I asked them what they wanted it for. They said it was put there for a landmark, and they wanted to find it so they could run a straight line from it, and measure off a piece of land.

I asked them why they were so particular. A few inches was not much in the starting point. But they said it would make many acres difference in the result. They would not measure a single chain until they found that stone, if it took them days to find it.

I asked them how they knew there was a stone there. They said the records gave an account of its being there, and the records were true. I went on and left them, and when I returned in the afternoon the stone had been found, and the line measured for the land.

And as I rode on I was led to reflect on this as an illustration of the necessity of being careful of the old landmarks and measurements. The Lord has laid down certain landmarks of truth by which we are to be guided in our service to him, and yet how often men get careless about them.

Christ and his teachings are the landmarks laid down for us. And yet men think they can get along very well without Christ. They think they can choose some other guide and do just as well. But the result in the end will show their folly. As it is impossible for men to measure land correctly without due regard to the starting point and landmarks, so it is as impossible to arrive at correct results in the way of life without beginning with Christ, and following the directions given in the record, which is the Bible.

These men were looking for a particular stone in a particular spot. No other would do, for that place was marked by that one stone alone. So in the Christian's life, Christ must be found, and no other. And he occupies the very place the record indicates, and no where else. As other stones might be found to closely resemble the one these men were looking for, so other characters may be found resembling Christ and deceive many.

But as these men wanted the stone that lay in that particular place, so we must find the Christ of the Bible if we would be correct. And as a slight variation from the stone at starting would produce serious results at last, so unless we start with Christ we shall certainly fail at last.

Then let us be particular in this work. Have we found Christ? Is he the Christ of the Bible? And are we working upon the line the record gives us? O that men would be as faithful in eternal things as in temporal! The kingdom of God is to be reached. A little deviation and we may miss it. Let us be prayerful. Some have tried to hide the landmarks. Let us find them again. Search on and have faith, as these men had, that the record is true.

O for a church with overcoming faith! Then we shall have the correct landmarks.—World's Crisis.

Religion in Daily Life.

The great duties of life, as they are ordinarily distributed, both in the household and out of it, are indispensable to the development of the whole nature of man, and of the prime virtues; and they are the instruments, or, to employ the language of olden times, the "means of grace," in life. The church, the lecture-room, the prayer and conference meeting, the communion of saints were once spoken of as "a means of grace." They are means of grace when they produce grace; but it would seem, in the very use of them, as if they meant to exclude common life, common duties, common occupations; whereas, in the divine economy, everything that pertains to the well-being of the individual, and the prosperity of the household, and the welfare of the community in which men live, tends to the amassing of force whichresults in civilization. Everything, which occupies thought and ripens into enterprise, and ripens enterprise into success and fruitful achievement, is part and parcel of the divine scheme.

Therefore, the man who bends over his bench may be as really worshiping God, fulfilling the will of God, and doing God's service, as he who bends over the altar. He who stands at the blacksmith's forge may be as really rendering God service as he who reads from the Psalms or Gospels. He who is rightly performing the duties of life is worshiping, if worship means rendering acceptable service to God.

The Grace of God.

John Dickinson was a farmer in the parish of Ratho, near Edinburgh, and was for a long time negligent and irreligious. It pleased God to take away his wife, and it became necessary for him to have a nurse in the house, who happily was a pious woman,

When his infant daughter was about twenty months old, she was in the room wtih her father and several of his profane companions. Most unexpectedly the child repeated, in its infantine tones, "O, the grace of God!" an exclamation she had often heard from her nurse. The attention of the father was thus excited, the Holy Spirit led him to deep and serious reflections, and thus was his conversion to God effected.

Murmur at nothing; if our ills are irrepairable, it is ungrateful; if remediless, it is vain; a Christian builds his fortitude on a better foundation than stoicism; he is pleased with everything that happens, because he knows that it could not happen unless it had first pleased God, and that which pleases him must be the best. He is assured that no new thing can befall him, and that he is in the hands of a Father, who will prove him with no affliction that resignation cannot conquer, or that death cannot cure.—Colton.

Heroism, of the Martyr type, arising from the love of Christ, and hence superior to any mere martial heroism, was exhibited by many of the Friends in North Carolina and other Southern States during the late war. Long freed from the burden of slave-holding themselves, they could not, even if not irreconcilably greatly opposed to war, take part in the contest against the government. Therefore they were exposed to violence, such as may be imagined by those of Andersonville and Libby Prison. From many such accounts within reach, we extract a portion only of one, from the Nashville Banner. George Vestal, a Quaker, refusing either to enter the rebel army or to pay an exemption fee, was forced into camp. Unwilling to do anything whatever of the nature of military duty, "three men with sharp Enfield bayonets then thrust them into the fleshy part of his thighs, inflicting in all thirty-five wounds, ranging in depth from one-forth to one inch. Frequently he was knocked down with the butts of the guns; but, as long as he had strength, he would turn one side and the other for the guards, until finally they refused to inflict further punishment. At this juncture the brave men who composed the old Fourteenth Regiment became loud in their condemnation of this proceeding. The excitment was intense, and had the Brigadier General issued a second order of this character he would have been unable to have it executed. Vestal was afterwards, upon trial by court-martial, confined in Castle-Thunder. At the evacuation of Richmond he was still in prison, and secured his release only by the down-fall of the Confederacy.—Herald of Peace.

Gerrit Smith on the Woman's Temperance Movement.

I rejoice that the women see just where to strike in order to cripple the enemy and leave him no power to prolong the fight. Would that the temperance men were as discerning, and were concentrating their force in the same direction, instead of striking all around the compass and hitting nothing effectually. Women see that it is dramselling—the selling of alchoholic beverages to be drank upon the premises, as in hotels and saloons—which makes the vast majority of drunkards—and that once an end is put to this branch of drunkard-making—to this which is rather the very tap-root and trunk of the satanic business—the remaining victories in the cause of temperance will be easily achieved. Let the men follow in this wake of the women, and insist at the ballot-box that Government shall make an end of this dramselling, and a very few years would pass away ere our country would be rejoicing not merely in the dawn but in the noonday brightness of temperance. And to do this they need not call upon Government to espouse the cause of temperance—for it is admitted that Government has no right to espouse any moral reform. They need but call on it to be true to its single office of protecting person aad property—and surely it cannot be true to it so long as it suffers the dramshop to peril them so frightfully. Moreover, whilst the dramshop far surpasses all things else in perilling them, no plea can be offered for its usefulness in any respect or in any degree. The temperance men have but to insist on this duty at the hands of the Government, and all political parties will straightway stand with them—for none of them could afford to deny that the suppression of the dramshop is vital to the protection of person and property.

Proverbs may be regarded as the gems of language; not only in the sense that they are small, bright, and universal currency, but also in the mystery of their composition, as being a work for ages, a secret birth. It is as impossible to make a proverb as to make an emerald, or that black diamond which constitues the more familiar sparkle of material life. We probably none of us know how much we use proverbs in our daily speech; but it is certain that if they were withdrawn from the language, we should find ourselves pulled up at every turn; for we may almost say that a language is not a language until it has proverbs imbedded in it, as a people are not a people till they have antiquities and a past to refer to.

Home and Health Hints.

Heating Church.

The proper measure of heat for cold weather, says Dr. W. W. Hall, of the Journal of Health, is about sixty-five degrees of Fahrenheit, at a height of about four feet above the floor. At the close of the services of the day, all the windows and doors should be opened and kept open for two or three hours, so that the drafts of air passing through the building should carry with them, out of doors, the immense amount of human emanations and other impurities which are held in the air of any public building after its occupancy. If this is not done, the odors solidify in part, and dry on the walls and glass and woodwork, to be reconverted into fumes when the next fires are kindled, and to be rebreathed. It is a great mistake to suppose that it is sufficient if the house is ventilated without heat during the week, or just before warming again for the next meeting, for the reason just named. In the common churches in the country, in winter time, good fires ought to be lighted on Saturday afternoon, and kept up until service the next day, in order to get rid of the dampness and closeness observed in all unoccupied buildings. In city churches, which are larger, fires are kindled in very cold weather on Fridays, and are kept burning until Sabbath service.

Grapes as Food.—Men can live and work on grapes and bread. The peasantry of France, Spain and Italy make many a satisfying meal in this way; and of the wholesomeness of the diet there can be no doubt. Medical men constantly recommend the use of grapes for their patients. Scarcely any plant can equal the vine as regards the beauty of its leaves and fruit. As the covering for bare walls and for affording shelter, it is a climber of the first rank. To sit under one's own vine has in all ages been considered the acme of rural happiness—an emblem of peace, a symbol of plenty, and a picture of contentment. That pleasure, though perhaps not in all its fullness, may become the heritage of thousands in these temperate climes. Neither our latitude, longitude nor leaden skies, nor erratic climate forbid the growth of the grape-vine throughout the larger portion of the kingdom.—Health Reformer.

Dr. Hall says the best medicines in the world, more efficient than all the potations of the materia medica, are warmth, rest, cleanliness and pure air. Some persons make it a virtue to brave disease, "to keep up" as long as they can move a foot or wiggle a finger, and it sometimes succeeds; but in others the powers of life are so completely exhausted by it that the system has lost all power to recuperate, and slow and typhoid fever sets in and carries the patient to a premature grave. Whenever walking or working is an effort, a warm bed and a cool room are the very first indispensables to a sure and speedy recovery. Instinct leads all birds and beasts to quiethood and rest the very moment disease or wounds assail the system.

Children's Corner.

Doing and Being.

"There!" exclaimed Marion fretfully, as she turned from the window, "the day is all gone, and I haven't done anything. I haven't done anything," she repeated discontentedly; "and I meant to do so much."

"What have you done?" inquired Elizabeth, closing her book-basket. "Sit down and tell me."

"Well," assented Marion, seating herself, "you know my day as well as I do. This morning I read three chapters in the Bible, as usual. I do want to get through it this year. Then I was gone an hour on that errand for father; then I wrote three letters, mended Tom's mittens, and corrected Nellie's composition; then mother called me to set the dinner-table. After dinner I directed a magazine and two papers to your missionary; then—oh! Nellie's arithmetic—that took me an hour, she was so stupid; then father asked me to copy a deed for him, and then that tiresome Mrs. Green called, and I entertained her for an hour; and then—how little it all seems!—I went out to get sewing-silk for mother, and buy that ball I've been promising Georgie for a month; and now the man is lighting the gas over the way, and my day is gone! I can't help feeling dissatisfied; I haven't done anything good today."

Elizabeth was rocking lazily to and fro in her chair. "You think a great deal about doing, don't you?"

"Yes, and so do you! You are always at work doing something."

"It's a good thing to be so. God gives us many things to do; but don't you think he gives us something to be, just as well?"

"Oh yes!" very quickly. "Of course."

"May I speak plainly, Marion? May I tell you all about your unsatisfying day?"

"You dear old Elizabeth!" Marion sprang up and threw both her arms around her neck. "You ought to have been born my grandmother. 'Faithful are the wounds of a friend.' Shoot me through and through, I will not even groan." Nevertheless, Marion's lips trembled as he dropped down on the carpet at her friend's feet, and laid her head in her lap.

Before speaking, Elizabeth bent over to kiss her. "I've been thinking all day as I have watched you, dear, that I would like to say this to you. I see that in trying to do what He commands, you forget to be what He commands. I know all about it. First, about reading the three chapters every day. How did you read them?"

"Hurried through the last," confessed Marion; "and I did look to see if it was short. I feel condemned if I don't read it through when I set myself to do it."

"You poor child! we will talk about that some other time. Then came the errand for your father; you fretted about that because you said you were wasting your time. You answered your mother saucily when she inquired whom your letters were written to; you scolded Tom for burning his mittens; you made fun of Nellie's spelling, and set her lips to quivering. You spoke impatiently to yonr mother about setting the dinner table."

"And Betsy ought to do it, I repeat it," interrupted the girl wilfully.

"And you slapped Georgie for hiding the paper you were looking for."

"I am sorry for that," said a voice from under Marion's flowing curls.

"You scolded Nellie for being stupid, until she cried; you frowned over the paper you copied for your father, and did you not make fun of Mrs. Green before she had reached the corner?"

"Oh dear! tell me about being." Marion looked up with penitent eyes. "I will think about being, if you will help me."

"God says, 'Be kindly affectioned one to another.'

" 'Be ye also patient.'

" 'Be ye thankful.'

" 'Be not conformed to this world.

" 'Become little children.'

" 'Be ye therefore perfect.'

" 'Be courteous.'

" 'Be not wise in your own conceits.'

Marion listened, making no reply.

Twilight grew into darkness. The tea-bell sounded, bringing Marion to her feet. In the firelight Elizabeth could see that her cheeks were wet.

"I'll have a better day to-morrow, God helping me, I see that doing grows out of being."

"We cannot be what God loves without doing what he commands. It is easier to do with a rush than to be patient, or kind, or forgiving, or unselfish, or humble, or just, or watchful."

"I should think it was," returned Marion emphatically. — Lutheran Standard.

How to put Away our Faults.

One day I was watching a great Newfoundland dog. He had been told by his master to fetch him a basket of tools that the gardener had left in the shed. The great dog went to obey his young master. He took hold of the basket with his mouth, but he could not lift it. What did he do? Give it up? No, never! One by one he took the things out of the basket and carried them to his master.

One by one! That is the way we must try to do with all our faults. Try and get rid of them one by one. Jesus knows how hard it is for you to do this, and so he has given you a word that will help you to do it, and that word is "to-day."

I will show you how. Take one fault,—we will call it bad temper—and in the morning, when you get out of bed, ask God for Christ's sake to help you "to-day" to overcome that bad temper. Perhaps by and by something will begin to make you feel angry; then remember your prayer, and try and drive away the angry feeling, and say, "Not to-day."

If you have learned any bad, wicked words like some poor children in the street, who do not know any better, then ask God for Christ's sake to help you to day; then, when you are tempted to do so, remember, "Not to-day; I will not say wicked words to-day."

And do the same with all your faults. Take them one by one, and try for one whole day not to give way to them. It will come much easier then.—Selected.

Reform News.

Prof. Blanchard in Canada.

Editor Cynosure:

Doubtless you will be pleased to hear that Prof. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, Ill., on the evening of the 7th of June, lectured on secret societies in the U. B. church at Fort Hill, Ont. He was on his route home from the National Convention and stopped off with us. Notwithstanding the short notice the people had, that he would lecture at this point, the lower floor of our church was crowded to its utmost, with some in the gallery and all anxiously and respectfully listened to the distinguished speaker.

We were highly delighted with the manner this brother treats the subject of Masonry. While Bro. B. is logical and witty, he argues his points from the testimony of the Bible and this gives it the effect on his audience. We think lovers of the truth could not turn away from his lecture without feeling aroused to the importance of battling against this mighty, mouldering evil of the day.

Prof. Blanchard is not afraid to speak out against what he knows and feels to be militating against the church of Christ.

We pray he may live long enough to wave a palm of victory over secretism.

J. S. Riddle.

From the Ohio Agent.—A Mason Helps in a Public Initiation.

Bro. Kellogg:—In the midst of a pressure of business in getting ready for our State Convention, and also for the National Convention, I have fallen behind in my reports to your columns. I gave some four lectures in Seneca Co. just before, and one immediately after our State meeting (at Flat Rock) on my return from the same. The three first lectures were given in Harmony Church, four miles south of Tiffin, the county seat.

This was a meeting of much interest. I shall not assume to say whether the interest which characterized the meeting was infused with the lecturer, or whether it resulted from the opposing elements that pervaded among Masons, Odd-fellows and grangers, for it was a hot-bed of all three. On the first evening, in stating my premises I took occasion to say that I was not a secret man, and would be under the necessity of founding my arguments upon testimony obtained from other sources than that acquired by personal experience in the lodge, as I have never been there. And that I intended to take only such testimony as was irrefragable to establish what I should say, and in regard to Masonry I shall feel myself bound in duty to Masonry, and also to outsiders, to reject the testimony of adhering Masons.

First, I could not take the testimony of Masons, because they were sworn not to give truthful testimony touching their institution; but upon the other hand were sworn to ever conceal, and never reveal.

Secondly, my responsibility to my fellow-beings outside of the order prohibited me from practicing deception upon their credulity; and further, my position as a public lecturer involved the necessity of charging Masons with either lying, or committing perjury. By rejecting their testimony, I simply say to them, You falsify; but if I receive as truthful testimony what adhering Masons say, then I charge them with lying under the solemnities of an oath, and hence knowing as I do, that they are sworn never to divulge, by accepting their testimony I say to them as plain as language can say it, that you are Masonically perjured. I stated that charity prompted me to prefer the lesser of these charges and to say that Masons simply lie, when they say anything in the presence of the enemies of their institution in vindication of their principles.

This raised an excitement, and created quite a buzzing in the Masonic hive. One man by the name of Baker sprang to his feet and said, "I move that a chairman be appointed, and that this question be fairly discussed," stating that he had taken seven degrees and was proud of the order, etc, I said to him, "My friend, (for I did not learn his name until afterwards) do you intend to challenge me for a debate on this question? If so, I accept the issue and am ready to second your motion for a chairman." To this he quietly replied that they were not prepared to enter into debate now, but that they would meet me in the future and sat down. After telling my friend that I would hold myself ready to meet them when they notified me of the time and place, I proceeded to give the evidence upon which I relied for my arguments against Masonry. In giving that part of the Master's degree that relates to the giving of the Master's word on the five points of fellowship, I stated that as there were a good many Masons present, I should like to give that part of the degree intelligently; and asked if a Mason would step out and assist me, as it required two to perform it intelligently.

At this juncture I paused and all eyes were turned to my friend Baker, and he being somewhat impulsive sprang upon his feet, when I urged him to come forward and came down upon the platform to meet him. A Mr. Leese, who was present and in advance of Baker in the degrees, admonished him to be careful in what he did; this caused him to falter, but I and others urged him on, and as he was so far committed he came to the platform when I approached him and took hold of his right hand, "taking the strong grip of the lion's paw" upon him. I observed that he became tremulous and feigned utter ignorance of the part about to be played. I then gave the words of command, foot to foot, knee to knee, breast to breast, hand to back, and mouth to ear, and then explained that the words about to be uttered were not allowed to be given above a whisper. I then gave loud and distinctly the Master's word, "Mah-Hah-Bone." I may say in indication of Mr. Baker that he kept his oath in that he did not give any of the signs nor did he give the Master's word, "Mah-Hah-Bone." The only violations he committed of the principles of Masonry were these: he failed to preserve his jewel of silence, and also inadvertently obeyed the first command in setting out his right foot at the command foot to foot, etc..

I make these statements for the benefit of this Royal Arch friend and hope this may be a sufficient vindication of his Masonic character before his lodge. It is due Mr. Baker to say further that he got up at the close of the meeting and apologized for his conduct, and gave assurance that the speaker should be permitted to go on with his series of lectures without any farther interruption and hoped that all would forgive him for his unbecoming conduct and with emphasis declared that there would be no necessity for a moderator in the future, which prediction came true. In the winding up of the part Mr. Baker played in giving the Master's word I presume he felt that something would be expected from him, so he asked what "Mah-Hah-Bone" meant. After telling him, he replied that he never knew before the meaning of those words. Thereby acknowledging the truthfulness of the degree, i.e., that Masons do take that degree, and give those words.

On the next evening my friend Baker was absent, likewise the third and last evenings. Still we had enough of the opposition element to make the meetings interesting. On the second evening we had a German Mason present, who added to the interest by his twitching, and strange gesticulations. Unfortunately he could not understand fully what was said, and he conceived the idea that I was a Catholic priest from Italy, come for the purpose of doing the pope service, and making proselytes to the Catholic faith. He being a German Lutheran, knew that the Catholics and his church were at enmity upon the issue of Freemasonry, as well as on other points. Hence with some show of plausibility he inferred from my opposition to Freemasonry that I must be a Romish priest working in the interest of Catholicism. I gave one lecture at Seneca Union Church, where I referred in a brief way to Masonry, the grange, and the relation existing between the two. Gave one lecture at Honey Creek Chapel, Melmore; subject, The Anti-Secret Character of Freemasonry. I trust upon the whole, that much good may result from those meetings. I go this evening to Spring Hill to attend the first annual meeting of Fulton Co., and to elicit what further light may have developed in the Masonic tragedy.

Yours for the triumph of truth,

D. S. Caldwell.

The North-East Pennsylvania Christian Association.

The N. E. Pa. Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies held its recent quarterly meeting at Fell's Hall, in the village of Waverly, Pa., commencing on Wednesday, May 6th. In the absence of Rev. S. E. Miller, President of the Association, Elder Charles Parker was chosen as Moderator, and Dr. J. C. Miles, of Dalton, Secretary. After prayer by the Rev. A. L. Post, ten minute addresses were heard from Elders A. L. Post, J. W. Raynor, Nathan Callender, J. L. Barlow, and other brethren. Rev. J. L. Barlow read an original poem, exposing the folly and wrong of Masonic corner-stone laying. Elders Post, Raynor, Barlow and Dr. Miles were appointed a committee on resolutions. Brethren A. C. Reynolds and C. Parker were appointed as Finance Committee.

The following order of business was decided upon: 1st, The first half hour of this evening's and to-morrow morning's session to be spent in prayer. 2d. That Rev. J. L. Barlow deliver public addresses this and to-morrow (Thursday) evenings. 3d. That Thursday A. M. be occupied as a business meeting; and 4th, that Thursday P. M. be devoted to addresses by different members of the Association.

After a profitable afternoon of deliberation and counsel, the convention took a recess till 7½ P. M.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The first half hour till 8 o'clock was devoted to prayer, after which Elder J. L. Barlow addressed the assembly on the "Religion of Masonry," showing most conclusively from Masonic authorities that Masonry is a false religion, antagonistic to the Christian system and by its lying pretensions keeping many from the Church of Christ, and from accepting the doctrines of Bible salvation.

After the lecture the assembly was dismissed with the benediction.

THURSDAY MORNING.

From 9½ to 10 o'clock this morning was spent in social prayer. At 10 A. M. business was resumed, and the resolutions presented by the committee were discussed preparatory to adoption. These resolutions are as follows:

[The greater part of these resolutions are omitted for want of room.—Ed. Cynosure.]

Resolved, That the time has fully come when loyalty to Christ and to the best good of society, requires all opposed to secret orders to take political action against the despotism of the lodge, especially because Masonry has usurped nearly all the offices of trust and power in the land.

Resolved, That we recommend to all opposed to secret orders more thorough, prayerful, earnest effort against the works of darkness, by organizing township and other local societies, by the circulation of books and tracts bearing on this subject, and by seeking to enlarge the circulation of the Christian Cynosure, the organ of our National Association, and by letting Christian light shine in upon these hidden dens of organized evil.

Resolved, That we, the members of this Association, and citizens of the United States, object most decidedly to the laying of the corner-stones of our public buildings by secret oath-bound orders; whereby a corrupt institution like Masonry seeks glorification and notoriety at the expense of the people at large.

Resolved, That we immediately inaugurate vigorous measures to effect a State organization, and that we aim, if practicable, to reach this result at our next annual meeting in the fall, and partment. Not that he made choice of that our Committee of Correspondence aim to reach every locality in this State from which a delegation may be obtained, and to this end, that we earnestly solicit the friends of the cause to send the committee by letter or through the Christian Cynosure such facts as we need to secure a State organization against the mystery of iniquity.

Resolved, That we recognize in the Patrons of Husbandry, or granges, so-called, which are springing up in all parts of our country, children of secrecy, having Masons and Odd-fellows for god-fathers and god-mothers, which as organizations are most cunningly devised to give speculators at "head centers" the control of the farming interests of the country.

Resolved, That Revs. A. L. Post and J. W. Raynor be a committee to prepare a circular letter on the Evils of Secretism to the ministers, elders, class leaders and deacons of our Christian churches in N. E. Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That we send delegates to the Sixth National Convention, to be held in Syracuse from June 2d to 5th, 1874.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting, together with these resolutions, be published in all our local papers, and in the Christian Cynosure.

The members of the Convention signed a petition asking the President of the United States to prevent the laying of the corner-stone of Chicago Custom-House and post-office with Masonic ceremonies.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

Association convened at 2 o'clock. and listened to addresses from several brethren.

The following persons were nominated as delegates to the National Convention to be held at Syracuse June 2, 1874: Clark Lowry and wife, S. A. Reynolds and wife, Dr. J. C. Miles and wife, Joseph Powers and wife, and Rev. L. N. Callender, A. L. Post, and J. W. Raynor.

It was further resolved that our next annual meeting be held in the Free Methodist Hall, in Wilkes-barre, to commence at 2 P. M. on the first Tuesday of November.

THURSDAY EVENING, MAY 7TH.

After devotional services, Rev. J. L. Barlow gave his second lecture—Subject, "The Secrets of Masonry." These secrets were laid bare, and their silly, shameful and unholy character plainly exhibited, to the disgust and sorrow of respectable people and the chagrin of secretists.

All our sessions were deeply interesting and profitable and we hope by God's blessing "in whom we trust," and whose truth we aim to vindicate, to aid in enlightening public sentiment in regard to the evils of secretism, so that the power of secret orders shall be overthrown and the church and society be purged from their defiling and selfish and ungodly influence.

J. W. RAYNOR, Sec'y.

Along with the local expenses of conventions the general cause should be remembered. The Lowndes Co. (Miss.) Association has just sent $1.00 from its funds to keep up its auxiliary connection.

The Service of the Christian Church.

NORTHWOOD, O.

The apostle in express terms, not only claims for Christ the honor of the world's creation, but asserts the purpose of its creation to terminate in him.

"All things were created by him and for him." Our earth was selected as the chosen spot on which the mystery of redemption was to be displayed. The advent of the promised Messiah took place here; here was accomplished his awful decease, and here were achieved his glorious victories over men and devils, over sin and death.

Redemption is the grand central object of the Messiah, upon whose shoulders is the government. "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end." This Son of God kings are required to kiss, to avoid his anger. He is "head over all things to the church which is his body." Therefore magistrates are to receive their authority from Christ to serve the church. If they do not serve the church, they do not serve him. "He hath purchased the church with his own blood." Acts xx. 28. The church is the grand object of his care. We read in the 40th chapter of Isaiah, 12th verse: "For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee [the church] shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted."

The whole duty of every man is to serve the church. The civil officer is to be regulated in all his administrations by God's word; and will thereby in all his services serve the church.

In Deuteronomy 32nd. chapter, 9th verse we read, "For the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance." The institution of civil government is for the good of his inheritance, the invisible church. The Scriptures give no countenance to any relation among men except for the good of the church. No service is required of any man except that which will favor the church. "For all things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world. or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's." (1 Cor. iii. 21-23.) There is a complete harmony in the three texts,—the last, with the first quoted from Col. i. 1-16, and the one in Eph. i. 1-22, 23. "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the church which is his body." Under the Old Testament dispensation when God's people ruled, both in church and state, the two departments were kept perfectly distinct. The elders that sat in the gate durst not intermeddle with the priest's business on pain of death. And the priests had as little right to interfere in civil matters. Then, there was a union of church and state. The State made a provision for a house of worship, and support of the ministry. Jehoshaphat made arrangement for carrying out of civil and ecclesiastical government by appointing distinct officers in each department of the church. Uzziah was a leper because he would not keep his place in the church. He was not a civil officer, but he was a king. He was not one of the ecclesiastical officers. But he was serving the church.

OUR MAIL.

H. Johnson, Delavan, Wis., writes:

"Delevan is a hard place in which to get subscribers for a paper that opposes the craft. The ministers are mum upon the subject of secretism, and one is a Mason and Odd-fellow. I may get one, two or three more. I shall do what I can for the cause. I said from its first start it would prove a success. God will sustain the right."

J. C. Carithers, Pittsburgh, Ind., writes:

"I send you the names of a few subscribers. There are a few here who oppose secret societies, but they seem dull and lifeless in the cause of reform. May the good cause increase."

John Hubbard, Freedom, Ill., writes:

"As I cannot go to the Convention. I shall try and see what I can do to aid in this way (by obtaining Cynosure subscribers.) . . . My heart is in this work. . . . All seem to like the new paper, and I rejoice in your effort to do good."

E. E. Morrison, Kirkville, Ia., writes:

"It is quite refreshing to note the stir the paper and those tracts make among the haters of light."

J. A. Lambert, Correctionville, Ia., writes:

"I would not do without it (the Cynosure) for four times the price."

Adna Lull, Greeley, Ia., writes that he has obtained one hundred and twenty signers to the petition concerning the government business in Chicago, and adds:

"I think if there is a paper in the world that ought to be sustained it is the Christian Cynosure. . . I like it better and better, therefore you may consider me a life subscriber, and I hope your subscription list will increase tenfold."

W. E. Henry, Zig, Mo., writes:

"Be assured that I prize the paper in its enlarged form. With Jesus in my soul, the Bible, Religious Telescope, and the Cynosure, I can accomplish a good work in the strength of the Lord. My struggle is hard, but by the blessing of the Lord you may expect more money, and perhaps, soon, subscriptions for your valuable paper."

James Andrus, Amboy, Ill,, writes:

"I am eighty-one years old. . . I feel to pray for the success of our cause, and am fully satisfied it is eventually to succed, or our country is doomed to become a monarchy."

He orders fifty cents' worth of extra copies of the Cynosure containing a report of the Syracuse Convention to circulate among "persons who need to be informed what their duty is, and learn to take a paper that will be worth more than all the Republican and Democratic papers they can find to read."

B. Williams, Warren Ill,, writes:

"I am doing all I can to circulate Antimasonic papers and tracts; but the people in these parts are so infatuated with secrecy that, having eyes, they see not; ears, they hear not; and hearts, they do not understand. They will hiss at you and call you a silly fanatic, and meddling about that which is none of your business. I shall keep up work and if possible increase the circulation of your or our valuable Cynosure."

Jas. P. Rogers, Auburn, Kan., writes:

"Dear brethren of the Cynosure, I have received the extra copies sent me, and have distributed the same, and have been making some efforts to get subscribers. . . . I think there can be something done after a while. In fact I have the promise of one subscriber. The movement is in its infancy here. I do not know as there ever was anything said about it until since I came here last winter and circulated a number of Cynosure tracts, and shortly after my coming, a Brother Shepherdson, of the Wesleyan Church, held a protracted meeting and gave the dark orders a waking up, or rather an opiate, as they have made but little stir since the close of the meeting; and a number of the best men that were in the lodge have ceased to be active, and some of them say that a Christian has no need of its assistance. I would to God that all had the moral courage to do the same, not only to leave these dark abodes of the devil, but denounce the order and sound the alarm to keep others out of this terrible trap for destroying souls. All of these dark orders are of the same spirit. The grange is stealing away time, money, and worse than all that, man's and woman's independence of character by binding them to keep a lot of worthless secrets and submit to the childish nonsense of initiation into the lodge. God being my helper I intend to do what I can to stop this terrible scourge upon the church and world. There are some that see no harm in the grange; but anything that is carried on under the vail of impenetrable secrecy in opposition to the Saviour's command to let our light shine is not of God, and must therefore be of the devil, although it seems hard to say so. I refer to the institution and not to individuals because some good people belong to it. The only way is to work and pray. God will in his own good time overthrow all things that oppose his authority. May he hasten the glad time is my prayer."

A friend from Wis., writes:

"I am determined to do what I can for the reform. We had to lock horns with secrecy and try our strength to keep it from ruining our Sabbath-school. I have been wished a mobbing ever since giving out the tracts you sent me, and that by a preacher; but none of these things move me. I know in whom I trust."

We are glad to see the light struggling through to illuminate dark places. A friend from Texas sends four subscriptions at his own expense, renews his own, and writes:

"Masonry is all powerful here, and you must fight it secretly. I am a Mason and Odd-fellow both, but I detest Masonry."

Artemas Basset, West Chazy, N. Y., writes:

"I have tried to get a new subscriber but failed."

"Try, try again."

Rev. J. S. Rice, N. Pownal, Me., seems determined to have as wide a circulation for the Cynosure in his State as possible. He has sent us twenty-one subscriptions since the fourth of May. In his first letter containing names, he wrote:

"I shall do all I can for the Cynosure."

He means what he says. Others in that State are at work, and we wish to encourage them, and agents in other States by saying: Truth and righteousness needs your help in promoting this reform. The Cynosure is in great need of your earnest, intelligent assistance, and, as as a rule, almost without exception, cool, persevering and energetic effort meets with success.

Rev. G. S. Bascom, Peru, Ill., writes:

"The paper is proving an eye-opener to me."

Our letters are a source of great encouragement to us, and judging from their tone we conclude that they are a scource of pleasure to those who write them.

LESSON XXVI.—JUNE 28, 1784.—GOD'S MERCIES.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—DEUT. viii. 1-20. Commit 1-10 ; Primary Verse, 2.

1 And all the commandments which I command thee this day shall ye observe to do, that ye may live, and multiply, and go in and possess the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers.

2 And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldst keep his commandments, or no.

3 And he humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna, which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know : that he might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live.

4 Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell, these forty years.

5 Thou shalt also consider in thine heart, that, as a man chasteneth his son, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee.

6 Therefore thou shalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to fear him.

7 For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land, a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths that spring out of valleys and hills :

8 A land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig trees, and promegranates ; a land of oil olive and honey ;

9 A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack any thing in it ; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass.

10 When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God for the good land which he hath given thee.

11 Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day :

12 Lest when thou hast eaten and art full, and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein ;

13 And when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied ;

14 Then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God, which brought the forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage ;

15 Who led the through that great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents, and scorpions, and drought, where there was no water ; who brought thee forth water out of the rock of flint ;

16 Who fed thee in the wilderness with manna, which thy fathers knew not, that he might humble thee, and that he might prove thee, to do thee good at thy latter end ;

17 And thou say in thy heart, My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth.

18 But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God : for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant which he sware unto thy fathers, as it is this day.

19 And it shall be, if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them, I testify against you this day that thou shalt surely perish.

20. As the nations which the Lord destroyeth before your face, so shall ye perish; because ye would not be obedient unto the voice of the Lord your God.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

Israel was about to exchange the desert for a land of abundance, and would be in great danger. God causes them to look back over the past, and gives them warnings for the future. This chapter is like the key to some arithmetics. The answers are written here to the hard problems they had before received. So we shall know all by and by.

What is our lesson called? Have you ever tried to recall the blessings of God? How many have you had during the past quarter? Name the twelve lessons. Give the Golden texts. Repeat the text for this lesson. What is the principal topic?

What is the first topic? How much of the way had God led them? What reason does God give in verse 2? Did not God know their hearts? Who did not know them? How can we find out what is in our hearts? How does God speak of our hearts? (Gen. vi. 5; Jer. xvii. 9; Matt. xv. 18.) Suppose you found out that you were sick, what would you do? If you have a bad heart what can be done?

What is the second topic? Who had humbled them? Who fed them when they were hungry? How long did their clothes last? How many grew foot-sore? Why did God allow them to grow hungry? Did you ever have anything of your own to feed? Did you enjoy it? How many years did God continue to bless them? What does God say in Deut. ii. 7?

What is the third topic? What relation does God acknowledge to Israel? How is it proved? Who does a father have a right to punish? If he is a good father why does he punish his child? If you saw a man punishing a child whose child would you think it was? If you see Christians suffer do you think it is because God hates them? What does God wish us to keep? Spell keeping-the-commandments in one word.

What is the fourth topic? Where was God leading them? Name the fourteen things God said about the land. What does God say they would do after they had been in the land? Read the rest of the chapter.

LESSONS. The knowledge of ourselves ought to lead us to know God. When we know him we ought to trust in him. When we reach the good land we shall bless God for all the trials by the way.

Thy Needs.

BY ETHEL GREY.

"When I first entered the Sunday-school as a teacher," said a friend to me, only yesterday, "I fancied that nothing could be easier or more delightful than to instruct a class of children in the truths of the Bible. I was sadly mistaken. I have found it to be work, nothing but work, and oh, the hardest and most discouraging work." For my part," observed a lady who had listened with interest to the remark, "I dread the work. I've been out of the harness for some time, and, while I feel that I ought to put it on, I yet fear to make the attempt. I never before so much realized my own needs. It seems to me that a Sunday-school teacher needs so many qualifications in order to be fitted to do the work successfully." Both of these friends are Christian workers; both sincere in their utterances; both, certainly, imbued with a sense of great responsibility of a Sunday-school teacher, yet, evidently, both were forgetful of the precious promise so cheering and comforting—"My God shall supply all your need."

Have you need of wisdom? "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth liberally and upbradeth not."

Do you say you have need of patience? Consider the patience of God.

Do you lack earnestness? Remember the time is short.

Have you not sufficient forbearance? Think again of the Scripture which saith "Forbearing one another and forgiving one another, . . . even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

Do you feel your need of self-denial? Reflect "Even Christ pleased not himself."

Do you say "I compare so unfavorably with others in my manner; I lack address?" Dear friend, the Bible has its word of instructive helpfulness for you—"Be pitiful, be courteous."

"But, you urge, "I have so little faith. This is my great need." Read the eleventh chapter of Hebrews and take heart. Remember it shall be unto you even as your faith.

"But I do not love my work. I fear, after all, my chief need is love." Then indeed sore is your need. Without love you are nothing. With it, Christ strengthening you, you can do all things. Having love, it seems to me you may have all these other qualifications. For "love is the fulfilling of the law."

The promises are sure. "As thy days, so shall thy strength be." You may have many needs, but He in whom all fullness dwells, is faithful to supply them all.—Nat'l. S. S. Teacher.

Farm and Garden.

Birds and Bugs.

The etomologists, or bug-hunters, who go about hunting butterflies and bugs, are an institution. Their business is to study the nature and habits of insects, and the necessity of their work is shown by such facts as are to be found in the reports to Congress.

The 'army worm,' after it had given but little trouble for a hundred years, destroyed millions of dollars' worth of grain in 1861. The wheat midge and Hessian fly destroyed several million dollars' worth of wheat in New York in a single year. It is said that Maine could raise 100,000 bushels of wheat a year but for the ravages of these two insects; and the loss to the Southern planters by the 'cotton-boll worm,' the 'army worm,' and the 'chinch bug' is enormous. The 'wire worm' alone consumed in one department in France nearly a million dollars' worth of grain, and caused deficient harvests for years. In Germany whole forests were consumed by the larvæ of a species of worm, and thousands of fir trees had to be cut down. These are facts that make entomology an economic study. The agriculturalist classifies insects into friends or foes of his crops, as they are carniverous or herbiverous. The work of protection is well done by birds. In France the government extends its protection even to buzzards and rooks, because each of the former consume about 6,000 field mice yearly, and the latter an incalculable number of white worms. In Hungary, and afterwards in Prussia, to the discomfiture of Frederick the Great, the sparrows were found to be the farmer's best friend.

Over fifty species of insects prey upon cereals and grapes, and as many on our field crops. Thirty well-known species ravage garden vegetables, and fifty attack the grape vine, and their number is increasing. About seventy-five species make their annual onset upon the apple tree, and as many upon the plum, pear, peach, and cherry. Over fifty species infest the oak, twenty-five the elm, seventy five the walnut, and one hundred prey upon the pine. Each year witnesses the attacks of new enemies. The killing of insect-eating birds steadily increases noxious insects.

Cleanliness in Milking.

So much has been said and writen in regard to cleanliness in milking, and it is so obvious that milk which is to be used for, or to be manufactured into human food should be perfectly clean, that it seems almost superfluous to call attention to the subject. But in spite of all that has been said, filthy practices creep into use. One of these is milking in the rain or when the cow is so wet that the water will run down her sides and drip into the milk pail. The hair and skin of the cow are covered with accumulations of perspiration, and to soak these up aud rinse them down her sides into the milk, is as injurious as it is filthy.

Another defect sometimes occurs from not thoroughly cleansing the teats and udder before commencing to milk. A thorough brushing is always necessary to get off the loose hairs and dirt, and if the teats have become otherwise filthy, they should be washed, but not milked till they are dry. A pail of water and a cloth should always be at hand for this purpose. When milking is done in a stable, there is sometimes a neglect to provide absorbents to soak up liquid excrement, and to prevent spattering. This is both a violation of cleanliness and wasteful. It can be easily guarded against by the use of straw, saw-dust, dried muck, or something of the kind. Still another filthy practice is that of drawing a little milk into the hand and wetting the teats with it before beginning to milk. Some milkers insist that this is not uncleanly; to which is only necessary to reply that any person whose sense of neatness is so obtuse as not to discover, without argument, that the practice is a filthy one, is unfit either to milk or work about a dairy.

Besides objections on the score of filth, the first milk drawn contains so little cream and so much saline matter, that it makes the surface of the teats dry and harsh, and inclines them to chap. If, after the milking is done, the pail is set aside and the teats wet with some of the very last strippings, that are little else but cream, there would be less objection to the practice.

To mention in detail all the points that offend against cleanliness would be tedious. They must, for the most part be left to the milker's sense of neatness, which certainly ought to be of an appreciative character. Uncleanly milking is quite too common. If all the milk of which butter and cheese are made could be taken to the dairy-house as undefiled as it exists in the udder, the price of those luxuries would be at once materially advanced.—Canada Farmer.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samnel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hnndred pages just issned by him, purporting to give a full and accnrate acconnt, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all abont that event which made such a sensation throughont the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to he, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acqnainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his acconnt is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"Tho Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abdnction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What hecame of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actnally Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

A NEW WORK OF GREAT INTEREST.

SECRET SOCIETIES ANCIENT AND MODERN,

By GEN'L J. W. PHELPS.

240 Pages, handsomely Printed.

This new book is one that every man should read who wishes to be posted on the character and influence of Secret Societies.

The work is particularly commended to the attention of Officers of The Army and Navy, The Bench and The Clergy

The "Table of Contents" is as follows:

,'The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Filmore's and Webster's deference to Masonry, A brief outline of the progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, The Credit Mobilier Ring, Masonic Benevolence, The uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion."

Notices of the Press.

Secret Sooieties, Ancient and Modern: An Outline of their Rise, Progress and Character with Respect to the Christian Religion and Republican Government. Edited by General J. W. Phelps. Chicago: Ezra A. Cook & Co.

The author traces back the origin of Masonry and its evil influences, particularly as seen and felt in our own country; the Tammany Ring, Credit Mobiler, &c. He shows the subserviency of some of our public men, such as Fillmore and Webster, to its dominating power. If read dispassionately it will do good.—United Presbyterian.

The author has presented information concerning the Old Mysteries and their antagonism to Christianity; the Masonry of Washington and his virtual secession from it; the harlotry of Masonry, English and American, in assuming charge of international politics, and treaties between England and the United States; the disgusting intervention of the lodge at the close of the Freneh and German war; the Masonic baptisms; all these and more Gen. Phelps has given, accompanied with clear philosophical dissertations of his own.

OUR SUBSCRIPTION LIST.

We have called a report of the Cynosure circulation, "Our" subscription list; but we are glad to feel that the pronoun "our" refers not only to the editors and publishers but to every friend who reads the paper and is trying to promote the reform which it advocates. And the more keenly our friends realize that the success of this reform depends, under God, upon their individual effort, the more success will attend the Cynosure and the cause generally.

The last time the mail list was counted (May 26) it numbered 4,607. On June 15th the number is 4,780. The average daily gain is a little less than nine subscriptions. This report is not so good as it ought to be. The Cynosure in its present form deserves and must have a wider circulation. Notwithstanding economy during May, it lacked one hundred and fifty-two dollars of paying the current expenses. This does not frighten us, but it leads us to the conclusion that we must deny ourselves a little more and work a little harder during the rest of June and through July and August.

Illinois has Cynosure subscriptions in seventy-eight counties and has more than any other State, eight hundred and eighty-five. What is the least she can afford to do for the paper this summer? Every responsible person who desires to promote the reform is authorized to act as agent. Are there not four hundred and forty-two of the Illinois subscribers who can send in one new subscription this summer! Let Illinois do her duty to the Cynosure between this time and the time of the next presidential election and the vote which she will cast for upright men at that time will certainly be worth counting.

Ohio stands next on our list. Six hundred and ninety-nine Cynosures now go that State.

What will these do for the Cynosure? A little help from every one accomplishes much in time.

Indiana stands third. She has five hundred and twenty-five. The fourth of last November Mr. Kiggins, the State Agent wrote: "I am going to make an effort to get one thousand Cynosures into Indiana by next year this time." He called on all who favor this cause to do their utmost to help accomplish this result. There are yet four months and a half to finish up this work in and we intend to let you know how well you have succeeded at that time. One man in the State has sent in more than sixty subscribers from a part where money is scarce. In view of this fact is it asking much of five hundred to send in five hundred more soon? Do not fail to make the number a full thousand by next November,

New York has the fourth place on our list. Iowa the fifth. Wisconsin the sixth. Michigan the seventh. Michigan reports more than 20,000 members of the grange.

Friends, do not let the granges work harder than you do. Vermont has the eighth position as regards numbers. Missouri the ninth. Kansas the tenth. Minnesota the eleventh. Connecticut the twelfth. Massachusetts the thirteenth. Is she contented to hold this rank? We ask her fifty-seven Cynosrue subscribers to answer. Colorado has the fourteenth place. California stands next. Then comes Oregon. New Jersey has the seventeenth place. Nebraska the eighteenth. Maine the nineteenth. West Virginia and Washington Territory stand together with nineteen subscribers each in the twentieth place.

We have reported these fully now, as the summer has fairly opened, and intend to tell you the relative position (as regards Cynosure subscribers) of the various States on the fourteenth of September, when the fall has fairly opened. Will you not do all you can to extend the influence of the Cynosure in your respective States and Territories in that time?

We are just issuing two thousand copies of the Minutes of the Syracuse Convention in pamphlet form. We hope this report will be carefully read all over the country. The speech of Chas. W. Greene on the evils of the grange as alone worth all the book costs.

Price single copy, post paid, is twenty-five cents; two dollars per dozen.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

Every one nearly expects to spend a little money about the Fourth of July in honor of our National Independence. It is well to observe that day in a sensible manner. Cannot our auxiliary associations opposed to secret societies have picnics or excursions and if possible provide a speaker to show the evils of secret societies? If you cannot, have some good reader read one of the many valuable addresses that have been already published either in tract form or in the Cynosure. Will you not make it the especial business of the day to canvass for Cynosure subscribers? Provide yourself with Cynosure tracts and subscription papers in advance. It would be an appropriate time for dissatisfied members of granges and other secret societies to sign declarations of independence from their despotic rule. We will be glad to publish any such declarations if sent to us. Let us spend this National holiday in a manner befitting a free, Christian people.

All interested in American Colleges will be pleased to read the new book prepared by Henry L. Kellogg, showing the efforts which are being made in the country for the suppression of college secret societies. We trust through its influence these efforts will be multiplied.

The price of a single copy is thirty-five cents, fifteen dollars per hundred. Expressage extra.

We ask all who have Cynosure publications on sale to use as much vigor as possible in disposing of them. The Fourth of July will be a good time to press their sale in some localities.

Topics of the Time.

TWO MORE CONVENTIONS.—The Republican Conventions of Illinois and Indiana have come and gone. The main questions before them were on the financial and liquor issues. The attempt of the Illinois delegates seems to have been to avoid taking any position on either of these matters. That it succeeded admirably is evident from the fact that the St. Louis Democrat, N. Y. Herald, and Cincinnati Inquirer, think they favor inflation, while the St. Louis Republican, N. Y. Tribune, N. Y. Times, and St. Louis Globe are equally sure they declared for honesty and hard money. This is a fair sample of present political work. Our statesmen have no views on public policy which cannot be changed to accord with the sentiments of the voters of their district. Senator Logan is the father of the "Black laws" of Illinois, a code as dark and bloody as the similar one of South Carolina. He has been for several years shouting himself hoarse over the liberation of the slave. He went into office on a platform promising the country hard money and fair dealing. He has been doing his best to aid speculators by further paperizing the mediums of exchange. He will now do anything or be anything that promises future success in office begging. The Convention at Springfield, influenced by him and Representative Farwell have put out a two-faced platform hoping to fool both temperate men and drunkards, speculators in gold, (i. e. thieves) and working men to vote for its candidates. The Indiana Convention seems to have been affected in the same way to a less extent, as evidenced by its cautious endorsement of Morton and its declaration for "local option," "damages" and the existing temperance law. Is it not plain that we have no parties at present save parties of office beggars? that the affairs of the country are managed by men who if they should be awakened at midnight (or in the morning) by a movement of the people, would in their robes de nuit, streak for the nearest fence and sit on the top rail until they could guess which side would have the largest crowd, when they would scramble down and shout, "We were always on this side; send us our clothes and we will make you a speech?"

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.—The Senators of the United States have passed a bill by which any newspaper having an authorized correspondent or agent in any State, Territory or the District of Columbia, may be sued in any Federal Court having jurisdiction over the territory where that correspondent lives and be summoned by service of process upon this agent or person having business relations with the paper.

The operation of this law would be as follows: If Gen. Grant should get drunk; Gen. Butler steal telegrams; Secretary Richardson, Assistant Sawyer and Solicitor Banfield conspire with Sanborn to defraud; Alexander R. Shepherd rise by his native genius from "a poor plumber boy" to the champion robber of the District of Columbia, all these things to come to light on the first day of May, 1874. And further, if on the same day it should be ascertained that the Collector of Customs at New Orleans, New York, San Francisco and Chicago were Masonic robbers of the Treasury. And once more, if the correspondents of the N. Y. Tribune should send the facts in each case to that paper and they should be published in it; then the N. Y. Tribune might be made defendant in six libel suits in the city of Washington, and one each in four cities named, to be tried if the courts pleased on the same day, before juries composed of Government dependants, with no appeal possible except to the Supreme Court of the United States. It requires no argument to prove that the strongest newspaper in the United States could be killed in less than five years by this law and the persecutions made possible by it. Congressmen are quite accustomed to boast of the investigations that have resulted in the discomfiture of a few of the blood-suckers of Washington. Now if they will point to one such investigation that took place before the newspapers demanded it, time and again, they may escape the accusation of attempting to abridge the freedom of the press; though they cannot escape that of gross ignorance. Congressmen know that the reforms would never have been made without the persistent demand of the press. They know that this bill could have no other effect than to render freedom of speech on public men and matters impossible. The men who in the Senate voted for it are subverters of the Constitution they have sworn to uphold. It will be perfectly safe to watch such men.

RESPECTING AN ESTABLISHMENT OF RELIGION.—The movement to expel delegate Cannon from the House of Representatives because he has more than one wife has failed. Our representatives have decided that the polygamist can stay but that no others may come. This action means one of two things; either that Mormonism is not a religion, or that it is and one who practices this religion cannot be a territorial representative. If the first is the true meaning, the act is unconstitutional because it is one respecting an establishment of religion. For if Congress has power to say that Mormonism is not religion and must not be practiced it may go through the entire list of denominations. For the right to say that one body of religionists are no religionists involves the right to declare that other bodies are not, and when they have excluded all but one, it is the religion of the country. If they do not say that Mormonism is no religion they do say that one who practices this religion must be excluded from a certain office because he does so. In other words they require a religious test as a qualification to an office under the United States. This also is forbidden by the Constitution. What then ought these Congressmen to do? Why, to say in the Constitution, by amendment of the preamble or otherwise: "The Christian religion is the fundamental law of the United States. The God of the Bible is the God by whom we swear and to whom we owe allegiance. Men who worship false gods and practice false religions are thereby disqualified for offices of honor or profit under these United States." When this is done you can stand on firm ground and refuse to admit Mormons to Congress, or worshipers of the joss-house. While the Constitution remains as it is all such endeavors are hostile to its letter and spirit and will be as futile as the laws already passed prohibiting polygamy, which everybody knows are a dead letter.

THE CORNER-STONE.—The Masonic brethren are seemingly a little troubled at the petitions against their prospective impertinence over a Chicago Custom-House. A note in the Chicago Journal lately said in a grumbling undertone that so far only one hundred and sixty Masons had decided to take part in the exercises. A little while ago we were told that twenty-five thousand Masons with patches of white linen over their stomachs were to take part in the work, and now one hundred and sixty are to do so. "Oh! what a fall was there, my countrymen!" There will doubtless be more than that number. Certainly such great and good men as Reynolds, Logan and Hurlbut, should understand printing and inflation well enough to get out something of a crowd. If they come, why will they come? Because Masonry is in a decayed condition in Illinois, and something must be done in the way of parade and show to impress the ignorant and bring in money from ambitious, weak young men. The order has tried the "silent-tongue, faithful-heart" dodge and is losing on it. The Cynosure is steadily increasing its circulation and influence. Men are beginning to speak out all over the country. Secret societies of every sort are more and more corrupt, and they must strike. They have already so far as possible gagged the churches, but are not gaining power in that direction now. They have begun to throw Anti-masonic papers out of the mail (the writer has written proof of this statement) and are putting Masonic men into every Post Office and Custom-House that they can reach. At Wheaton a maimed man was put out and a Mason put in lately, and similar instances are common.

The leaders, such men as Pike and Mackey, have nothing to lose, and we are entering on a desperate struggle which will be settled when honest men and open measures are victorious, or when the dream of Cæsarism has become an awful reality and the lodge has throttled the Republic. There is no possible communion between light and darkness, between Americanism and the dark despotisms like Masonry, Jesuitism and the Internationals. Be wise then in time. This Chicago Custom-House is the point where secretism makes her first advance. The protest of fourteen thousand AMERICANS is already recorded. Thus far all is well, but we must be active and vigilant. Freemasonry and its like live only in the dark, they die in the light. Let there be light from one hundred thousand Cynosures, from ten thousand tracts and tongues and the dark dens will be vacant. The honest deluded victims of the lodge will shake off their bonds, one more triumph will be achieved, and then, —we will take the field against the next great wrong.

THE SYRACUSE CONVENTION.

UNPUBLISHED REMINISCENCES OF THE MORGAN TIMES.

BY ELDER DAVID BERNARD.

Every Christian is or should be a faithful witness for God and the truth. As my age and infirmities indicate that my time of giving testimony will soon expire, I embrace the opportunity now given to testify of some things which may have a bearing upon the doings and results of this Convention.

Some of the facts you may know already. Of these I may only confirm your faith or refresh your memories. But I may speak of some things which you can only know from my lips, as of all who once knew them I alone am left to tell you.

Of my nativity I will only say I was born in Utica, Oneida county, New York, on the 24th day of December, 1798. Most of my early life was spent in Utica. Some part of my time was spent in clerkships and in teaching school. A portion of my minority was occupied in reading law with the Hon. Felix Grundy, of Nashville, Tenn., and a part of my time was occupied as a student in Columbian College, at Washington, D. C. I was baptized in Utica, licensed to preach the Gospel in Utica, and in Utica I was made a Freemason. The motives urged by my Masonic friends for my union with the order were very plausible. They said that Masonry was a moral institution, benevolent and religious. They said that the order embraced in its membership men of the greatest intelligence and highest respectability in all parts of the world. They said that if I should become a minister of the Gospel, which I then had in view, it would be of great benefit and doubtless insure my success. That infidel Masons would attend on my ministry and aid in my support. They said that if I should become a Mason it would render my pathway through life more desirable and greatly augment my usefulness. And they said also that a knowledge of Masonry would aid me in expounding the Word of God, and gave me for an example Rev. ii. 17: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." They pretended that this secret name was known and could be explained only by Freemasons. That the initials on the key-stone, H. T. W. S. S. T. K. S. indicated the name and was given to the candidate in this degree. But this is all "gammon" as the sequel proves. We often see these letters on the jewels of Mark Master Masons worn upon their guards, or watch chains, or bosom pins. And I sometimes read them to these wise Master builders, and they always acknowledge, directly or indirectly, that I know that much of Masonry at least, "Hiram Tyrian Widow's Son Sent to King Solomon." Wonderful light this, isn't it? Shining from Masonry upon the Word of God like an unlighted tallow candle shining on the sun! And you have to swear thirty-four times before you get high enough to understand the import of these wonderful, mystical letters—and they prove not to be mystical after all—the solving of which would not give you one ray of light from God's Word, leaving you after all the light that Masonry affords in the condition of a "numskull with his finger in his mouth." But they had another inducement. In view of my becoming a clergyman I should have it all free of cost.

But I had an objection still. They imposed oaths with penalties on all their members, and I had conscientious scruples against swearing in any form. But they disposed of this by their short method, "lying." They said that no oath would be required of me! And I yielded, and thus I was caught in an evil net. Thus was I snared in an evil time. And thus I, a young man, an aspirant for clerical robes and an immortal crown, was seeking companionship and fellowship with infidels. And now behold me semi-denuded, hoodwinked and cable-towed, and on my knees invoking the name of the Lord Almighty and swearing extra-judicially, with no sanction or authority of national or Divine law, and, consequently, profanely. Swearing all along at every step of the way. In the first degree, three times; in the second degree, six times; in the third degree, seventeen times; and in the four chaptoral degrees, forty times; making in sixty-seven times I swore profanely in taking the first seven degrees of Masonry. And no one is excused. All who ascend the Masonic ladder seven degrees, descend as far as sixty-seven profane oaths will take them in sin. And with a "so help me God" to back up and sustain the oaths of each degree. And this claims to be a moral institution, the handmaid of religion!

When I came to the Royal Arch degree and to the point in the oath which obligates to aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when engaged in any difficulty, and espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same if in my power, whether he be right or wrong; and to the point to keep his secrets given to me in charge as such, I knowing them to be such, murder and treason not excepted, I stopped and objected to the oath. Whereupon a number of my friends gathered around me and gave me the assurance that it was all right, and that all would be explained to my satisfaction at the end. But no explanation was ever given me. And the reason was there was none to give. And I know of none in Masonry. And if there were any I ought to know it, for I have taken forty-eight degrees of Masonry from the highest Masonic authority; all the unwritten degrees of the Blue Lodge and Royal Arch chapter, in due form, under the sanction of an oath with death penalties; and all the Ineffable degrees from the Grand Commander of the Lodge of Perfection in Schenectady, where they were conferred under the sanction of an oath; making eighteen degrees Masonically and thirty degrees of a higher grade in manuscript from the same Grand Commander, and one of the Sublime Princes, without an oath. And every Royal Arch Mason knows I testify truly when I affirm that the oath of that degree obligates to aid and assist a companion Royal Arch Mason when engaged in any difficulty, and espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same if in my power, whether he be right or wrong, and to keep his secrets when committed in charge as such, I knowing them to be such, murder and treason not excepted; or, as in some chapters given, "without exception," which is the same thing.

And I became more and more dissatisfied with Masonry, and saying this to a high Mason he assured me that what I had received was but the shadow of the thing, and founded on the Old Testament, and that in the Ineffable degrees which were founded on the New Testament I should find the substance. And that if I should go on I would be satisfied. And I did go on, and I was satisfied with a vengeance, for I found that every step I took I got deeper and deeper into the mire. In other words, that as we ascend the Masonic ladder we descend in degradation, moral corruption and death.

Take some of the penalties for example. In the first degree the penalty is death.

In the higher degrees the penalty is death in more terrible forms. For example, the penalty of the Royal Arch degree is having the "skull smote off and the brains exposed to the hot rays of the sun." In the Knight of the Red Cross it is "having my house torn down and the timbers thereof set up and I hanged thereon, and when the last trump shall blow that I be forever excluded from the society of all true and courteous Knights." In the Knight Templar's fifth libation: "This pure wine I now take (from a human skull, remember) in testimony of my belief of the mortality of the body and the immortality of the soul. And may this libation appear as a witness against me both here and hereafter, and as the sins of the world were laid on the head of the Saviour, so may all the sins of the person whose skull this was be heaped upon my head, in addition to my own, should I ever knowingly or wilfully violate or transgress any obligation that I have heretofore taken, take at this time, or shall at any future time take in relation to any degree of Masonry or order of Knighthood, so help me God."

Yes, I was satisfied that Freemasonry was all a hoax; a big sell; the devil's trap; the biggest humbug the world ever saw. I made up my mind that I had been sold, and that every man who had taken the first oath in Masonry was sold, and that there was no escape from the snare but by renouncing and denouncing it forever. And I did that very thing. And a clean sweep I made of it you may well believe, death penalties to prevent, notwithstanding.

In the month of August (I think it was), 1826, about five weeks before the abduction of Captain Morgan, I met the Rev. E. M. Spencer, of Middlebury, Geneva Co., N. Y., and he informed me (of what I had before heard) that one William Morgan, of Batavia, was writing, with a view of publishing, the secrets of Masonry. He said that it was the greatest piece of depravity that he ever heard of, and must be stopped; Morgan must be disposed of, put out of the way. He should be willing to be one of a number to do it; "to lay him up to dry." "Why, God looks upon the institution of Masonry with so much complacency he never would bring the perpetrators to light!" Mr. Spencer was a highly respectable clergyman, pastor of the First Baptist Church in Middlebury, and principal of the Academy in that village. We had some discussions in the public journals and he, finding himself in the wrong, backed off the course. Years afterwards he came to my house humble and penitent, and I freely forgave him all he had ever said or done against me. And I asked him to preach in my pulpit, which he did a number of times, and with much acceptance. I saw him again in Jamestown, cold in death. It was at his funeral, in his coffin, going to his grave, to his long home.

I mention this case of Mr. Spencer (one of many) to show the infatuating spirit of Masonry. Its blinding, hardening, alluring, overwhelming influence. To show how intelligent and good minds can be overcome by it. Indeed, this spirit is a strong element of its power, and this renders it the more dangerous, for it lures but to destroy. Indeed, this fascinating, seducing spirit is so subtle that the captive don't know when he is caught; nor by what means he is caught; or that he is caught at all. Nor does he realize that he is held a willing captive in the coils of a fell destroyer whose enchantments are fatal and whose victims are many. This captive is like a man sold to the devil and don't know it. Mr. Spencer did not know that he was sold to the prince of darkness and the power of the air, and was led captive at his will. He did not know that Freemasonry had made him a murderer at heart. He was "willing to be one of a number to put him out of the way!" What an expression for an intelligent, learned and highly polished minister of Christ! Willing to put Morgan out of the way! To "hang him up to dry!" There was no mistake about his meaning. He meant just what he said. And he was in character one of the fairest of the fair; the observed of all observers. I never knew a man who was in common life more pure; the last man in western New York to be suspected of murder. And if he had taken the Ineffable degrees in due form, he had sworn to do substantially the same thing, or what was equivalent to it. And he had taken the oath of the Royal Arch Mason. He had sworn to aid and assist the murderers of Morgan if they were Royal Arch Masons, and to espouse their cause so far as to extricate them from difficulty, whether they were right in his murder or wrong. Every Royal Arch Mason was under the same oath to do the same thing if in his power. If arrested, those murderers of Morgan must be delivered from the sheriff; if in prison awaiting their trial for murder, they must be delivered from jail; if on trial, they must be delivered from the court room; if tried, found guilty of murder and under sentence of death, they must be delivered from the jury's verdict, from the sentence of the judge, from the hangman's cart and the hangman's halter. If there is power enough to deliver the murderers it must be done, and by Masonic law. And if Benedict Arnold and Judas Iscariot were among these murderers they must be delivered if they could give the grand hailing sign of distress of a Royal Arch Mason; delivered they must be if power to extricate them is possessed by the Masonic arm.

And the murderers of Morgan were delivered by Masonry. One of them came to New York city and in open lodge confessed his crime of killing Morgan, and asked for help to escape to England. They responded to the call of their good brother in distress, opened their arms to receive him graciously; opened their purses and paid his passage to England, and sent messengers with him out to Coney's Island and put him on board of a vessel for Liverpool, as they were in duty bound to do as good brother Masons.

So says Col. Stone, of New York city, a Knight Templar, in his "Defense of Masonry."

The introduction of Elder John G. Stearns' book, and Captain Morgan's "Illustrations of Masonry" were of great service. They did much good in enlightening and waking up the people. And the churches in western New York took hold of the subject with a strong hand, especially in Genesee county. The church in Pavilion, Elder Bernard pastor, led on the battle. Masonry was put in check and the combat commenced. The pastor, sustained by the majority, arraigned the Masonic members and a large council was called. The result of the council being in favor of truth and righteousness, discomfited the Masons. Charges against Masonry were made and sustained. The battle was long and the fight a hard one. But the truth was prevalent and victorious.

As this document may be called upon at a future time it is well perhaps to say that the result of the council was simply this, to-wit: "The Anti-masons were to give the Masons of the church a copy of our charges against Masonry and they were to have the privilege of employing some minister as counsel, and reply, and we to reply to them and the council to be called together again and resolve and consult in view of the whole thing, the charges against the order, the replies and rejoinders, &c., &c. We accepted the result and offered the Masons a copy of our objections to Freemasonry. But they did not think it best to accept the result of the council, so we kept the copy and put it on file for the next rainy day. Our sky was clear then; our sun was bright; all things indeed were propitious; heaven and nature smiled, and now order and purity reigned in the house of God.

But not so among the oath-bound brotherhood. In the lodge measures were concocted to put down ecclesiastical domination and destroy the influence, at least of the man who had the affrontery to stand up against the order of Hiram the widow's son (who sent to King Solomon). And now lodge meetings were called and I felt it important to attend, but, as true as you live, it seemed a little like going into the lion's den! For lightning gleamed from every Masonic eye. The mutterings of distant but coming thunder were distinctly audible on every hand. While the spirits of Morgan, Murdock, Miller and others, sighed in the breeze, and Masonry, with its usual brazen front, bloody hands and murderous heart, stalked stately across the valley unwhipped of justice.

Yes, I said, I will go up to the battle, and I will go armed. But it must be with Christian armor. The Lord must be my "shield and buckler." "I shall not be greatly moved. In God have I put my trust." "I will not be afraid what man can do unto me." For God is my trust. "They that trust in the Lord shall never be confounded." Amen and amen. Lord, help me this once. And he did.

The meeting was called to order by the Worshipful Master, who very graphically announced the object of the meeting which he said (if I remember rightly) was to harmonize the minds of the members on the subject which was creating some feeling, the abduction of some man who had been writing with a view of publishing what purported to be Freemasonry. And it was important that there should be harmony of views and feelings on the subject among the craft.

A very mild and gentle beginning for such an ending as we had. Like an April shower before a hurricane. But the storm soon commenced and increased and became horribly interesting. In the most emphatic manner I spoke of Morgan's abduction and murder as against law, order and justice. That it could not and would not be endured. I was asked what right I had to speak freely and openly as I had done in Pavilion. And I answered them plainly. I was asked what I had against Masonry. I replied: "In the first place," said I, "read or repeat the Master Mason's oath." And they did. A bright Mason was called upon who gave it correctly. When a Mason can repeat the oaths and lectures readily and correctly he is called (though a dough-head or a knave he may be as a man) a bright Mason. But if he is not well posted in his memory of the secrets, the oaths and lectures of the order he is called rusty. This man could repeat the oaths and obligations readily and correctly. He was, therefore, as I said, a bright Mason. When he came to the words: "Furthermore, do I promise and swear that a Master Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as in his own when communicated to me, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own election;" "That will do," said I. "The candidate swears to keep all secrets—all criminal secrets must be included, save murder and treason, and these he is bound by his oath to keep if he thinks it best—left to his own election." "That will do," said I, and they commenced discussing the subject. They were divided. Truly they appeared muzzled. "You ask me what right I have to speak freely and openly of Masonry. The right of opinion, the freedom of speech, and the liberty of the press, are dear-bought privileges. Our God gave them, our fathers fought for them. I inherited them with my first breath, and I will only lose them with my last. The Masons have killed one man. Now let them kill me if they dare. But lay your hands on me at your peril. Touch a hair of my head and your lives will be taken. The community is aroused, and order, law and justice will be maintained."

And they "caved!" A hundred strong men in the wrong cowed before one man in the right. "They did not think it best to kill me just then."

But Elder Leonard Anson arose and took strong grounds for Masonic laws, oaths and penalties. He said that if he should see any man writing Masonry he should feel it his duty to stop him. That as cities and churches had their laws, with a right to inflict their penalties, so Masons had their laws with the right to inflict the penalties to them, and the lodge is the place to try a Mason. And he said that if Morgan had been writing Masonry and his throat had been cut from ear to ear, and his tongue was torn out by the roots, and his body was buried beneath the rough sands of the sea at low water mark where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours, he could not complain of not having justice done him. Amen, amen, amen, was the audible and emphatic response all round the room. And it would have amused you to have seen their eyes all glaring with vengeance turned towards me. To put their looks into words I need but repeat the langurge of Mr. Williams, the son of a Baptist clergyman of Utica—it was in the house of God. He put his fist in my face, saying with a vengeance, "Damn you, you ought to be sent after Morgan." But they did not think best to kill me just then. For, though Morgan was dead, his soul was marching on And I went out from among them, turned my back on "that proud temple to destruction doomed."

That lodge room was a fine hall then; the welcome resort of a hundred guests of Hiram, the widow's son.

Now it is deserted; a dreary habitation of bats and rats and vermin of the leper grades, and not a living man to do it reverence.

In a short time after I left the room a gray-haired Mason arose and said: "Brethren, Elder Bernard can write and he will write against Masonry, and we must put him down." "Amen," was the audible approval. And they turned me out of their synagogue—after I had gone out. And they immediately published me in all the world as an expelled member, for unmasonic conduct, for speaking against Masonry. And in so doing commended me Ask you what provocation I have had to testify of Masonry as vile, corrupt, accursed, bad? Humanity degraded and murdered by it; the wife a widow made, and children fatherless; the Bible profaned and Christ rejected; the grace of God ignored and another gospel proclaimed to man, and which is not another. But Freemasonry would destroy the Gospel of Christ. But Christ lives, and because he lives those who believe in his name and do his will shall live also.

But nearly all that body of Masons are gone. The high priest, the master, the tyler who carried the sword that did not cut my throat from ear to ear, and Elder Leonard Anson, who justified in a full lodge of worthy and well qualified Masons, the death of Captain Morgan for writing the secrets of the order, with the Entered Apprentices, the Fellow Crafts and Master Masons, and Mark Masters, and Past Masters, and Most Excellent Masters, and Royal Arch Masons; for some of all these grades were there, with Knight Templars—all are gone to the grave to await the resurrection morning and the judgment of the great day.

Among the very few that still remain is one of the two that stood by me in my hour of peril, David Snow, one of the immortal 103 names of seceding Masons who signed the Declaration of Independence from Freemasonry July 4, 1828. In his character for truth and integrity he is true as steel; pure gold tried in the fire; an Anti-mason of forty-eight years, and still lives. Honor to whom honor is due.

I went to Batavia, but Morgan was not there; for Masonry had gone before me, and Morgan was dead. The myrmidons of the order had struck him down with the poniard of Masonic vengeance. They had sunk him beneath the dark waters of the Niagara. But his bereaved family, his lovely wife and sweet babes were there. I saw them in the light of day. I saw them in all their freshness of youth and beauty. Lovely as spring flowers. And they were lovely in their weeds of mourning and tears. And I believe in my inmost soul that they were alike lovely, both mother and children in their innocence and virtue. Mrs. Morgan in character was pure and unspotted as the Virgin of Bethlehem; without taint or blemish or any such thing, till the serpent came; spotless as the snow-flakes, until the hydra-headed demon of hell appeared. He hissed. His sibilant voice was heard, and she felt the wound. Felt it in her widowed, bleeding heart and soul. But I must leave her in her tears and sorrows to mourn herself a widow and her children fatherless. Made so by Freemasonry. But after a suitable time a respectable citizen of Batavia espoused Mrs. Morgan as his honored wife, and she proved herself to be what she really was—a crown of glory to her husband. No pearl ever lay under Oman's green water more pure in its shell than her spirit with his.

The inference drawn by the order that the Masonic murder of Captain Morgan was justifiable because Mrs. Morgan was surmised by his murderers to be of doubtful purity, was only in the logic of Masonry found, and that of Satan's coining. And this proves the "deep damnation of his taking off." For doing what the laws of his country justified him in doing, and the law of high heaven required at his hand, these hell-hounds of Masonry murdered a free citizen; murdered the patriot father; murdered the kind and loving husband.

But I went to Batavia to obtain Captain Morgan's book, and calling at Col. D. C. Miller's office, where it was printed, I found the doors locked and the office guarded by pistols and muskets and cannon all loaded and the inmates ready for defence.

The office had been attacked and fired and they were on the look out for another Masonic raid.

Mr. Scranton, the deputy sheriff, introduced me to the printers and the door flew open at my approach. My position on the subject of Masonry had reached Batavia, and they were glad to see me. They asked me into the office and requested me to examine a copy of the "Illustrations of Masonry" by Morgan. Not a copy had been issued from the office. I gave the work sufficient attention as to be confident that Morgan was a bright Mason and had made a correct expose of Masonry. I purchased the copy I had examined and Mr. Scranton paid for it. The dollar for the book was sent to Mrs. Morgan with the message that it was for the first copy sold, and that it had been examined by Elder Bernard, a Royal Arch Mason, and found to be all right. And I said to the printers, "It is all right; go ahead."

This was the first copy of the work which cost Wm. Morgan his life. And you have a transcript of that book of Morgan with the typographical errors all corrected in my Light on Masonry. It is Morgan's revelation as he wrote the degrees in Batavia, and they are as I received them in the lodge in Utica, and as Colonel William Williams for me in Utica published them.

The most interesting, the most important, the best thought of my life—save the one great thought of Christ and him crucified for sinners, revealed to me and in me the hope of glory, and for all the world who will receive the gift, without money and without price—was the conception of "Light on Masonry." The one is the Balm of Gilead, and the Great Physician there. This is "the treasure hid in the field." This is the "pearl of great price;" and this is "the hope of the world both now and forever." And for this I have labored and toiled in nineteen States and for more than fifty years; and if the good Lord would give me life and strength I would delight to kiss his feet, bear his cross and glory in his name a thousand years longer. Yes, yes, yes, and forever more. Amen.

And against the sin of Freemasonry, the devil's masterpiece, the deceiver and the anti-Christ, as revealed in "Light on Masonry," I have unwaveringly borne testimony for forty-eight eight years, enduring the persecutions of the wicked and enjoying the smiles of the Lord all the way through.

It may not be uninteresting to this Convention to know that I have been a regularly ordained minister of the Gospel in the Baptist church for more than fifty years, and employed nearly thirty years of that time as pastor of fifteen different churches, three of them city churches, one of them in New York and twelve of them village and country churches; and fifteen years in agencies for the Bible and Bible societies. And it has so happened by the grace of God that I never have had the least charge of immorality brought against me before any tribunal, civil or ecclesiastical, in all my life.

But do not for one moment suppose that I intend to say this boastingly. I do not. For, while I confess that I should have been perfect, I acknowledge I have not been immaculate. But by the grace of God I am what I am. And if I have ever had one pure thought, spoken one good word, or done one good act, it has been the fruit of grace divine through Jesus Christ my Lord.

I am a life member of the N. Y. Baptist State Convention, of the Am. Baptist Home Missionary Society, of the Am. Bible Society, of the Am. Baptist Union, and a life director of the Am. & Foreign Bible Society, and also of the American Bible Union.

I have labored in many revivals in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Ohio, and with much success. And for all this, life, health, strength and prosperity, to God, Father, Son and Spirit be all the glory, now and forever.

But I am authentically informed by letters from Missouri that the Masons in that State affirm that there is no such person in the world as Elder David Bernard, author of "Light on Masonry." One said to my friend Mr. Root, who had a copy of my book with him, "the man who wrote that book is dead; the Masons would not suffer him to live." "Well," said Mr. Root, "I see Elder Bernard every day when I am at home. He lives directly across the road from my house." The Mason in Missouri could not see how that could be. He could not account for it. We, in the East, can: there is a God in Israel.

But for the edification of those who never saw me and don't believe in my being, I will say that I hold in my hands, open to the inspection of the curious and the unbelieving, a diploma, signed officially and sealed, commending me to the favorable notice and protection of every Free and Accepted Mason on the globe. This diploma is from the lodge in Utica, dated May 15, 1822. And I hold a letter from John Q. Adams, dated Washington, July 8, 1841, thanking me for publishing "Light on Masonry." And many gentlemen know that Mr. Adams made my book the basis of many letters to Colonel Stone and Edward Livingstone, Secretary of State of the United States, giving Masonry such a dressing as it had never received before.

I have said that next to the Gospel of Christ the great desideratum of my life has been the giving to the world "Light on Masonry," and chiefly because Masonry opposes the Gospel. I regard it as the great enemy of Christianity, of the Bible and of the Church of God. And this is no fancy. I am not certain if II. John, 7th verse, "This is the deceiver and the anti-Christ," as given by the best modern scholarship, is not the true and proper rendering of the passage. The question then arises, Who is it? or What is it? Barnum called his unique animal "What-is-it," for he could not tell what it was; and he made money by his own ignorance and the stupidity of his patrons. Now put this animal on the table and dissect him, analyze him—all the parts—and he comes out a monkey. Nothing just like him, that's true. He is unique, but a monkey after all, even to the tail.

Look at Masonry! Look up to it. Look down upon it. View it from every stand-point that is possible. Analyze all its parts separately or together; and can you tell what it is? Is it Christianity? It has the Bible. Yes, but it has the Koran also; and it has the Shastas as well; or anything else you please that will corrupt your will and bind your conscience. Anything that will make you subservient to the dominion of Masonry. No, it is not Christianity! It is bound to destroy that. It has sworn to do it!—"which Masons are bound to fight against and destroy." That is its language and that is its purpose and that is its spirit.

Is it Judaism? It has the Jewish costume, the mitre of Aaron, his breast-plate, his rod, his robes, the pot of manna, the Ark of the Covenant, the Old Testament, the burning bush, Solomon's temple? But Judaism has circumcision, covenants of promise, burnt offerings, and (had) a Saviour to come, which were fundamental with the Jews. Masonry has none of these. It has no sacrifice for sin, but the blood of its victims—of men—which is unclean and murderous; as the blood of Morgan and Murdock and others, which is unappeased and cries for vengeance. Cries to the God of truth and justice—not in vain. Masonry has no Saviour, past, present or to come. Nor has it any god, but the cold-hearted, deistical god. Masonry has no "God my Saviour;" no "Lord my Redeemer."

No, it is not Christianity; nor Judaism. Nor is it the "hand-maid of religion;" for Christianity is the only true religion and that needs no hand-maids. She can do her own work and will. Nor will she admit of any twin sister to the family. She ignores all such relationships. Hear the voice of the great Captain of our salvation: "I am God, and beside me there is no Saviour." "I have trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with me." This is plain and needs no commentary. "Mine own arm brought salvation," saith Jehovah Jesus. All the Bible, missionary, tract and publication societies are his servants. But among them all Masonry has no place. Nor has she an angel to proclaim her character or mission. Secret her name, character and mission; but now she is unveiled. She is secret no longer. Now she is revealed. Her character and mission are known, and proclaimed upon the house-tops. This is the deceiver and the anti-Christ.

But again, What is it? for here is the square and the compass; the common gavel and the plumbing line and the tressel board; the hood-wink and the cable-tow and a coffin; "Jacob's Ladder" and the "Burning Bush" of hemlock and tow; the "skull cup" of wine and the mallet and the chisel; the oaths and penalties; imprecating death penalties and damnation penalties and hand-cutting penalties and ear-cutting and tongue-splitting penalties! And there are the Entered Apprentices and the Fellow Crafts and Master Masons and Mark Masters and Past Masters and Most Excellent Masters and Royal Arch and Knights of the Red Cross and Knights of Malta and Knight Templars, Knights of the Holy Sepulcher, Knights of East and West, Knights of the Eagle, Knights of the Sun, Princes of Jerusalem, Sovereign of Sovereigns, and Deputy Sovereign of Sovereigns of Sublime Princes, Princes of the Royal Secret, and Sovereign Inspector Generals of the 33d Degree. And then there are representations of the four winds by four old men with inflated beeve's bladders under their arms. And then there is the representation of the apostate's doom in a lake of burning fire, human beings as monsters engulphed in flames; and the candidate is gravely told that the scene is but a faint representation of what he shall suffer in case of his apostacy or in case he violates the obligations he has taken.

Then, on the other hand, there is a representation of a Mason going to heaven to the right hand of God, having washed his robes in his own blood! And then again some are so elevated as to be distingushed by a badge upon which is inscribed "King of Kings and Lord of Lords!" Is not this like the man of sin, described by Paul in 2 Thess. ii. 4, sitting "in the temple of God showing himself that he is God?" And a great many more which I have not the time to memorize or the tongue to repeat.

But what is all this that begins in folly and profanity, goes on in degradation and deism and ends in blasphemy, murder and death. What is it that tramples the cross of Jesus under foot? that makes the Bible a play thing, giving different interpretations to the same sacred volume and by the Bible swears men and binds them to do things which that holy book forbids? What is it that sends the bald headed infidel to heaven through his own blood? What is it that inforces by oath and obligation a restricted and partial virtue upon some and gives a plainly implied license to immolate the chastity of all others? that puts the Mason's mother, wife, sister and daughter in the parlor of virtue and purity and leaves all other ladies out in the cold? (See Master Mason's oath.) What is it that declares that one degree of Masonry will prepare a man for futurity? What is it that declares religion to be "an idol," a "serpent," the "daughter of hypocrisy," which Masons are bound to fight against and destroy? And, finally, what is it that, while the Bible affirms that "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ," and that there is "no other name given under heaven among men whereby we can be saved" but Jesus Christ,—what is it makes itself a liar by saying there is? by saying that the mystical use of the common gavel can do it? the mystical use of Jacob's Ladder can do it? that "an attachment to the statutes and rules of the order" will make Masons deserving of entering the celestial Jerusalem? What is it that gives God's Word the lie? rejects Jesus Christ as the Saviour, does despite to the spirit of grace, counts the blood of the everlasting covenant an unholy thing, and sends men to perdition? The Apostle Paul says he is "accursed." Jesus Christ says, "He that despiseth me despiseth Him that sent me;" and the Apostle John says, "this the anti-Christ that denies the Father and the Son." "This is the deceiver and the anti-Christ." Who or what does this more plainly or more positively or perniciously than Freemasonry? And why all this multiplicity of machinery to accomplish moral, benevolent or even religious objects, if such were had in view? Why is this diversity of material, this complexity, this "hotch-potch" mixing? this mixing of the common with the uncommon, the puerile with the important, the sublime and ridiculous, the laughable and the grave, the foolish and the absurd, the repulsive and the attractive, the moralities and the immoralities, the chaste and the impure, the vulgar and the refined, the reverent and the impious, the terrible and the cruel, the degrading, humiliating, the profane, the blasphemous—and these not all? Why all this but to conceal, allure, divert, distract, overcome and destroy? What but in the language of Illuminism to "destroy all governments and all religions?" And of Christianity especially it said, "Crush the wretch."

And this is the great, the terrible, the accursed design of Freemasonry.

It is anti-Christ, body, soul and spirit; anti-Christ from the centre to the circumference; from the foundation to to the topstone. Yes, what is it if not the deceiver and the anti-Christ?

How much of the old serpent there is incarnated in this mystery of iniquity! I don't know, but if Masonry is the body of this incarnation, then, as Christ became incarnate to destroy the works of the devil, so Satan has taken the body of Masonry to destroy Christ and his kingdom. But let this be as it may, it is certain that "God works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform." And it is certain in my mind that as God destroyed the old world by water and slavery by blood, so he will destroy this mystery of iniquity by the "spirit of his mouth and by the brightness of his coming." The time and manner of his coming I leave with Him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will, and will, if it please God, work for him while the day lasts. The night comes when no man can work. But remember Jesus has said, "Every plant which my heavenly Father has not planted shall be rooted up."

My glorious Lord, I'll work for Thee,
For Thou didst bleed and die for me.

In making my arrangements for the publication of "Light on Masonry," at Utica, I called on the Rev. N. N. Whiting, pastor of the Baptist church in Vernon, Oneida Co., N. Y. Prof. Whiting, as he afterward became, was a graduate of Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., in both departments. He graduated in the college proper with honor. He then read law and was admitted at the bar and commenced practice, professed religion and returned to college and went through a theological course. He entered the ministry and was ordained by a large council as pastor of the Baptist church in Schenectady. My acquaintance with Mr. Whiting commenced in 1823, and he was my bosom friend until, in 1872, forty-nine years after our acquaintance and friendship commenced, he passed to the house of many mansions. Prof. Whiting was elected and acted as President of the Collegiate Institute, of Plainfield, N. J. He was a great Bible student; was a profound Greek and Hebrew scholar; and could teach thirteen languages. He was one of the revisers of American Bible Union. A perfect gentleman in his deportment, modest, retiring and unassuming; strictly truthful, conscientious and of unwavering moral honesty. Of his sincere piety, deep and abiding, I have no doubt. And had he had half the tinsel he possessed of pure gold he would have been, as a gentleman and scholar, a star of the first magnitude.

Prof. Whiting was a very high Mason; one of sixteen, the highest save three in the world. These three are Sovereign Inspector Generals of Masonry. Masonry has divided the world into sixteen parts, and appoints a Deputy Sovereign of Sovereigns of Sublime Princes over each of these parts, and three Sovereign Inspector Generals over the whole earth. These are Sovereign Inspector Generals of the 33d degree.

In 1826 the Rev. Dr. Frederick Dalcho, of South Carolina, was one of these three Sovereign Inspector Generals of the order. With him were deposited the written manuscripts of Masonry (all above the Royal Arch are written) of all the higher degrees. When the Lodge of Perfection at Schenectady was installed Dr. Dalcho furnished the manuscripts. He copied them from the original records for that lodge and gave Mr. Yates of Schenectady, the Grand Commander, the eleven degrees for that lodge, and all the rest. Mr. Yates held them in connection with Prof. Whiting for some years. They had them in possession alternately. As Mr. Yates was at the head of the lodge for whom they were written he held them most of the time. But when not in the hands of Yates, they were held by Whiting. When I called on Whiting, Mr. Yates had them in possession; and not until then did I know that any such manuscripts were in existence. I indeed had supposed that my cup was full already, for I had the first three degrees of the Blue Lodge from the pen of Captain Morgan, and sealed with his own blood! And I had the four chaptoral degrees and the degrees of the Cross and Encampment of the Knight Templars from the report of the convention of one hundred and three seceding Masons at Leroy, N. Y., and the eleven Ineffable degrees which I had from the Lodge of Perfection, making twenty-three degrees of pure and unmixed Masonry, and from undoubted authority. I felt well, but little thought I was destined to be the depository or medium through which all the treasures of "Solomon and Hiram the Widow's Son" were to flow to mankind! Rather through which and by whom this lady of the night, and of the darkness, and of blood should be unveiled, and this great harlot of Hades be brought into the light of the unclouded, mid-day sun. Brought out, denuded of all her jewelry, her silk, lace and pearls, and now can be seen with her hood-wink, cable-tow, skull-cup of wine, and dreadful poniard of Masonic vengeance. Seen in all her fulsome nudity, breathing out profanity, blasphemy and death; and belching forth fire and brimstone and double damnation on all of her simple-hearted and honest-minded victims, who refuse to obey her laws and disobey her mandates. Don't think I am painting. I am not. I don't deal in furbelows of speech, nor speak in the language of hyperbole. John Quincy Adams called the inside of Masonry made bare in my book, "the execrable secrets" of Masonry revealed. In other words, that I told the world what an accursed old hag Masonry was, and he commended me for it. And, believe me, I think of it with great humility, and I say it with much diffidence, that if the good Lord ever approved anything that I have ever done for him or his truth or his kingdom, he approved of my publishing to the world the "execrable secrets" of Masonry.

When I entered the house of my friend and brother, Whiting, although knowing his views were all in favor of Masonry, and that he was one of the highest Masons in the world; and remembering that I had taken the higher degrees of Masonry at his suggestion and by his aid; and knowing, too, that he knew as well as I that we were now antipodes on Masonry, and possibly might become violent belligerents, yet I had no misgivings. I knew he had the intelligence, the learning, the piety, the knowledge of Masonry,—every thing in advance of myself, save truth, common sense, conscience and God. On the great question at issue I knew, I KNEW I was right. No hesitancy, no tremblings. Not a bit of it—but a perfect confidence in the truth and righteousness of my mission.

We met in love. The Master was with us. Mr. Whiting knew I was about to publish my "Light on Masonry." I told him all about it. He was not angry; nor was I. We opened the subject, pro and con. The questions at issue were: 1st, Is Masonry wrong? 2d, should Masonry be revealed? 3d, are the oaths of Masonry legally or morally binding?

The first question—Is Masonry wrong?—I gained without a flesh-wound; for he helped me. He said casually and rather confidentially in the course of remarks, that a revelation of the upper degrees of Masonry would do more to pull down Masonry than all the lower degrees which I was going to publish could do. "How so?" I asked. "Why, they are anti-Christian." "Indeed! Well, then, upon your own showing Masonry must be wrong." And so there I had him. "Masonry is wrong is it? I have gained the first point I think; and gaining that I have gained the second also, for it cannot be maintained that wrong should be concealed." He gave up both points. But there the third point was involved in the other. But on this came the tug of war. He was fastidiously conscientious on the keeping of oaths and promises. We had a long and hard battle on this point. I took the ground that extra-judicial oaths to do wrong were neither legally nor morally binding. And that such an oath should always be broken. And I contended that the existence of Masonry depended on the keeping of its secrets inviolate. If its secrets were kept it would continue and we should be responsible for the evils which would flow from its continuance.

He was intelligent, learned, conscientious and pious; an astute lawyer and a sound theologian. And after about three day's and night's discussion, I laid my hand upon his heart and conscience, and appealing to his better nature, asked him if he was willing to cherish an enemy to the Bible, to the church of God, to the Lord Jesus who had bought us with his own blood? or would he aid in destroying this great reptile from the earth? I cannot tell you half that was said, but the battle was won and the truth was victorious. "I can help this cause now; I may not have another chance." And by this servant of God Mr. Yates was gained, and though not willing to assume any responsibility in the matter, was willing to give up the manuscripts to Mr. Whiting to dispose of as he thought best. And my good brother Whiting thought best to loan them to me, and to me for publication. I copied them carefully as I could; and I thought best to give them,—as I had nothing else to give—and myself for the life of the world; taking pattern from my glorious Lord.

You can find all the "secrets" of Masonry up to the thirty-third degree as I received them, and as I have here testified, from the hands of the Rev. Dr. Frederick Dalcho, Sovereign Inspector General of the thirty-third degree, through the hands of the Grand Commander, Mr. Yates, of the Lodge of Perfection in Schenectady, N. Y., and Rev. Prof. N. N. Whiting; and if intelligence and learning and piety and official standing as a Mason, and a correct knowledge of Masonry are essential to authenticity and belief, then we have full and reliable evidence from the testimony of the Rev. N. N. Whiting, as given by the testimony of Elder David Bernard, of the truth of the higher degrees of Masonry as revealed in "Light on Masonry," by Elder David Bernard, Grand Elect Perfect and Sublime Mason.

And now is it not a matter of congratulation that this Convention is in the possession of Masonry in its details as given in the lodges in this country, from the first to the thirty-third degree, obtained from the highest and purest and the most authentic and reliable sources of Masonic authority and knowledge in the world?

Address of Rev. D. P. Rathbun.

Mr. Rathbun on being introduced to the audience said he felt deeply such sentiments as those just sung. He rejoiced that he was born and reared in a land of freedom, and his soul had never been bound by fetters of any kind long. He had been persuaded to join the Masonic fraternity, but had enough of it in the Blue Lodge; he never went beyond the third degree.

We must not deceive ourselves with regard to this institution. We have a foe that is strong. Some great men told us that the late war would be short, that there would be no hard fighting; but what sacrifices were made ere it closed! Who can tell how many martyrs there will be for the truth before Masonry will be put down! Some tell us there are good things about Masonry, and pat the creature a little so that the hard things said of it may not hurt so badly. But this is a mistake. It must be given up. We must learn that Masonry is darkness and nothing else. Mackey says, that as a secret society Masonry has existed for centuries, but as an open institution it would not live as many years as it has centuries. When men say that individuals enjoy the presence of God in connection with their Freemasonry, I believe them greatly mistaken. The institution is darkness itself and must perish in the light of truth. I believe that such assertions are putting a weapon into the hands of the enemy. Any man may see if he will that the institution is anti-Christian in every particular. In his own experience he remembered that he did not enjoy religion while a Freemason. He knew he was not honoring God; and not until he left it forever he got the clear light of heaven upon his soul. He could not understand how a man could practice concealment as Masonry requires and have the favor of God.

Some object to the use of severe language against Freemasonry. But we must apply the truth without fear or favor. You may put your heel on a mud turtle and he will not stir, but put a coal of fire on his back and out come his legs and off he crawls. So we must apply the truth boiling hot on Freemasonry. It cannot be affected with gentle measures. Common truth will not touch it. It must be hot enough to scald. Ministers of nearly every denomination are connected with the institution, and were so filled with its spirit that they do not hesitate to tell bare-faced lies. Their lives were full of hypocrisy in the sight of God.

The speaker had been persecuted by the lodge because of his firmly maintained position against it. One seven-degree Mason who had been severe in his persecutions he had seen repent on his death-bed. This Mason has been a bitter opponent of all efforts to enlighten men on this subject, but when he came to die he called for Rathbun. I went to his bedside and he begged me to forgive the persecuting spirit he had shown towards me. His dying request was not to let the lodge bury me with Masonic honors. They would not come near me in my sickness, with my consent they shall not after I am dead. But the Masons did come and took the dead man almost by main force, in spite of the dying request and the protest of the family. The Methodist minister who was assisting in the outrage walked with the Masonic procession laughing and joking on the way to church.

We are told that we must live Masonry down. Be pious and shame them out of it. Such an attempt would be like the Irishman trying to cure his dog of barking by freezing him to death. Masons always laugh at such efforts. I am opposed to Freemasonry because it binds the tongues of otherwise free men. A Mason will hardly speak of the institution in the presence of its enemies lest he lose his precious jewel. Shame on any American citizen who dare not reply to an objector. who dare not defend his practices and yet holds to them.

Masonry professes to cleanse a man from all sin, as says Mackey. Even the Methodist church will hardly claim to make a man perfect through Christ, but Masonry does without him, of its own power. The lodge is of the same spirit as in the days of Morgan, vindictive, murderous. It had manifested this spirit upon his own person, in efforts to kill him by dragging him through a mud hole, and by firing upon and wounding him from a thicket. This old ox has gored many a young man in his left breast. Masons make it their first business to smite with the tongue of slander. May God help us all to stand firm for his truth whatever may befall. Men cannot harm us. Let us be fearless for Christ.

The Weapons of our Warfare.

ADDRESS BY PROF. C. A. BLANCHARD.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

In order that we may plan for the future, we must carefully study the past. To understand what to do, we must know what has already been done. The careful sailor wishes to know his present latitude and longitude as well as the destined port. What then is the present state of the reform against secret associations?

We have learned that our enemies are very numerous and very strongly entrenched. They are counted only by hundreds of thousands. They include every class in society from the most respectable to the most debased and dangerous. There are, in their ranks, men, women and children, and they are united by a principle of selfishness which is stronger than any other except the love of Christ. They have for their wall of defense the worthy individuals who have been deceived into a seeming sanction of them, and for weapons of offense the bad men who almost, if not always, control them.

These armies of secrecy and darkness, so numerous, so firmly united, so strongly sheltered, and so frightfully officered, are really, (many of them blindly) entered on a campaign, which ends in their own dissolution or our national death. It matters not whether as Jesuits they swear allegiance to a Pope, as Masons or Odd-Fellows to a Grand Lodge, or as members of the Ku-Klux Klan to Satan. It is unimportant what regalia they select or in what words their obligations are couched. They belong to the kingdom of darkness, and darkness is inconsistent with light. They belong to the domain of secrecy, and secrecy is the friend of vice, not of virtue. They all trample upon the example and commands of Christ, and most of them cast out his name and gag his friends while under their influence.

Not satisfied with assassinating Christianity under the pretense of friendship, they give false balances to justice and take the sword from her hand to hide it in the lodge. As these secret orders increase in numbers and wealth, social ties are relaxed, and divorces are multiplied, thieves who steal largely snap their fingers at the judge, and murderers laugh in the face of jury and jail. Forty years ago Masonry defied the whole legislative and judicial power of New York State, and lately a college secret society murdered a young man in the night; and so demoralized is public sentiment that the society that caused his death was not suppressed; and young men are still permitted to attend the institution where it exists. Teaching deception, hypocrisy and fraud; binding to partial benevolence and honesty, swearing to the concealment of crime and the protection of every villainy. These orders taken as a whole are a fearful conspiracy against men, and a wicked rebellion against God, which must be revealed and restrained or certain ruin is the result.

That they do not at once produce their entire results on men or society, is unquestionably true. So also it is true that the dam on Mill River had held back the waters for years. It was one hundred and twenty feet through at the bottom and sixteen feet across at the top—people had lived before it in perfect safety for many days. But all the while little streams were doing their work in the hidden places, and the restraining power was undermined. Then the angry waters rushed down the valley in an awful wall thirty feet high. The flood bore in its foaming mouth, factory, house, man and woman and child, and when the night came the homes were empty, and the wail of broken hearts went up towards the watching stars.

So we may pile our dam of morality and public sentiment against these waters of bitterness and death. We may seek to restrain in our courts of law the takers and receivers of extra-judicial oaths, and we may hope for the best. There is danger even then, and when these orders have demolished the flimsy barrier of a secretized manhood, they will sweep away the Christian church, overthrow civil government and murder those whom they cannot enslave.

This, then, is the enemy we are called on to meet. The tiger of human selfishness restrained by the tow string of human prudence. Even worse, we must follow the beast to his darksome den, for he shuns the sweet light as men fly from the plague.

But in our contest we have the certainty that we are on the side of Christ and this confidence is the earnest of victory. He shall reign until all enemies are under his feet, and though the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, they are mighty through God. Look back through the seven short years in which we have labored. See how Masonry and her kindred orders grew fat and flourishing. See how silent were the newspapers of the country, including the organs of churches opposed to secretism. See how universally men slept.

Then take the record of last year. Read the articles against secret orders in the New York Tribune, Watchman and Reflector, Scientific American, Chicago Times and Tribune, Springfield Republican, American Wesleyan, Religious Telescope, United Presbyterian, Christian Statesman, Methodist Free Press, Evangelical Messenger, Free Methodist, Covenanter and Presbyterian, Our Banner, and many others, while over them all shines The Cynosure undimmed by the smoke of two fires and clouds of Masonic curses.

See Finney on Masonry, the Broken Seal, Light on Masonry, Key to Masonry, Secret Societies; together with ten thousands of tracts going each on its message of mercy and instruction. Hear the earnest men who have many of them at the hazard of their lives defended and declared the truth; and as you see the descending showers and remember the long years of drought and the clouds smaller than a man's hand bow reverently and say, "Ah, Lord God; behold thou hast made the heaven and earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing to hard for thee.,

Looking then to the past and present, we need have no feeling in our hearts save joy and gratitude, as we turn to the future we should be inspired with hope and determination. The cause must grow, or it will cease to be a power; for when growth stops, decay begins. If we are to have a national movement we must have a national organ. We can have both the movement and the organ if we will do our part. The Cynosure has already a circulation national in extent. It must be made national in number. We need denominational papers in sympathy with this work and we need local papers as co-laborers in the field, but beside them all we need a strong non-sectarian newspaper, such as The Cynosure was and is.

One paper with one hundred thousand subscribers is far stronger in ordinary circumstances than ten with ten thousand each, as an army of one hundred thousand men could easily wipe out ten armies of ten thousand each provided the men were equal in courage and strength, and the ten are acting without concert. Let us then sustain the denominational organs which are right on this question and let us also raise The Cynosure list, so that the work in which we are engaged shall command the attention and respect of the entire American people.

I might justly appeal to the record of self-sacrificing labor which the conductors of this paper have made, but I do not do so. I am not pleading for them, but for God's cause. Shall we give this paper a circulation that will enable it and us to set before the world the fearful evils resulting from midnight conspiracies of weak and wicked men, or shall we be contented with many excellent papers, each of which has its own denominational interests to care for?

I am thankful every day for such noble witnesses for the truth as the Religious Telescope and American Wesleyan are and have been. I only speak the minds of the conducters of these journals, however, when I say, that this paper which has for six years, in the face of bitter hostility and such difficulties as few can comprehend, held its steady course toward the haven of a Christian republic, is needed by the tmen it has made acquainted with one another and by he whole American nation.

They intend to keep their own denominations pure, but they believe it is a good thing to come together once in a while and forget minor differences in a grand effort to lift the race up towards the light. So say I. So say well all. When the American flag was pulled down from Sumter, Abraham Lincoln did not call on every man to watch his own hen roost and pig pen. He called for seventy-five thousand men to maintain the honor of the United States. It is for this reason you a few days since went to their lowly tents and scattered the flowers of God over the dead of a nation. They did not die for themselves, or a section, but for America. None the less were they true to the hamlets where they were born. He who is true to his country, is true to his town, and he who is faithful to Christ, is faithful to humanity. This then is the work in which I am permitted to offer you a share. It does not appeal to your love of self or your demominational preferences. It will cost you money. It appeals only to your love of the Master and men.

To some of you it speaks strongly I am sure. I have been in your homes and have known of your tireless labor in defence of unpopular truth. All others I shall be glad to meet in so glorious a work. Let us then do a noble work for this noble paper. It has now four thousand six hundred and fifty subscribers. Let us make it another thousand to-night, and let us so labor in this cause that very soon it shall surpass in its circulation and influence the sheets which now favor and apologize for the lodge. Sustaining as we must and will all denominational organs hostile to these secret conspiracies, let us raise our National organ to a place from which it may speak with the enemy in the gates and turn back the tides of evil which almost unobstructed, swept our country a few years since.

The Sabbath School.

LESSON XXVII.—JULY 5, 1784.—THE BEGINNING OF THE GOSPEL.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK i. 1-11. Commit 1-11 ; Primary Verse, 11.

1 The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ the Son of God ;
2 As it is written in the prophets, Behold, I send my messenger before thy face, which shall prepare thy way before thee.
3 The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.
4 John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.
5 And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins.
6 And John was clothed with camel's hair, and with a girdle of skin about his loins ; and he did eat locusts and wild honey ;
7 And preached, saying, There cometh one mightier than I after me, the lachet of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose.
8 I indeed have baptized you with water: but he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost.
9 And it came to pass in those days, that Jesus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan.
10 And straightway coming up out of the water, he saw the heavens opened, and the Spirit like a dove descending upon him:
11 And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

What is the name of our lesson ? What does Gospel mean ? What names are given to the writer Acts xii, 12, 25 ; xiii. 5, 13 ; xv. 39 ? What event occurred at his mother's house, and what was her name ? This Gospel presents the Lord Jesus in the character of a servant, doing the will of God.

What is the first topic ? If the Gospel began with Jesus, could it have been before ? Who was John the Baptist ? (see home readings.) What is he called in verse 2 ? What did he call himself ? (John i, 23.) What was is message ? (Matt. iii. 2.)

What is the second topic ? Who went out to hear John preach ? (Matt. iii. 5.) What did they do ? (Matt. iii. 6.) By being baptized what did they say ? Who would not be baptized ? (Luke vii. 30 ?) The reason was, they would not take the place of sinners.

What is the third topic ? Where did Jesus come from ? How long had he lived at Nazareth ? (Luke ii. 39, 51 ; iv. 16.) We found out that people came to be baptized who were sinners. Then Jesus came to the sinners' place ; as if he represented them, or was identified with them.

What is the fourth topic ? What happened when Jesus was baptized ? Who was it that saw heaven open, in a dream ? (Gen. xxviii.,) and what prophet had such a vison ? (Ezek. i.) Never before had they opened like this. The reason is, Jesus stood in the sinner's place, and yet had no sin. Who descended upon him ? The Spirit came to abide in him ; Read carefully, John xiv. 16 ; Rom. viii. 9.

What is the fifth topic ? Whose voice was heard from heaven ? What did God say ? How many witnesses are here to testify of Jesus. Our lesson is an introduction to him. Do you know him ?—National S. S. Teacher.

HOW TO GET TEACHERS—It is always more difficult to get teachers for a poorly managed Sabbath-school than for one conformed to a high standard. Where teachers are permitted to be unpunctual and to neglect both their scholars and their lessons, it is rarely easy to obtain a sufficient supply for all the classes; but where punctuality is insisted on, and attendance at the teacher's meeting is made imperative, there is seldom difficulty in securing a full quota of good teachers. If you want more teachers, call on those you have to do better.—Independent.

Cost of Crime and Sunday Schools.

Judge Carpenter, of the Supreme Court of Connecticut, in an address before an educational institute, said of a criminal whom he had been compelled to sentence to the gallows, that the cost to the community of that man's crime, if viewed merely as a matter of dollars and cents, was enough to have met the expense of a liberal education for at least five young men. That case is one of many. Crime is expensive. Education is economical. A Christian training, which is likely to fit a man for a useful and a happy life, costs far less to the community, than the training which a rogue gets, while on his way to the prison or the gallows. Stephen Paxson, at one time, made careful inquiry into the expense incurred in the care, and trial and execution of a man, in Illinois, after his arrest for the crime for which he was finally hanged. He ascertained, that in the salaries of officials, the expenses of witnesses, the cost of the prisoner's keeping and the outlay for his execution, a sufficient sum was paid to have secured the organization of, say forty new Sunday-schools in frontier neighborhoods, or to have met the average expenses of a country Sunday-school of one hundred scholars, for a quarter of a century.

Even though not every Sunday-school boy is kept from crime, it is certainly true, that he is less likely to go widely astray with than without the religious training which the Sunday-chool affords, and it costs very little to give him this advantage. An average of, say one dollar a year for each scholar, is about what a Sunday-school ought to have now-a-days for its ordinary expenses. This small sum is probably more than twice the actual average of Sunday-school expenses throughout the United States. Ten dollars for ten years of Sunday-school training to a boy, seems but a trifling outlay. Yet there are churches which begrudge even this pittance to their Sunday-schools; and there are well-to-do people, in the vicinity of little neighborhood Sunday-schools, who think that music books, and teacher's papers, and teachers' papers, and scholars' papers, and the other necessaries and helps of a well-managed Sunday-school, cost a great deal of money in this extravagant age. A good Sunday-school does cost something. It cannot be run for nothing, even by volunteer teachers. But it costs less to the community, where it does its quiet work for its scores or its hundreds of boys and girls, for a whole generation of youth, than do the crimes and their punishment of one robber or murderer. Hardly anything that is done for boys or girls costs less than Sunday-school work. Hardly anything pays a better return, in its good results on their lives and characters.—S. S. World.

Home and Health Hints.

Care of the Eyes.

Multitudes of men and women have made their eyes weak for life by the too free use of eyesight, reading small print, and doing fine sewing. In view of these things, it is well to observe the following rules in the use of the eyes:

Avoid sudden changes from light to darkness.

Never sleep so that on waking, the eyes shall open on the light of the window.

Do not use the eyes in light so scant that it requires an effort to discriminate.

Never read or sew directly in front of the light of the window or door.

Do not read on railway cars or while traveling. The constant jar strains the eye severely.

Too much light creates a glare and pain, and confuses the sight.

The moment you are sensible of an effort to distinguish, stop, and talk, and walk, and ride.

As the sky is blue, and the earth green it would seem that the ceiling should be a bluish tinge, the carpet green, and the walls of some mellow tint.

The moment you are instinctively prompted to rub your eyes, that moment cease using them.

It the eyelids are glued together on waking, do not forcibly open them, but apply the saliva with the finger, and then wash your face and eyes with warm water.

A good way to clean paint is to smear it over with whiting, mixed to the consistency of common paste in warm water. Rub the surface to be cleaned briskly, and wash off with pure cold water. Grease spots will, in this way, be instantly removed, as well as other marks, and the paint will retain its beauty and brilliancy unimpaired.

TO MEND AND CLEAN KID GLOVES.—Turn them on the wrong side and sew them over and over in the ordinary way. They will last longer and look better, if mended on the wrong side. Turn them back again, and go over them with a clean towel dipped in skim milk, wearing them during the process and until they are quite dry.

If you should be so unfortunate as to crush a berry on a book or engraving, strike a brimstone match and let the fume come in contact with the stain, and it will disappear as if by magic.

CREAM FRITTERS.—Mix a pint and a half of flour with a pint of milk; stir in six well beaten eggs; add half a nutmeg; then two teaspoonfulls of salt, a pint of cream; stir the whole just enough to intermix the cream, then fry in small cakes; the addition of a few tender apples chopped fine improves the ritters.

CREAM BISCUITS.—Break six eggs, separate the yolks and whites, beat the former with six ounces of powdered sugar, and the same of flour, whisk the whites and then mix them together, add to it whipped cream in proportion to the sugar and flour, stir it carefully; pour this into moulds or paper cases, and bake.

Farm and Garden.

Kindness to Animals.

From the time the colt is born, he should be taught to regard man, whom he is afterward to serve, as his protector and friend. A human hand should first lift him gently to his feet, and direct his little mouth to the source of maternal nourishment. With the human touch he should thus early be made to associate caresses and a supply of all his wants. Instead of yells, and oaths, and kicks, and rude blows, he should hear only gentle, loving tones from the attendant's mouth, and pettings from his kindly palm. He should be taught to expect and watch for man's entrance to the stall or paddock where he is kept, as a dog waits for the coming of the master, as the season of joy and happiness. His little deer-like limbs should be handled, and he be taught to yield them promptly and without fear to the master's touch. In short, everything that loving ingenuity can devise should be done to impress upon his mind thus early in life that man is his natural protector and friend, between whom and him an intimate companionship has been ordained by benificent nature, which insures that he shall be protected and cherished while he serves. The horse has a heart claim upon us. The young colt is, in some sense a member of the family, one of the owner's household, second in rank and dignity only to the children. So the Arab regards him The beautiful young thing, with its shining coat and gazelle eyes and sprightly antics, so full of bounding, but docile life, is literally his children's playmate. He shares their food, and often their sleeping mat: and a blow dealt him is as promptly resented as if it had been dealt the oldest son, for whose service in peace, and safety in the hour of battle, the young thing is being raised.—From "The Perfect Horse."

WATERING CATTLE.—The Ohio Farmer says: Anyone who does not believe that the manner of watering animals has anything to do with the health and prosperity of the same, providing they have enough, has only to try an experiment with milch cows. Take two cows in equal health and flesh, and which give about the same quantities of milk, and while one is watered regularly early every morning out of doors, give the other in the stable water, at the same hour, from which the chill has been taken, and our word for it no futher argument will be necessary to convince the one who makes the test that the latter course pays. Cattle which remain out of doors day and night are not so susceptible to the chill of cold water, and, of course, are not affected so unfavorably by it.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, June 26, 1874.

THIS NUMBER contains the paper of Elder Bernard which will be read with great interest. To every worker in the reform it is worth twice the subscription of the Cynosure. Two of the addresses at Syracuse and a song also appear. Next number will contain Enoch Honeywell's paper and addresses by Baird, Rollins, Caldwell and Mrs. Gage, and the report of the political meeting.

Copies of the Cynosure containing any part of the proceedings or addresses will be sent for 2 cents per copy, postage extra at 4 cents for five papers.

FORMULATED CREEDS.—We shall publish at length the Religious Telescope's editorial on Formulated Church Creeds. It is decidedly the clearest, ablest and most candid writing on the subject we have lately seen. Our readers will think so when they read it.

THE "PLATFORM COLUMN" voted by the committee at Syracuse is now open. Everybody, man, woman and child, shall have their OPINIONS published, with their reasons, so far as one little column can give them. If found practicable the Platform Committee will meet at Indianapolis the third Wednesday of August, as voted, and a mass meeting of citizens held at the same time. If not, we shall report a political platform to the mass meeting held at Pittsburgh next year.

HON. GERRITT SMITH.—A note from this gentleman reminds me that his check for $100 toward the expenses of the Syracuse meeting, though mentioned in Convention, escaped the minutes. This is to be regretted, as Mr. Smith intended his contribution to answer for his speech, to say to the people of New York and the country that his abhorrence of the secret empire attempted in our midst increases rather than lessens with his years.

THE CORNER-STONE of the United States Custom-House, Chicago, is to be laid by Judge Drummond! The Chicago Journal calls this a compromise with the Anti-masons; but it is a surrender of the lodge to the gathering indignation of the American people. The thousands who have petitioned against this impudent attempt will hail this news with joy.

"THE AMERICANS."

STRICTURES OF THE RELIGIOUS TELESCOPE.

"President Blanchard, from the Committee on Political Action, reported in favor of the speedy organization of a political party to be called 'The American Party.' We regard this name as very unfortunate, since it is well known that the odious 'Know-Nothing' party was called also the 'American Party.' The name 'Americans' will have no other tendency than to alieniate foreign citizens and make a direct issue of nationalities. If the Christian Association is going to push into politics so soon, it should be very discreet about its methods and name as a political party. It is our opinion that our ultimate success in opposing the evils of organized secrecy will depend more upon persistent Christian action, than upon hasty political action. Great success has attended the seven years of the Christian work of the National Association. The folly of nominating a distinguished man for president and announcing him as a candidate, though he utterly ignored the nomination, ought not to be repeated. Let the agitation of this question continue. But let there be care that the good people engaged in the movement against secret societies do not even seem to be tending themselves toward secret organization by the adoption of a doubtful name, or by anything else. It is well known that not even the woman's temperance movement has been saved from untimely decay in many places caused by a swift degeneracy into secret leagues. Let all Christian workers avoid the very appearance of this corrupt tendency to do all things through the channels of secrecy."

We publish the above from the excellent Religious Telescope, with some feelings of wonder. The editor says, "The odious Know-Nothing party was called also the American Party." It was called "The Native American Party." That excluded foreigners. We hail and welcome them. And it is presuming largely on their stupidity to suppose they cannot at once see the difference; or on their prejudice to suppose that Americans by adoption, who have come here for the love of America, will object to the name, because the Know-Nothings misused it against foreign born population.

Then the Telescope is utterly mistaken in thinking that Hon. Chas. Francis Adams "utterly ignored" our nomination of him. He treated us as he did the "Liberal Republicans" and everybody else. That is, he thanked us for our confidence in him, but refused, as he has done through his whole consistent life, to accept or refuse any nomination from any body. His declared principle is, if elected to fill any post by the American people, to accept if he thinks he can be useful in that post. And in his eulogy on Secretary Seward before the New York Legislature, after our nomination, he left the public in no doubt about his principles when he stated that "The inconsistency of the principles of secret societies with popular institutions," placed Mr. Seward in the State Senate and in the Governor's chair.

Then the Telescope says: "If the Christian Association is going to push into politics so soon," etc.

At fault again. The Christian Association never intends to "push into politics" soon or late; but to oppose whatever distinctly opposes the kingdom of Jesus Christ. It holds civil government to be a divinely authorized league to repress crime and maintain civil order by force; a league in which the unregenerate children of this world have duties and rights. Therefore at Oberlin and at Syracuse, the National Christian Association adjourned and a simple mass meeting of citizens did the politics. True, as members of the Christion Association, we we do not lose our lights as citizens; and we do not wish to vote for Freemasons foresworn to the heathenism and despotism of the lodges. And so we encourage and help start a political movement based on the simple original American principles of known opposition to all man-made religious forms, and all "titles," "degrees" and "orders" which pack men in higher and lower castes. We therefore call ourselves "Americans" simply and solely because we are Americans, and the Declaration of Independence is our platform. All lodgemen and their jacks are foreigners by allegiance to secret clans, Masons, Odd-fellows and the like, which clans reach into other countries. While our allegiance is to American principles, American courts, and American laws; they belong to a secret empire extending around the globe.

For one I do not propose to be a political partizan, but an American, and if I meet an American who was born in Ireland, England or Germany, who will vote with me against the secret orders, he is more an American than I am, because he came here of his own choice while I was born here without being consulted.

It may be, I incline to think will be, that a political party opposed to secret societies will be formed. If so, I shall vote for its candidates as I voted with the Liberty Party and afterward with the Republican, till slavery fell. If there is a meeting in Indianapolis on the third Wednesday of August next, it will not be a meeting of "The National Christian Association," but a mass meeting of American citizens opposed to secret societies, called by a Platform Committee appointed by a similar mass meeting at Syracuse.

An exchange says that Dean Stanley, Cannon Kingsley, and one hundred and forty-four other ministers of the Church of England had their names appended to a petition that was recently laid before the House of Commons, asking for the opening of museums, libraries, and art galleries on Sunday afternoons, and declaring that this "is in accordance with the meaning of the Christian Sunday. It might be interesting to know how these respected clergymen define the "Christian Sunday." Perhaps the definition might be modified after a trial of their plan with such a measure of success as had the Mercantile Library of New York with open doors on Sunday for two years, and a final acknowledgment of failure. "The Sabbath was made for man" most truly, but for man in the highest and holiest sense of his being, not as a day for his amusement, or mere intellectual acquisitions.

GEO. W. CLARK, the old liberty and temperance vocalist, who has been singing at the Anti-slavery Reunion in this city, and last week at Wheaton College, entered the conflict against rum and slavery as early as 1832. He published the first temperance paper in Michigan, in the same office with Wm. M. Sullivan, who published at the same time a radical anti-slavery paper at Jackson in 1839. He is also a a radical old Anti-mason, dating back to the Morgan times. Mr. Clark was living in Rochester at the time, and was in the midst of the scenes and the excitement attending the abduction and murder and trials thereof, and was from that day an opposer of Masonry. The following article will show the position taken by him many years ago on that same subject, and which he still maintains:

[From the Rochester Express.]

SECRET OATH-BOUND SOCIETIES.

A public meeting was held at the Monroe Academy, Henrietta, Tuesday evening the 24th inst., and a lecture delivered by Geo. W. Clark, exposing the principles and practical workings of secret oath-bound societies, and calling on the public to arouse to a sense of their danger and their duty on this subject. At the close of the lecture, a Mr. Tuttle, a member of the Masonic fraternity, but who had recently embraced Christianity, came forward, exposed and denounced the order, certifying to the truth of Morgan's revelations, and earnestly warned all young men and Christians against them. At the close of the meeting, the following preamble and resolution were presented by Mr. Clark, and adopted with but one dissenting vote:

Whereas, Secret oathbound societies are founded in selfishness, and in violation of the laws which should govern human relations, making invidious distinctions in society, cherishing an odious caste, building up a powerful and exclusive order of men dangerous to the best interests of the commonwealth, controling freedom of thought and action, influencing elections, menacing the liberty of speech, of the pulpit and the press, subverting the course of justice and of law, endangering the stability and perverting the legitimate ends of government and of free institutions; therefore

Resolved, That it is the duty of every man and every woman, every friend of the equal rights of human nature, every friend of his country, of Christianity and of free institutions, to oppose the existence of such cabals, and to seek to obtain a legislative enactment, making all such secret and oath-bound societies unlawful.

If the 25,000 Masons, says the Aurora Herald, who expect to take part in the ceremonies of laying the corner-stone of the Chicago Post-Office will take hold and perform a little practical masonry, they could erect the building without much expense to the government. 25,000 days work by good masons would go a great ways toward finishing, if it would not wholly complete the structure.

MEMBER'S TICKETS.—At Syracuse a plan was devised for our work. The plan is this: Tickets of membership are issued to be sold at twenty-five cents each. When any person by the payment of this sum becomes an annual member of the Association his or her name, age and Post-Office address are written out in a book prepared for the purpose. Persons desiring life membership can have it by the payment at one time of ten dollars. Tickets will be sent to known friends of the cause who make application, and also papers for the enrollment of members names. Now let all who want to see the secret lodges overthrown set to work. Send at once for member's tickets and let us see how many we can get on record against the lodge. All application for such tickets and all lists of members should be sent to C. A. Blanchard, Secretary N. C. A., 11 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

The Charlotte Democrat, puts it in this way: "Secret business and political societies have nearly ruined and bankrupted France, and destroyed thousands of lives. Riots and mobs have been instigated in the Northern States by secret class societies. We are opposed to involving the people of the South in riots and bloodshed, and therefore warn the people against joining secret business or political associations. If the farmer is crippled, injured or deceived, we are also injured, and therefore we shall continue to warn the people against joining secret grange societies."—Anti-masonic Quarterly.

The Freedom of the Soul.

Sung by Mr. Clark before Elder Rathbun's Address.

The storm wind wildly blowing
The bursting billows mock,
As with their foam crest glowing
They lash the sea girt rock;
Amid the wild commotion,
The revel of the sea,
A voice is on the ocean:
Be free, O man, be free!

Behold the sea-brine leaping
High in the murky air,
List to the tempest sweeping
In chainless fury there;
What moves that mighty torrent
And bids it flow abroad,
And turns the rapid current—
What but the voice of God?

Then answer—Is the spirit
Less noble or less free?
From whom does it inherit
The doom of slavery?
When man can bind the waters
That they no longer roll,
Then let him forge the fetters
To clog the human soul.

Till then a voice is stealing
From earth and sea and sky,
And to the soul revealing
Its immortality;
The swift wind chants the numbers,
Careering o'er the sea,
And earth aroused from slumbers
Reechoes—man, be free!

A Temple of Baal in Chicago.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean of May 18th contained the following description of a Masonic pagoda in this city. Read and consider the power and wealth displayed in this one building. For what purpose is all this magnificence. In connection with the trumpeted Masonic display of "St. John's day", Wednesday, and the appropriation of a government building by this fraternity, this description is very suggestive. Will this country ever be turned over without reservation, to the lodge? Read the description of the Asylum of the Apollo Commandery of Knights Templar:

These chambers are in the fine and massive structure recently erected by the American Express Company on Monroe, between State and Dearborn streets. The rooms occupy the entire portion of the two upper stories of the building. With one of the guards of the Appollo Commandery as his cicerone, an Inter-Ocean reporter yesterday inspected the lodge rooms in the building, commencing the tour at the Blue Lodge room. This room recalled to the mind of the reporter the tragico-comedy of "Barbe Bleue," only, instead of the dark chamber with the heads of the unfortunate wives, the delighted eyes of the journalist rested upon one of the most magnificently-furnished rooms imaginable. This room is very large and high. It is all blue; blue carpets, blue frescoing, blue trimmed chairs. In the west end is a fine organ, especially constructed in Boston for the room at a cost of $3,700. Two tiers of sofas, covered with blue velvet, ranged around the side of the room, afford seats for the members. The carpet is body Brussels, a blue ground, with Mosaic designs in blue and drab and ashes of roses. The pedestals in the center of the room, and at the side of the officers' chairs are chefs d'œuvres of fine workmanship. They are constructed of black walnut, with mahogany veneerings, and in the form of a delicately mottled marble top, supported by Corinthian pillars of black walnut. In the center of each pedestal is placed a mirror. The large chair in the east is covered by a gothic portico or canopy, supported by a heavy Corinthian and Tuscan columns, with elaborately carved volutes, inlaid with gold. At the back of the chair is frescoed on the wall a blue and white drapery so perfectly executed as to deceive the most practiced gaze, except upon very close inspection. The chair itself is manufactured of heavy and elaborately carved black walnut, with veneer of mahogany, inlaid with gold and ornamented with a heavy gold fringe. The seats of honor for past officers also accord in beauty of finish to the chair in the eastern portion of the room. The area within the portico is covered with a red velvet carpet. On either side of the last chain is placed the desks of the Recorder and Treasurer. In the front of the chair are two bronze antique female figures on a raised stand supporting the globe lights. The chairs in the south and west sides of the room are somewhat similarly arranged though less elaborate than the east chair. The walls are frescoed to represent panels, alternated with pilasters. In each square is set a bracket with six lights. The upper ceiling is beautifully decorated with Masonic hieroglyphs and devices. In the center of the ceiling is a large dome, arranged for ventilating purposes, so frescoed as to represent a blue sky with golden stars. The arrangement for second degree work in this lodge chamber is said to be the most perfect in the country. The Blue Lodge chamber was furnished and fitted up at an expense aggregating near $20,000. This room is occupied by several lodges. Blair Lodge, No. 393, meets here every Monday evening; Ashlar lodge, No. 308, Tuesday evenings; Blaney Lodge, No. 287, Wednesday evenings; Thomas J. Turner Lodge, No. 409, Thursday evenings; Dearborn Lodge, No. 310, Friday evenings; H. W. Bigelow Lodge, No. 438, Saturday evenings. The parlors adjoining the Blue Lodge, for the reception of visitors belonging to the craft, are prettily and handsomely furnished.

Having sufficiently admired the beauties of the Blue Lodge room, the reporter was led to the apartments occupied by the Apollo Commandery. Adjoining the main hall is a cosy parlor or reception room, hadsomely laid with a soft-colored carpet, and furnished with massive chairs with red leather cushions and black walnut wood-work in appropriate designs. The asylum of Apollo Commandery is a richly furnished and striking room. It is gothic shaped, the ceilings being ornamented with the fleur-de-lis, and the walls decorated with the emblems of Templar Masonry; the hemlet, the cross, the plume, the sword, and the gauntlet of Cœur-de-Lion and the crusaders. In the west end of the asylum, elaborately frescoed, is the coat of arms of the commandery, with the motto "Pro Deo Homine Fraternitate." The chairs in the room are similar in design to those of the parlor, but more massive. The back of each chair forms a triangle, in which is a cross. The wood work of each chair is very highly polished. Frescoed on each side of the room on the wall are seven shields, under each of which is inscribed the name of a past eminent commander of the body: Case, Blaney, Dr. Johnson, Deering, Hulburt, Gurney, Myers, Taylor, Baird, Mitchell, Ranney, Patrick, Bower, Miles. The chair of the eminent Commander is covered with a canopy of red brocatelle ornamented with gold fringe. The chair itself is made of massive work in black walnut, inlaid with gold. An organ is now being built for the commandery at a cost of $5,000. The emblems of the Knights Templar are the cross and crown, and in the asylum of the Apollo Commandery every gas-light is so made as to represent a crown. The amount of money expended in fitting up this room was $15,000.

Immediately adjoining the asylum, and connected with it by means of a short passage way, ornamented with all manner of weird shapes and devices, is the Egyptian lodge room. What merit belongs to the two rooms already described on the ground of beauty and richness, certainly belongs to this room because of its beauty, convenience and uniqueness. Strange looking figures greet the gaze of the observer on all sides of the room. Characters that are found on the ruins of Ninevah and Babylon, androsphinx, hieroglyphs, obelisks, and all manner of peculiar looking designs are frescoed on the walls. Nevertheless, in spite of its "unco' strange" look it is a very convenient lodge room. The stage properties are such that would make a manager of a first-class theater envious; thunder and lightning, and the elements have all been subjugated and are bottled up ready for the work of the lodge when they are needed. The room is carpeted with a rich Brussels carpet, similar in figure to that of the asylum. The Oriental Consistory meets in this room.

In the upper story are the guard rooms, the banqueting rooms, and the kitchen of the Commandery. The drill room is located on the same floor. It is admirably fitted up, and contains apartments for the uniforms of 250 members.

The Apollo Commandery leases the chambers to the other lodges occupying them. The officers of the Apollo Commandery for the present year are as follows:

Eminent Commander, H. A. Stevens; Generalissimo, T. T. Oviatt; Captain General, E. P. Hall; Prelate, J. H. Miles; Senior Warden, L. B. Dixon; Junior Warden, F. S. Shewell; Treasurer, George H. Laflin; Recorder, B. B. W. Locke; Sword Bearer, W. H. Potter; Standard Bearer, David Coey; Warder, D. C. Wallace; Sentinel, M. W. Fuller; Third Guard, George Cohen; Second Guard, J. Wooster; First Guard, W. S. Crosby.

It is reported that the German Odd-fellow lodges of Chicago are opposed to the Masonic usurpation and tomfoolery of Wednesday. The Cynosure will on that day be preparing for the mail. Next week our readers shall know the result.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Ohio Home Missionary Society raised $7,800 during the past year, and helped forty missionaries who are laboring with fifty churches.

—A proposition has been started in Baptist journals to endow no more Baptist colleges, but instead secure Baptist professorships in State Universities.

—Native Christian Chapels have been so far constructed along the 2,000 miles of the seacoast of China that for 800 miles of that coast a footman might put up at a Christian Chapel each night of a journey.

—The Societe Evangelique, of which Dr. Fisch is the head, though sorely pressed for funds, is doing good work among the Romanists of France. There have been revivals of religion in the departments of Youne, La Nievre, and Marne.

—The Ashland Avenue Presbyterian church of this city owns no house of worship and instead of a Sunday evening service meetings for prayer and praise are held from house to house. This return to apostolic methods illustrates that "man's extremity is God's opportunity."

—It was stated recently that there are at least 50,000 people in Edinburgh, Scotland, who do not attend any place of worship. The late revivals attending Mr. Moody's preaching may have diminished this number.

—Four new lecturers in Yale Divinity School have been announced: On Preaching, Rev. John Hall, D. D; on Christian Denominations, Rev. H. W. Beecher; on the Eastern Religions and Missions, Prof. Julian H. Seelye; on Preservation of Health, Prof. L. T. Sanford.

—The second Sunday in June was observed by the Methodist church as "the children's day," in which special contributions are taken in Sunday school "to assist scholars of either sex who may need help in obtaining a more advanced education."

—A revival of great interest has lately taken place in Wooster University, Ohio. Special meetings were held at the President's house and the work spread among the students until nearly all have become Christians. The thirty members of the Senior class were among the number.

—The Ohio Congregational Conference, lately met in Cincinnati, moved a wise measure, to recommend that the Home Mission boards of the various denominations consult in regard to the strifes arising from the effort for existence of several small churches in villages that can support but one or two.

—A Correspondent of the Christian Worker, tells of an interesting religious work in the Northern Indiana Prison at Michigan City. A "Praying Band" has been organized with thirty and more members, and there is great encouragement to hope for the salvation of a large number of inmates.

—Bishop Russel, writing from Ning po, says that in the Chinese province Che-Kiang, with its 25,000,000 of population, Protestant missionaries have now labored for 26 years. In that time, despite of bitter antagonism, there were over 1,500 converted, of which at least 100 are now ministers and teachers.

—Within the past eighteen months over six hundred of the Nez Perces Indians in Idaho have been received into the church of Christ, and that of the Spokans tribe living north of Kamia, two hundred and fifty-three adults and eighty-one children have been received. There have been nine hundred and twenty native converts among Nez Perces and Spokans.

—Interesting intelligence comes from the old Syrian or St. Thomas Christians in Travancore, who number about 200,000 souls. There has recently been an awakening in this venerable church. It has affected both priests and people. A deep sense of sin is felt in many places. The Scriptures are eagerly bought and studied.

—The Baptists have opened a new out-station at Thay-Bao, near Thongzai, in Burmah. The preacher is a former Buddhist priest. At this place, where water was once refused the missionaries, the people have given their monistary for a chapel and school, and the necessary water tanks, so that the outlay from the mission treasury has only been four dollars.

—Missionary Riggs of Minnesota writes of a new field among the agency Indians, which he argues as worthy the efforts of Christians. These are three small tribes the Rees, Mandans and Minnetares, numbering in all some twenty-two hundred. They are gross idolaters, but are driven to the protection of the government troops from the department Sioux, and can be easily reached and probably impressed with the truth.

The Light of Life.

Upon the mountain's distant head,
With trackless snows forever white,
Where all is still, and cold, and dead,
Late shines the day's departing light.

But far below those icy rocks,
The vales, in summer bloom arrayed,
Woods full of birds, and fields of flocks,
Are dim with mist and dark with shade.

'Tis thus, from warm and kindly hearts,
And eyes where generous meanings burn,
Earliest the light of life departs,
But lingers with the cold and stern.

Our Florida Correspondent—The Sabre Tournament.

AIKEN, S. C., May 27.

At 4 o'clock Wednesday morning we were on the stir for the tournament and picnic. The mocking birds had already proceeded us in our uprisings, the dawning in the east reminding them of morning carols. A carriage was brought to the door in which nine persons were quickly seated, for we must respect "car time." In the South there does not seem to be that importance attached to a few minute's time as at the North. Even at this early hour it is intensely hot.

Soon we are hurrying over the rails leaving the disagreeable red earth so common in Georgia, and coming to the lime or chalk country where kaolin is found in considerable quantities. A manufactory of fine crockery is being carried on here with some success. The ware when finished has a clear, brilliant appearance like nice china, but is as heavy as the "iron stone" ware. Great blocks of this earth are shipped North to confectioners and grocers. Much of the fine, white candy which you give so freely to your children and think wholly harmless, has for its base this same kaolin.

For the past few years it has been imported from France at $50 a ton. Twenty years ago plenty of it could be had for $2 per ton. It adds materi ally to the bulk of candies and the weight of sugar and flour, as many grocery men will admit.

Soon we passed a cotton factory, the water in its resevoir glancing and shimmering in the morning sun. This mill has been reared by English capitalists who employ 400 people about the establishment. One young lord spends here his $25,000 yearly income with very little trouble.

At eight o'clock we reached Edgefield, thirty miles from Aiken, and then with mule teams we rode the remaining two miles. Although it was a well traveled road the numerous stumps found in it did not speak well for the highway functionaries. But after all only one party was thrown from their carriage because they would ride fast.

The tournament is one of South Carolina's conventional entertainments. A large platform which would accommodate five hundred people was situated west of the turf, the judge's stand on the east side opposite, more than twenty feet high, commanding a full view of the riders throughout their entire course. The ground was soft as any within twenty rods of a stream could be. The "points," five in number, consisting of blocks surmounted by a figure representing the head and shoulders of a man alternating with rings, were placed thirty feet apart. First a head five feet high, then a ring suspended eight feet high, then a stooping figure three fieet high, another ring eight feet high and another head five feet high. The contestants were to ride the three hundred yards, toss the two rings and take off the three heads within ten minutes of the time they entered the course.

Twenty-five horsemen presented themselves, some of whom had ridden that morning thirty miles and many of whom only striplings. The one who could make all of those points, cutting off the heads and lifting the rings, maintaining a certain positiou of the body and going the distance, three hundred yards in ten minutes, managing his horse skillfully, should have the first prize.

The crowd sometimes would press too near and frighten the horses which were work horses as very few Southerners can now afford pleasure horses. At the sound of the bugle the horse and rider sprang forward—a flash of the sabre and off comes the first head, the sabre is then pointed directly in front, the ring is taken and thrown, then with arm and body well over to the right over goes the kneeling figure, the second ring is thrown, then a rapid swing to the left and off goes the last head; all this at the speed of the wind. Do you wonder that bravoes filled the air? Every muscle of the body is exercised besides many qualities of the mind, to say nothing of the will of the owner over his horse. What can compensate the poor, toil-laden, persevering son of the North for the want of this healthful exercise? Attendance in this society is not compulsory, if a member wishes to stay away six months he can do so. Liquor is prohibited while members have on their uniform and very few accidents occur. Only one has been thrown from his horse, and that when he had to throw himself well on to his right hip to reach the kneeling figure. The stirrup then broke. But a good rider would not be thrown then.

(Here little children use the saddle. It is no unusual sight for a child seven or eight years old to ride alone six or seven miles and no fear felt for him.)

Col. Geary gave the prize. Two competitors had an equal right to the first prize. They rode over again and one made one more point than the other. The successful candidate received a very handsome flag wrought by the daughter of the late General McDowal, also a beautiful white plume which had been thrice earned before. The presentation speech savored of a strong State feeling, the speaker saying that South Carolina was first to take up arms in defense of State rights, and the last to lay them down. "Never forget chivalrous conduct, or if called to war again (which God forbid) don't forget the white feather of Marshall Ney which this white feather commemorates."

I thought the significance we attached to the white feather was one quite opposed to courage.

But this is a long long letter and I will write you about the barbacue next week.

"I Telled Betty."

One good man advised a newly-married couple never to be angry both at once. There was wisdom in the suggestion, for when one scatters fire it is quite time the other should start after water. A colored man related to a friend his plan for avoiding family jars, as follows:—

"I telled Betty when we was wed, dat if she saw me getting angry like she must go to the bucket and fill her mouth wid water; and if I saw her getting out of herself, I'd go to the bucket and fill my mouth wid water. So we never had any quarrels, for one can't quarrel alone, and anodder can't quarrel wid you when his mouth's full of water."

"We never had any quarrels." How many married people can say that? And yet most quarrels proceed from an ungoverned tongue. Of the ten commands which God gave, two are directed against the offenses of the tongue; one in the first table, and one in the second. So it appears that an ungoverned tongue wars against God's glory and against man's peace. Bridling the tongue is a duty for all, and of him who neglects it, it is said, "that man's religion is vain." And if there is no other way to do it, it is better to fill the mouth with water, than to open it and give free scope to a tongue which "is a-fire," and which setteth on fire the course of nature, and is set on fire of hell."

The Eyes.

Of all features the eyes are the most expressive; at least, the most capable of expressing any kind of emotion if it be real. But when we come to classify eyes according to their shape or color, etc., and to lay down rules as to what these indicate, we feel ourselves, comparatively speaking, circumscribed. Still, there are a few general rules which may be laid down on this subject. About the shape of the eyes I cannot say much, because that is for the most part tolerably uniform; nor am I aware of any particular indications afforded by such variations as exist. One thing, however, I have noticed, i. e., that very round eyes generally express dullness, heaviness, and want of character, like those of the bird they so much resemble. A prominent pupil is said generally to produce short-sight, which is so often accompanied by a talent for acquiring languages, that we cannot help thinking there must be some connection between the two. Phrenologists account for this by saying that the organ of language pushes the pupil forwards. This may usually be the case, but it does not always produce this effect (or, if it does, then it must follow that a prominent pupil does not necessarily indicate short sight), for I have known two persons whose talent for languages was most remarkable, but whose sight was not, as far as I could judge, short. Eyes which are situated very far apart in the face, are said to dencte a certain amount of deficiency of intellect; what the opposite fault denotes I cannot exactly say. Eyes which can never look you straight in the face generally indicate a want of straightforwardness, and create an unconscious feeling of mistrust in those who look at them, which, like the rattle of the rattlesnake, serves as a sort of providential warning, telling us that danger is near. I allow that a similar effect may be produced by shyness, but in that case it is not unlikely to wear off on closer acquaintance,—in the other case, it never wears off. Eyes which possess the opposite characteristic of this, i. e., that of looking you steadfastly in the face without flinching, are seldom, perhaps never, found in persons of an artful, underhand disposition. A steadfast gaze, if it be not (as it sometimes is) an unmeaning stare, or a mere wistful look, like that of a dog expecting food, but of a searching, penetrating character, will be generally found to imply a great power of influence, or, perhaps I should rather say, it gives that power; e. g., what an effectual auxiliary to a preacher is an eye of this description. This was one great secret of the effectiveness of Dr. Guthrie's preaching. If a man wants his words to carry weight with his hearers, he should fix his eye on them. Such indeed is said to be the power of a concentrated gaze that I have been told there is no animal, however ferocious, which might not be kept in check by any who had the courage to look him steadfastly in the face, though, as few could trust their own hearts, were they to encounter a wild beast, it would be a tempting of Providence to try the experiment, the more so, as a moment's failure of courage might be fatal. I once saw Van Amburgh, the celebrated lion tamer, in a den of wild beasts, but his eyes did not exhibit that fixed gaze which I have noticed as being so powerful in its effects on the human race; the ball seems to be in a state of perpetual motion, such as—had I not seen it, I should thought the human eye incapable of sustaining, where there was no motion of the head, and which he resorted to because he was obliged to encounter so many ferocious beasts at the time; so that it would not have been safe for him to remove his gaze from one of them for more than a single moment. It would be needless, and indeed nearly impossible, to go through all the phases of feeling, all the various emotions, which display themselves in the eye, or all the states of mind which it indicates, for there is nothing in human nature which it cannot picture, but a great many of these indications, though they may easily be recognized, cannot be described, nor can we lay down rules for their discovery; for they do not belong to any particular class of eyes; they are, many of them totally unconnected with its form or size, color or position.—Golden Hours.

"Cheap Things.

Just so long as purchasers ask for cheap things rather than pure and serviceable things, we shall find men ingeniously endeavoring to meet this popular proclivity. The grocer who, offering pure Bohea at a dollar and a quarter a pound, sees his customers abandon him en masse so obtain an inferior article of another dealer at a dollar a pound, will soon, either in disgust or in self-defence, adulterate his own stock down to the level of the public wishes. With a great majority of people cheapness is seductive beyond everything else. It is the pressure of this class for lower prices that leads to so much inferior production. Whether there shall be adulteration and shoddyism or not remains solely with consumers to determine. Producers are certain, and indeed are compelled, to cater for the public taste. Buyers have only to insist upon having first-rate articles, have only to resist the temptation to buy inferior things because they are cheaper, to reform the evils they complain of altogether. Complaints are idle. The public are supremely masters of the situation, and may enforce their wishes to the utmost.—Appleton's Journal.

"Plow Deep" Again.

We exhort deep plowing in lesson-study. But there is another sense in which the Sunday-school teacher, like the farmer, must thrust the right plow-share farther down, if he would enrich himself and his class.

There is an inside preparation of the teacher's heart, absolutely indispensable to good teaching. Without it your knowledge of the lesson jingles as emptily as "sounding brass and tinkling cymbals." Here, above all, there must be ne no shallow scraping of the surface. Sink the sharp plowshare of God's truth down under the crust of your habitual and formal religious life. Do not be afraid to turn up into the sun-light every hard boulder of selfish worldliness, every root of bitterness, everything that you have suffered to hide itself away beneath the surface. Do not spare the sod, though it is covered with the nodding daisies of religious sentiment. If you would have a harvest, plow deep in your own heart; turn it all up to the fertilizing influences of God's own sweet light and air.

—Nat'l. S. S. Teacher.

Like most garments, like most carpets, everything in life has a right side and a wrong side. You can take any joy, and by turning it around, find troubles on the other side; or you may take the greatest trouble, and by turning it around find joys on the other side. The gloomiest mountain never casts a shadow on both sides at once, nor does the greatest of life's calamities.

—Pure and brave spirits seek not a refuge from an eternal future in disgraceful dissipation; they court unbounded existence rather as the only fitting sphere for the unfolding of their latent energies, and calmly await it clad in the panoply which wise moderation alone can provide. Great and good virtues are never matured in sensual and timid spirits. Terror induced by guilt, chills the soul, as physical fear chills the body, destroying all prospects of moral excellence in the heart from which self-government is exiled.—[Dr. Magoon.

Children's Corner.

Johnny Burns Himself Without Fire.

Johnny found a big brass button the other day, and set to work to make it shine by rubbing it on a piece of woolen cloth.

"Isn't it bright?" he said, after working away awhile. "Just like gold."

He rubbed away again for a moment as hard as he could, then—to brush off some chalk-dust that clung to the button, for I had told him to chalk the cloth to make it brighten the button quicker—he put the brass to the back of his hand.

"Ow!" he cried, dropping the button.

"What is the matter?"

"It's hot."

"Hot," echoed Mary, laying down her book. "How can it be hot?

"I don't know," said Johnny, "but it burnt me."

"Nonsense!" replied Mary, picking up the button. "It's as cold as anything."

"It is cold now, may be," Johnny admitted. "But it was hot—warm, anyway."

"What a silly boy! You just imagined it."

"I didn't," retorted Johnny.

Seeing that they were likely to do as a great many older people have done, dispute about a matter that neither understood, I took the button and rubbed it smartly on my coat sleeve, and put it to Mary's cheek.

"There?" exclaimed Johnny, as Mary cried "Oh!" and put her hand to her face.

"I shouldn't have thought your arm could make it so warm," she said.

I rubbed the button on the table cloth and placed it once more against her cheek, saying, "It couldn't have been my arm that warmed it this time."

"Of course not," observed Johnny, patronizingly.

"What did warm it?' Mary asked, her interest fully awakened.

"That's a good puzzle for you two to work at," I said. "Don't rub the button on the varnished furniture or on the marble table, for it might scratch them; but you can try anything else."

They worked at the puzzle a long time, and still were puzzled.

"May be the heat comes from our fingers," Mary suggested at last.

I thrust a stick through the eye of the button, so that it could be held without touching the hand, rubbed it a moment on the carpet, and it was as hot as ever.

"I guess it's just the rubbing," said Johnny.

"A very good guess indeed, for that is precisely where the heat comes from," I replied. "How it comes is not so easy to explain to those of your age. The simple fact that heat comes from rubbing is enough, perhaps, for you to know about it now. We say that rubbing makes friction, and friction developes heat. When you are older I'll try to make it all clear to you."

"I thought heat always came from fire," said Mary, "or else from the sun."

"Sun-heat is fire-heat, too, it is believed," I replied; "but there are still other sources of heat—our bodies, for instance. We keep warm when out of the sunshine, and away from the fire."

"I didn't think of that," said Mary.

"Do you remember the day the masons were pouring water on a pile of quicklime to make morter for the new house over the way. The lime hissed and crackled, sending up great clouds of steam. I have a piece of quicklime here, and see! when I pour water on it how it drinks up the water and grows hot. I saw a wagon loaded with lime set on fire once by a shower of rain."

"Fred told me about that, and I didn't believe him. Who'd expect fire from water?"

"Get me a small piece of ice, and I'll show you how even that may kindle a fire."

While Mary was getting the ice, I took from my cabinet a small vial with a metal bead at the bottom.

"Is it lead?" asked Johnny, when I showed it to him.

"It is potassium," I said, and I'm going to set a little piece of it a-fire with the ice Mary has brought. There!"

"Isn't it splendid!" cried Mary, as the metal flashed into flame.

"You can do anything, can't you?" said Johny, admiringly. His confidence in my ability is something frightful. Really, if I were to tell him I could set the moon a-fire, I think he'd believe me!

"No, Johnny," I replied. "There are very few things that I can do as you will discover in time. But now, while we are talking of heat, let me show you another way of warming things. Please fetch me a flat-iron, Mary, while Johnny brings my little hammer. Thank you. Now watch me while I pound this piece of lead, and put your finger on it when I stop. Now!"

"Does the pounding heat it?"

"It does. I have seen a blacksmith take a piece of cold iron and hammer it on a cold anvil with a cold hammer until it was hot enough to set wood a-fire."

"Where did the heat come fnom?"

"From the blacksmith's arm, but in such a roundabout way that I should only puzzle you if I tried to describe it. You have seen that heat does come from fire, from the sun, from our bodies, from rubbing, from pounding, and from mixing things, such as quicklime and water; how it comes in either case you will learn by and by, when you are older. But we have got a long way from Johnny's button. Can you think of any other time you have seen things heated by rubbing?"

"We rub our hands when they are cold," Mary said, seeing Fred go through those motions, having just come in from out doors.

"I'll tell you something I noticed coming across the bridge," said Fred.

It was freezing cold, yet the snow in the sled tracks was melted when a heavy sleigh passed, leaving the boards bare sometimes. I couldn't think what made it; was it friction?'

"Evidently. I've noticed the same thing, many times. The snow 'wears out,' as the teamsters say—that is, the heat of the rubbing melts it."

"They have several ways of doing it—or rather, different savages have different ways; one of the simplest is to rub one stick in a groove in another, rubbing briskly and bearing on hard.

"There is a bit of soft pine board that I tried the experiment with, the other day. This is it. See! when I plow this stick up and down in the groove, the fine wood dust that gathers at the bottom begins to smoke a little and turn black. By working long enough and fast enough, I should set the dust on fire; but it is too tiresome when a match will do as well, and one can buy a whole bunch of matches for a penny. We get our fire by rubbing, too, only we use something that kindles quicker than wood, so that a single scratch on some rough surface developes heat enough to light it."

"What is it?" Mary asked.

"Phosphorus. I have some in this bottle. You rub the button, Johnny, while I take some of it out on the point of my knife. Now touch it with the button. See! it is hot enough to set the phosphorus a-fire. We might kindle our fires that way, but we find it more convenient to put the phosphorus on the end of a stick and mix it with something to keep it from lighting too easily. Then all we have to do is to rub the phosphorus point against anything rough, the friction heats it, it takes fire, and our light is ready. Did you ever hear of the traveler who was stopped by some barbarous people who knew nothing of matches? They would not let him go through their country, and while they were debating whether to kill him or send him back, he grew tired of waiting and thought he would take a smoke. So he filled his pipe, and taking a match from his pocket, struck it against his boot, lighted his pipe, and thought no more about it. To his surprise, the people who were watching him suddenly ran off, and directly there was a great commotion in the village. After awhile the chief men came back very humbly, bringing him loads of presents, and begged him to go his way in peace. What was the reason? They had seen him draw fire from his foot, as they thought, and were afraid that such a great conjuror might burn them all up if they offended him. That was a lucky match for the traveler!"—Sabbath Recorder.

News of the Week.

The Country.

—All the liquor and beer saloons in La Salle and Peru, Ill., were kept closed on Sunday last, the first Sunday in many months; and over half of the saloon-keepers of Ottawa have appeared in the Circuit Court and given security to attend the trial of their cases on the indictments against them. They have raised about $1,000 as a fighting fund, and will contend against the people with the best legal talent in the State.

—Crop reports from the central and northern parts of Illinois give promise of a large increase of the corn crop, a full average yield of wheat; other grains are considered as promising well. Wheat harvesting is now in full operation in Morgan county, and if the weather continues favorable more than half will be done this week. The yield is immense, perhaps the largest ever known.

—The coal miners of La Salle county, Ill., have inaugurated a great strike under the lead of union men.

—Evans, a noted criminal and murderer, was taken from the jail at Corrolton, Ill., on Sunday by a masked mob and hung.

—An effort to suppress the New Orleans Bulletin was made last week it is thought by the State authorities, whose misdeeds that paper has tried to make public.

The City.

—As the opponents of the present municipal authorities prophesied at their election, a strong effort is being made to rebuild the City Hall and Court-House at once. This means the raising and expending of several millions, and the Chicago Tweeds are anxious to undertake the job before they pass out of office.

The Capitol.

—Congress set the time for adjournment at 4 P. M. of Tuesday. Much of the work of the session has been delayed by seemingly profitless discussions of inflation measures and bills hurried through at the last.

—The President signed the new currency bill on Monday. It fixes the maximum of legal tender notes at $382,000,000, and provides for a limited redistribution of the currency when demanded by the exigencies of business. It also provides that there shall be no reserve funds left in the Treasury.

—The House passed a bill on Monday giving $25,000 for the support of a Catholic organization of Washington known as The Little Sisters of the Poor! What means this?

Foreign.

—The Turkish government has prohibited the circulation of the Bible in that country. This will be a terrible blow to missionary work unless Christian nations interfere; for the Moslem has not forgotten how to persecute and slay.

—The submarine cable from England to Brazil has been completed, and dispatches sent from Pennambuco to London.

Constantinople, June 20.—Intelligence has reached here of a terrible disaster in the Sea of Mormora. A Turkish vessel was run into yesterday by an Egyptian vessel and sunk in a few minutes. 340 persons were on board, including passengers and crew, and of this number 320 were drowned.

Reform News.

From Williams County, Ohio.

Deer Lick, Ohio.

Bro. Kellogg :—For some time past there has seemed to be an idea afloat in our community that our movement here would "die out in time," but our county convention cleared up that mistake, and before the Knights of the cable-tow had time to quiet their nerves Bro. Wm. Givens, of Indiana, came and gave us four lectures. Bro. Givens is an able speaker, his lectures here were very satisfactory. He is thoroughly acquainted with the subject; being a seceder, he brings out modern lodge work and lets the light shine clear through the subject. The Morenci (Mich.) murder is much talked of here and there is felt a settled distrust and loathing of the institution which claims the right to take life without law. H. S. Kirk.

From the Illinois Agent.—The Work Opened in Ottawa.

Last evening, June 15th, it was my privilege to lecture in Ottawa, the county seat of La Salle county, Ill. Twenty-five years ago I resided there, and was a member of one of the two Congregational churches; the same one over which Pres. Blanchard was afterwards pastor. It was pre-eminently an anti-slavery and reformatory church, while the elder had the reputation of being conservative and aristocratic. Since then the two churches have united and built a fine house of worship, the finest in the city. I applied for the use of their lecture-room and was refused. I then made arrangements to lecture in the Court-House Square. Notices were posted all over the city and one sent to each of the churches—Baptist, Methodst, Presbyterian and Congregationalist. They were read in all the churches except the Congregational. There the leading members protested against it, and gave as their reason that one-half of the male members of the church and society were Masons, and they could not afford to offend them. Among those who would not permit this notice to be read, were some who twenty-five years ago helped fight the anti-slavery battle, when it was a great reproach in Ottawa to be an Abolitionist. They claimed then and still claim to be Anti-masons; but prosperity and worldly honor have come and their present church is the most popular and aristocratic in the place. They seemed to have forgotten that God has said that "The friendship of the world is enmity with God;" yet there are some even in Ottawa that have not defiled their garments, and who mourn over the desolations of Zion.

A good audience was gathered in and about the Court-House Square, who were generally respectful and attentive. I spoke briefly on Masonry as anti-Christian and anti-republican, and gave way to questions or remarks. Some one asked me to say something of Odd-fellowship, which I did; and was greeted by several voices with, "You lie," and "You are a liar." After the close of the meeting I appealed to a Baptist deacon, who is an Odd-fellow, to say if my statements were not true. He replied that they were "utterly false." But a leading citizen, a man who has been known in Ottawa for more than twenty-five years as honest and incorruptable, said as an Odd-fellow he knew that my statements were true. At least they were fifteen years ago. He said this in the presence of this deacon, who made no reply.

Notwithstanding some little rowdyism the meeting was a good one, and I hope will produce lasting results. Several of my books were stolen from the stand while I was speaking; but I trust they have gone to shed light in dark places, and they will I trust be like "Bread cast upon the waters."

Yours for Christ,

From Washington County, Ill.—A Good Work Begun.

Nashville, Ill., June 18, 1874.

We met pursuant to notice at our school-house on the evening of June 1st, our audience was larger than it was at the previous meeting, We presented a good preamble and constitution, but we did not get any one to come forward and signify their willingness to help in the reform movement, though we had very good attention, and we find that we are getting some of the people to thinking and inquiring about this matter of secrecy. One man utterly refused to take any tracts but finally we prevailed on him to take one of the sermons and he said he would read it. He made a speech in favor of the lodge and brought up the leading ministers and Gen. Washington, all of which we refuted. He is a Methodist preacher.

Brethren, one thing is sure, we are stirring up the minds of the people to some extent, and we count on some gain. We shall continue our endeavors in the cause of right and truth. We propose to meet on the first of each month for a year and see what we can do. We intend to withhold our votes from men of the lodge from this time on. Yours fraternally,

More about the Morenci Tragedy.—From the Ohio Agent.

Bro. Kellogg: Since the publication in your columns of the account from my pen of the man found in Bean Creek near Morenci, Mich., nude and terribly mutilated; numerous have been the inquiries made of me, both orally and by letter, concerning that mysterious circumstance; and some have been disposed to hint that it was a fabrication, gotten up in the interest of anti- screcy, for the purpose of creating a sensation derogatory to the institution of Masonry. This looked the more plausable because the newspapers in the vicinity generally maintain perfect silence in regard to the matter. True, after my communication had appeared in the Cynosure, the Morenci Era, (I believe that is the name) then referred to it lightly, in a manner that indicated a purpose to invalidate the truth of the statements made by myself and Bro. Bundy, and to obliterate if possible from the minds of the people every impression previously made of foul play and personal violence.

The mysterious circumstances connected with this tragedy, together with the doubts in which my communication seemed to have been shrouded by the general silence of newspapers, and the insinuations of the Era has led me to a further investigation of the subject, and on yesterday I visited Morenci for the purpose if possible of getting the facts in the case as they appeared to one who was an eye witness to the scene at the time of the discovery of the dead body, and from whom the statements made in my former communication were indirectly obtained. And now I will give you the fasts as related to me by one who visited the scene at the time the body was lying on the ground near where it was discovered, and who also visited the place the next day after the body had been deposited in the hole in which it was placed during the night previous to this second visit by my informant.

The date of the discovery as given by this informant is Saturday, the 14th of March, 1874, in the afternoon, or towards evening. I will give it now as I penciled it from his own lips, and in the order in which he gave it to me.

His statement is that the body was severed in the midst; the left breast opened, and heart and lungs absent; the bowels taken out and done up separately in paper; the face skinned, commencing at the neck under the chin, extending to the forehead; the head shaved close, so as to render it impossible to distinguish the color of the hair; and another most brutal mark of mutilation, which I suppressed through delicacy in my other communication, but which truth requires me now to state, viz., the separation of these parts by which sex is distinguished. This statement differs in several particulars from my former communication which came to me at second-hand, yet other facts given makes it equally if not more atrocious than the former. One other fact, and not given before, is that the legs were cut off; this was necessary in order to get the body into the box it being too short to contain the person otherwise.

My informant says the remains were exposed to public view from the time found in the afternoon until 9 o'clock P. M, during which time the citizens thronged the place. Later in the night the body was interred on the side of the water from whence it was taken, the box left, and seen remaining on the spot for a week after. On the next day he visited the place; saw the grave, or evidences of burial; but the bowels were not buried, but left exposed to the view of the hundreds who visited the spot during all of the Sabbath. These facts as given, my informant says can all be established by numerous credible witnesses.

The occurence of such an incident most naturally led to various conjectures as to who the person could be, and also who are the guilty perpetrators of so gross an outrage. There are those who say that the disparity in the length of the legs, the absence of a front tooth, and the height or length of the body, all point to a man who had been at Morenci prior to this event, who was nicknamed "Whispering Charley" in consequence of lung weakness which prevented him from speaking above his breath, but who has not been seen there since. This suspicion has given rise to various expedients to render this conjecture nugatory. One is to the effect that his whereabouts have been discovered and that he is living, and that intelligence has been telegraphed to this effect to Morenci and accredited generally in Masonic circles, but questioned outside of such circles. This subject has created so much excitement that a father who had lost a son some time previous to this event, who had one limb crippled and several inches shorter than the other, and bearing some resemblance to the dead body found, had him disinterred to satisfy his mind that it was not his son.

Finally, as it is now clear that it was not the body of the young man referred to, and as the fraternity aver the existence of whispering Charley at a distance, a doctor who belongs to the order claims that the dead man was his subject sent from a distance for professional purposes. This I find to be pretty generally discredited, and the marks of dissection certainly reflect poorly upon his surgical skill. Again another circumstance that seems to contradict that statement is that the box containing the dead body bore upon one side of the lid the name and address of one of the merchants of the place. Now if the statement that the body was sent from a distance was true, then the circumstance of the address would fix it upon the merchant as the owner of the dead carcass, and the question naturally arises what does a merchant want with a subject for dissection? But an attempt is made to meet this exigency by the doctor in this wise; He says now, that the body was shipped to him in a barrel, and afterwards put into this box which has been shipped to the merchant with dry goods, and that the box was more suitable to the purposes of decomposition than the barrel. The reply of discriminating persons to this generally is, "too thin, too thin."

Now my advice to the fraternity would be in view of the suspicion that rests upon them, to send for Whispering Charley at once. Produce the man! This will satisfy the people, but unless you do this, my impression is, that public sentiment will hold the fraternity responsible for the act of inhumanly disposing of a fellow being. Send for Whispering Charley, gentlemen, send for him by all means. Don't stop for a little expense when so much is at stake. Surely to silence these busy calumniators will amply compensate you for all your pains-taking

But the question arises involuntarily, why should suspicion look in the direction of the Masonic fraternity rather than elsewhere? I answer for the following reasons: First, the marks of violence inflicted on the body bear so striking a resemblance to the penalties known to be attached to the violations of Masonic obligations; second, Whispering Charley is known to have been a Mason, and therefore if unfaithful to his obligations incurred the penalty; third, the fraternity in the person of Justice D. and Dr. W. discouraged the holding of an inquest, and contrary to the wish of the citizens, and in direct violation of law, put the body out of sight by diging a hole and covering it up without a lawful inquest; fourth, since sometime before the finding of the body, Whispering Charley has been missing, and no satisfactory account has been given of him.

Now in conclusion, suppose a man to have had his barn burnt with a heavy insurance upon it, and that man a Mason, and he confiding in a brother Mason tells him that he burned his own barn, giving him this as a Masonic secret on the square; and this brother Mason untrue to his Masonic obligation divulges that secret; would it be very strange to find that person missing before a great while, and would it not be rather natural to expect a course of conduct upon the part of the fraternity corresponding very nearly to the Morenci tragedy to cover up all traces that would lead to a discovery of the guilty parties? Suffice it to say, that all who are known to have acted a prominent part in this tragedy were men of the craft.

The Corner-Stone Protest in Washington.

Mr. Aaron Floyd, of Pittsburgh, one of the committee appointed at Syracuse to present the protest to Pres. Grant, writes after his return under date of June 19th. He says:

"On last Friday I received a telegram from Mr. Kirkpatrick saying that he would send the memorial next day, and as it had not arrived on Monday at 1 o'clock I telegraphed to him to know whether he sent the package to Pittsburgh or Washington, but failed to get an answer. So on Tuesday I took the package of 643 names you sent and 100 others, and started for Washington, leaving word at home to forward to me at the Arlington House. I arrived there about nine o'clock the same evening. Next morning learned of the Secretary of the President that there had been other names received from West Virginia, and they had been referred to the Secretary of the Treasury. Next morning I got Gen. Negley to give me a letter of introduction to Gen. Babcock, who introduced me to the President. I soon made known my business. He said he had seen the proceedings of the Syracuse Convention. I then handed him the heading [of the protest] to read, and told him that I had learned from his Secretary what course such papers take; to which he assented. I then bade him good-bye, and went to the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Bristow, who is not a Mason, but a free man. He referred me to the Superintending Architect's room, who read them and put them on file and gave his receipt.

When I got back to the hotel Mr. Kirkpatrick's answer had been forwarded and likewise the receipt of the express company, showing that the package was on the way from Pittsburgh; and at 3:30 o'clock it arrived. At 4 o'clock I had a receipt for it and parted with them on the square and took the cars at 5:50 for home, after I had written to Mr. Kirkpatrick that the long-looked-for package had come. Arrived at home this morning about 9 o'clock and found all well. Please let our friends know, for I know they feel anxious.

Mr. Ellis was so engaged he could not go. Yours "on the square,"

A. Floyd.

Did Nathaniel Colver Ever Renounce the Lodge?

Bemis Heights, N. Y., June 16, '74.

Dear Cynosure:

Bro. Hinman, State Lecturer of Illinois, writes me under date of May 27th, as follows: "I recently gave a lecture in Lockport, Ill. On the following Sunday evening the Baptist minister, Elder Breckenridge, replied to it. He said that Dr. Nathaniel Colver never renounced Masonry, and that the statement that I made that on taking a certain part of the Royal Arch oath, he said, 'Gentlemen, I will never take that oath'—was false." Bro. Hinman wants me to authenticate his statements thus called in question.

Now I don't want to call Elder B. any hard names, but here are the facts. I know that Dr. Nathaniel Colver did renounce Masonry, for I conversed with him on the subject while on his death bed in Chicago. Perhaps Elder Breckenridge will not, however, consider this authentic, so I will quote from Dr. Colver's biography written by Rev. J. A. Smith, D. D., editor of the Standard, a paper I suppose Elder B. must know something about.

His biographer says (page 66):

"He [Dr. Colver] became a Mason simply because he believed that in so doing he could be more useful as a minister of Jesus Christ. He renounced Masonry because he had come to feel that instead of helping, it only hindered such usefulness, and because convinced that he could not consistently be at the same time a Mason and a Christian."

This renunciation he published in 1829, with his reasons therefore.

As to the statement regarding the Royal Arch oath, I take the following from the same work, (page 75 and 76). Having been assured positively that there was nothing objectionable in that oath, Bro. Colver was at length prevailed on to apply for "exaltation—"

"The ceremony proceeded until that part of the oath was reached which contained the words, 'murder and treason not excepted.'"

'I cannot take that oath,' said Mr. Colver.

'You must take it,' replied the chief official.

Mr. Colver drew himself up with holding high positions in society, one of them a judge. It was hard to take a step likely even to alieneate them, an expression of strong indignation, and in his firmest and most emphatic way, answered: 'Gentlemen, I shall never take that oath.'

'You cannot leave this room alive unless you do,' was the reply.

This was too much. Those officiating in this scene were mostly his personal friends of long standing, men and if it had been possible to yield the point now at stake, their personal influence apart from any threats would have prevailed. But threats and the exhibition of a drawn sword with a view to intimidate roused all of Mr. Colver's manhood. In a few emphatic words he set before them the enormity of the wrong they were doing and the outrage of attempting to impose a burden upon his conscience against which his whole moral nature rose in protest, and then, turning, walked straight past the drawn sword at the door and went his way. This of course completely ended his connection with Masonry."

But see the book for the whole account. Elder Breckenridge would do well to add this book to his library. It would

"From many a foolish notion free him."

As to Bro. Colver's opinion of the institution for the last forty years of his life, I give the following extract from a letter written by him to a friend. It will be found on page 287 of the biography. He says of his feelings before his renunciation:

"I did not suffer more while under conviction for sin than I did in that terrible state. While thus suffering, I read one morning in the providence of God, for our family worship, concerning the forty Jews who bound themselves under oath, not to eat until they had killed Paul. It struck me, and unfettered my thought. I soon arrived at the conviction that they were morally bound, not by, but to repent of their oath; that any oath which contravenes the law of God is a matter of repentance and abandonment. I was free and my happiness and relief were little surpassed, when, in view of Christ, I first found the burden of sin removed. From that time to this, I have neither honored, obeyed or spared that lying impostor, Free and Accepted Masonry, I got out of the snare with repentance and brokeness of heart; but O, I thank God I am out!"

There, I guess that will do; and if Elder Breckenridge does not wish to bear the name of "willful deceiver," let him take an early opportunity to tell his congregation that in those statements of his he was "laboring under a mistake."

Corner-Stone Laying.

Palmyra, Wis.

Editor of the Christian Cynosure:

The corner-stone laying for the Custom-House in your beautiful and growing city seems at present to be demanding considerable attention. Should it be proposed that the Roman Catholic priesthood of the United States should be honored with this corner-stone laying business there would be a general uprising and a just and righteous indignation, on every hand. "Native Americans" and "Know-Nothings" would be as numerous and noisy as a regiment of tree-toads before a rain. But would it not be fully as improper for the white-aproned brigade to assume these conspicuous duties as for the Knights of the Cross? It seems strange that there should be: 1st, Such an apathy and "don't-care-ativeness" on the part of the people generally; and 2d, It is passing strange that so many weak men and vain women are found to give such a move their warm approbation.

OUR MAIL.

A friend in Racine, Wis., sends two subscriptions with four dollars, and writes:

"If I had time I could send you more names."

Do not forget to forward them when the rush of business is quieted somewhat.

Hiel Lewis, Amboy, Ill., writes:

"While in Kansas I tried to get subscribers, but all in vain. Masonry and other secret societies were considered the great power of God, and woe to the man that would not bow the knee. My name and character as an Anti-mason went before me, and the lodge men were acquainted with me before I got there. Some friends cautioned me to be quiet or it might not fare so well with me, but I told them more truth than they were willing to hear."

J. R. Shearer, East Nodaway, Ind., writes:

"Count me in the good cause. I want no commission. . . . Will try and send you a few more from here."

Aaron C. Salisbury, Cherokee, Iowa, writes:

"I have read the Cynosure one year and endorse the principles it advocates. I am an Anti-mason, soul and body. (No compromise with the devil or his pet institution, the lodge.)

Do not be discouraged, friends of reform, God is raising up friends for the cause every day. . . . I can get some more subscribers after harvest. Yours for the truth as it is in the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ."

E. E. Morrison, Kirkville, Pa., sends us the name of a man who will get up a club for the Cynosure if we send him sample copies. We need more agents ready, willing and able to work in selling books or taking subscriptions.

James Barnett, Northwood, O., writes:

"One thing standing in the way of obtaining subscribers is the sympathy of professors of religion of all classes. They do not like to hear people exposed whom they call brethren. With a great portion all Protestants are brethren."

For the satisfaction of such persons please tell them that the Cynosure not only regards all Protestants as brethren, but recognizes the principle that by nature, we are all one family; and that all who show that they believe in Christ by keeping his commandments, are in a Christian brotherhood. We do not enjoy exposing the evil deeds of our brothers (either natural or Christian); we wish they had no evil deeds to expose; but a love for these who are ignorant, innocent and honest, together with a reverence for the government of God, compels us to choose the lesser of two evils, viz: to expose falsehood, conspiracy and rebellion in our great human family, thus promoting harmony, justice, and good government, rather than by joining with or quietly ignoring the acts of such rebels to support their conduct which will ruin all correct family relations based upon the principle of loving our neighbor as ourself, and annihilate the closer bonds of Christian fellowship.

John Christie, Penfield, O., writes of the Cynosure:

"I am very well pleased with its new form."

Wells Springer, Rochester, N. Y., writes:

"I am now on a visit to this place and find a few congenial spirits with my own in the cause you are nobly combatting against such fearful odds. Little heroic band, persevere in this righteous cause, if the great masses do not appreciate your efforts through fear or through favor, you have a consciousness of a reward that will overbalance the vindictiveness and malignity of a power that has greater facilities to strike the blow and conceal the hand than any other power now existing. I have planted some of the good seed obtained of you, in this place, with hopeful results. Bernard's Light on Masonry is going the rounds that I gave to a friend here some two years ago. Finney's book, the Confession of Valance, and a selection of your tracts, I now leave here to corroborate and confirm these great and important truths that Freemasons are so successfully denying. The worst feature of the case in this line is, that people at large seem averse to light on the magic and mysterious bondage they are under. I have a degree of charity for the youth of our land that are lured into its mysterious folds through the instrumentalities of the "good men" (so-called) that give character to the order. But should there be any excuse for the intelligent divine, the professed ambassador of Christ Jesus, to unite with such and hide his light under the Masonic bushel? For myself I have no faith in such men no matter what their antecedents are, apparently. . . . . The conclusion is irresistible that the "loaves and fishes," etc., had obscured their spiritual vision, otherwise they were wilfully blind. Another class that number but few now living, that of the old Anti-masons like myself, I cannot excuse for hiding their light by keeping entirely mum for any consideration whatever.

I hope to be able to lend you (in a small way) more efficient aid, than the deep sympathy that pervades my bosom in this righteous cause."

A friend describes many localities in writing about his own; he says that Masonry is very bad in his place; that the people will do nothing until war or a similar calamity rouses them. He says the women know nothing about Masonry, and the churches sleep, all but one pastor being Masons.

Such a report may discourage the feeble and timid, but to the encouraged and strong, it is the voice of a trumpet saying: On to the conflict. Press the battle.

David Mumma, Decatur, Ind., writes:

"I am a poor man but I have a dollar to spare just now to extend my subscription another six months, and then another dollar will make its appearance I trust. I like the paper very well. I am trying to get subscribers for it. I have a partial promise of two. I am giving my papers to my neighbors to read. Some like them."

D. C. Cone, Galva, Ill., writes:

"I will not do without my Cynosure. You may put me down as a life-long subscriber. I am anticipating some subscribers for your paper. Am opposed to the laying the corner-stones of the Post-Office and Custom-House by any secret organization whatever."

E. B. Parvin, Cuba, Ill., writes:

"I am well posted with regard to the secrecy influence both in and out of the church. To oppose it is to arouse the lion from his lair. Its influence on the church is baneful. I am glad therefore, that I belong to a church whose book of discipline forbids the union of our members in secret conclave with libertines, deists, atheists, Jesuits and others who insult and hate our Lord Jesus Christ and his church, and compel us to treat them as brothers in the same faith. Although our church, perhaps, has never been without law on the subject yet, however demoralizing it may be, and nothing can be more so, many of our brethren in high authority are slow to enforce the rule.

I am all alone in this place, no other anti-secret man, the spirit of Christ helpeth my infirmities, and in kindness I am giving hard blows."

L. Chittenden, on an eastward journey, writes:

"I scattered a few tracts on the cars after I left Syracuse, and such another time I never had before. I find they are greatly in need of light, even if it is candlelight."

He lectures in Clinton Co., N. Y., on his way East.

S. A. Reynolds, Waverly, Pa., writes:

"My heart is with you in this work of truth and light."

Caleb Gray, Halsey, Oregon, writes:

"Mr.——— has joined the grange and can find no further use for the paper."

Grangers generally let Masonry alone, or favor it.

Mr. Baird, Perry, O., writes:

"I will suggest one thing and that is, for you to publish in the Cynosure the different oaths that they take as they advance in the degrees as recorded in Bernard's Light on Masonry."

We are now about to publish an exposition of Odd-fellowship; after that, perhaps we may do so if we can make it convenient.

Thos. Padden, Laona, N. Y., writes:

"I was thirteen years old when Morgan was murdered, hence my aversion (to secret societies.) . . I obtained twenty-eight names to the petition. Worked hard for your paper, but could get no subscriptions."

Perhaps you may reap the fruits of this labor in the fall. Past observation shows that hard work persevered in, brings an increase after a time.

M. Allen, Randolph, Wis., writes:

"I am in sympathy with you. Cannot do much here yet. I am sowing seed; don't know what the crop will be. Our fight just now is license or no license; our Board don't license this year, and beer men are howling. Intemperance and Masonry are two vile creatures with me. I am in for the fight, and have been for the last fifty years."

W. Babcock, Farmington, N. Y., writes:

"Your circular found me on a bed of sickness, and since I received your last paper I still circulate the protest; though unwell I have got a few names (he sends sixty-eight) and should have got many more if the weather had permitted me to go out. The farmers and country people are very willing to sign, but in our villages they are more shy. Some Masons wanted to know who was my employer? They thought such a old man might be better employed. God bless the cause and open the eyes of the nation."

ODD FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

REGULATIONS FOR OPENING, CONDUCTING AND CLOSING A LODGE.

NOTE.—This illustrated exposition of Odd-fellowship will be published in book form before Sept. 1st, 1874. (See Advertisement.)

One rap by the Gavel of the Noble Grand, repeated by the Vice Grand, commands silence and order.

The Noble Grand having called the lodge to order, says: Officers, take your respective stations; Guardian, secure the door; Warden, examine the brethren in the lodge room.

In some lodges, if no one is suspected, the Warden says: all right, Noble Grand. But in others, he goes round and holds his ear to each one in the room, to receive the quarterly password which is given in a whisper. The Warden returns in the same manner the explanation as it is called, i. e. The password being frater, the explanation is brother.

If all have the correct password, the Warden says: All right, Noble Grand. If any do not have it or have forgotten it, the Warden reports the exception. If he is a member and good on the book, the Noble Grand gives him the word. If his dues are not paid, he must first pay them.

Noble Grand to Vice Grand.—What is your duty in the lodge?

Ans.—To act in conjunction with you in maintaining order; to require brethren to be decorous during lodge hours; to enforce in your absence, a due observance of the laws, and to assist you in the performance of your duties.

Noble Grand to Vice Grand.—Vice Grand, examine your Supporters.

Ans.—To observe that Brothers give the signs correctly and behave properly; to report to you the names of such Brothers as do not conduct themselves according to the regulations of the order, and to occupy your chair temporarily, when vacated by you during lodge hours.

Ans.—To act in conjunction with your Right Supporter and to officiate for him in his absence.

Vice Grand to Noble Grand.—My officers are correct, Noble Grand.

Noble Grand to Secretary.—Secretary, what is your duty?

Ans. by Recording Secretary.—It is to keep accurate minutes of the transactions of this lodge.

Ans. by Permanent Secretary.—To keep correctly the accounts between this lodge and its members, without prejudice or partiality; to receive all monies and pay the same to the Treasurer. (Some Lodges have only one Secretary).

Noble Grand to Warden.—Warden, what is your duty?

Ans.—To examine the Brethren with circumspection, before the lodge is opened; to give the charge of my office, on the initiation of a Brother; to place and replace the regalia in a careful way, and report to you any damage it may have received.

Ans.—To support you in keeping order; to execute your command; to assist at the initiation of a Brother; to open and close the lodge in due form, and to see that the signs are given correctly.

Ans. To see that Brothers who enter the room are in proper regalia, and give the signs correctly; to officiate for your Right Supporter in his absence, and to assist at the initiation of a Brother.

Noble Grand to Outside Guardian. Outside Guardian, what is your duty?

Ans. When candidates are to be initiated, or Brothers admitted, to see that they are orderly and qualified according to lodge rules; to examine and reject any one I suspect, until your opinion is taken; to receive the pass-word previous to admission, and to guard the lodge from any improper intrusion; to prevent the admittance of any one during the opening of the lodge, the initiation of a candidate or at other times, when so directed; to prevent any person from listening, to acquire a knowledge of what is going on in the lodge, and to act in conjunction with the Supporters and Inside Guardian in the execution of your commands.

Noble Grand to Inside Guardian. Inside Guardian, what is your duty?

Ans. To receive the explanation of the pass-word; to act in conjunction with the Outside Guardian; during his absence, to officiate for him and obey your commands.

Noble Grand to the lodge. Officers and Brothers, I hope and expect each Officer will do his duty, and that Brothers will be orderly and attentive to the business of the evening, so that we may not be under the necessity of enforcing the restrictive laws or fines. It is a duty incumbent on the Noble Grand to judge impartially of every transaction and to admit no Brother, except members of this lodge, who has not received the pass-word of the current quarter. [This charge is not intended to exclude strangers having traveling cards of the order, or others having indisputable evidence that they are worthy Brothers] I therefore trust that all will act with prudence, zeal and integrity, as on these virtues depend our happiness and comfort; keeping in view that philanthropic principle by which we hail each others as Brothers—regarding our lodge as as our family, and whose actions, if founded on that grand principle, are calculated to make men social and humane. Officers and Brothers, I will thank you to be standing and assist my Right Supporter in opening the lodge.

OPENING ODE.

Brethren of our friendly Order,
Honor here asserts her sway;
All within our sacred border
Must her stern commands obey.

Join Odd Fellowship of brothers,
In the song of truth and love;
Leave disputes and strife to others,
We in harmony must move.

Honor to her court invites us,
Worthy subjects let us prove;
Strong the chain that here unites us
Linked with friendship, truth and love.

In our hearts enshrined and cherished,
May these feelings ever bloom;
Failing not when life has perished,
Living still beyond the tomb.

Right supporter, addressing the lodge. By direction of our Noble Grand, I proclaim this lodge duly opened for the transaction of such business as may be lawfully brought before it, and, for the diffusion of principles of benevolence and charity.

Noble Grand to the Lodge. During which time we admit of no political, sectarian or other improper debate under penalty.

[The lodge is usually opened and closed by prayer, if the Chaplain is present. Some lodges have a Chapter read at the opening.]

OPENING PRAYER.*

"Thou King eternal, immortal, and invisible! the only wise God, our Savior! Thou art the Sovereign of Universal nature, the only true object of our best and holiest affections. We render Thee hearty thanks for that kind providence which has preserved us during the past week, protecting us from the perils and dangers of this life, and for permitting us now to assemble in Thy name for the transaction of business.

We humbly beseech thee, our Heavenly Father, to preside over our assembly, to breathe into our hearts the spirit of love and of a sound mind; and may each and all be governed by an anxious desire to advance Thy glory and ameliorate the condition of mankind. Let thy blessing rest upon our Order, upon all the Lodges, Grand and Subordinate, belonging to our entire family of brothers. Let Friendship, Love and Truth prevail until the last tear of distress be wiped away, and the lodge below be absolved by the glory and grandeur of the Grand Lodge above.

This we ask in humble dependence upon, and in most solemn adoration of thy One mysterious and glorious Name. Amen."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

One rap by the gavel of the Noble Grand repeated by the Vice Grand commands silence and order for the transaction of business.

Noble Grand to Secretary. Brother Secretary, I will thank you to call the roll of officers, and read the proceedings of last lodge night. [The Secretary reads the minutes, which, if correct, stand adopted].

1st. Noble Grand to the Lodge. Does any Brother know of a sick brother or a brother in distress?

2d. Consideration of previous proposals for membership.

3d. Admission of candidates if any.

4th. Proposals for membership.

5th. Unfinished business appearing on the minutes.

6th. Has any brother anything to offer for the good of the order?

7th. Closing of the lodge.

INITIATION.

The candidate having been accepted by vote of the brothers, is taken into the ante-room of the lodge and catechized in the following manner by the Vice Grand or a Past Grand especially deputied, the answers being recorded in a book with printed questions and a blank for answers.

1. What is your name?
2. Where do you reside?
3. What is your occupation?
4. How old are you?
5. Do you hold membership in any other order of Odd Fellows or are you suspended or expelled from any lodge of this Order?
6. Are you, so far as you know, in sound health?
7. Do you believe in the existence of a Supreme, Intelligent Being, the Creator and preserver of the Universe?
8. Are you willing to subscribe to the truth of the answers you have now made?

The candidate signs his name to the answers given and his examiner attests the signature with his own name below. Should the candidate give an unsatisfactory answer to any of the questions, he is dismissed from the room and the case is reported to the lodge. Should all prove satisfactory, the examiner asks the candidate: Are you willing to enter into an obligation to keep secret all that may transpire during your Initiation? If this is answered in the affirmative, the candidate repeats after the examiner the following promise:

"I hereby pledge my sacred honor that I will keep secret whatever may transpire during my initiation."

*"Adopted by the Grand Lodge of the United States, to exclude prayers offensive to members of the Order in many of our Lodges. It also ordered that on all occasions of the Order, the same spirit as observed in the foregoing, shall be strictly followed by the officiating clergyman or chaplain."

"It is desirable and eminently proper that all Lodges should open and close with prayer! Each Subordinate may determine for itself upon opening and closing its session with prayer, and may determine, upon the form to be used!"—Digest G. L. U. S. p 123. Grosch's Odd Fellow's Pocket Manual pp 249-50.

ONE THOUSAND SUBSCRIBERS IN INDIANA.

We hope every one of our Indiana subscribers read the publisher's department last week.

A year ago last May we wrote, "Indiana is fifth in the list. . . . If those (states) above her are not so diligent she will go above them."

This has become a fact. Indiana is now third on our list.

Her State Agent asked the people to work for the Cynosure and said he intended, if possible, to have a thousand copies taken in the State by the fourth of November, 1874. We hope and believe that this will be accomplished.

Read the following from James McConnell of Ligonier, Ind., recently received.

"We are taking steps to organize clubs in the several townships throughout this County, (Noble,) the object of which is to get a circulation for your paper and a fund to purchase anti-secret documents for distribution. If you will send me twenty-five copies of this week's Cynosure, I WILL SEE that you get a like number or more permanent subscribers from this County."

Who is the next to look after another twenty-five or more? Organize if you can but get subscribers whatever else is done.

ANTI-MASONIC CELEBRATIONS ON THE FOURTH OF JULY.

Those who cannot obtain speakers for Anti-masonic celebrations on the Fourth of July, can probably find some good reader to read the speech of Chas. W. Greene on the granges, published June 18th in the Cynosure.

Do all you can to promote this cause on that day, and then write to us of your success.

The Minutes of the Syracuse Convention will be published in pamphlet form. Price, single copy, 25 cents; $2.00 per dozen, post paid.

The season of college commencements is just the time to send in orders for the new pamphlet, "College Secret Societies." 35 cents single copies; $2.25 per doz. post paid, or $15.00 per 100, expressage extra.

Orders for Odd-fellowship Illustrated will be received. The book is to be published before September 1st. Price 25 cents each; $2.00 per doz., post paid.

Copies of the Cynosure containing the minutes can be had for two cents each, that is, as they extend through four numbers of the paper the complete minutes would come to eight cents, postage extra. The postage is one cent each, making the cost by mail three cents each, or twelve cents for the four numbers containing the complete minutes and addresses of Syracuse Convention.

BACK NUMBERS OF THE CYNOSURE FREE.

We have nearly a thousand copies of back numbers of the Cynosure, mostly May 21st and 28th, that will be sent free to all who will circulate them and to canvassers post paid. Those who do not wish them for canvassing are requested to send one cent each, for postage on the copies desired.

MEMBER'S TICKETS.—At Syracuse a plan was devised for our work. The plan is this: Tickets of membership are issued to be sold at twenty-five cents each. When any person by one payment of this sum becomes an annual member of the Association, his or her name, age and post-office address are written out in a book prepared for the purpose. Persons desiring life membership, can have it by the payment at one time of ten dollars. Tickets will be sent to known friends of the cause who make application, and also papers for the enrollment of members names. Now let all who want to see the secret lodges overthrown, set to work. Send at once for member's tickets, and let us see how many we can get on record against the lodge. All application for such tickets and all lists of members should be sent to C. A. Blanchard, Secretary N. C. A., 11 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Topics of the Time.

ANOTHER LEAF TURNED.—Theodore Tilton has at last broken his silence and spoken the word that has introduced what will probably prove the last act in the fearful drama commonly called Beecher and Tilton. This result has been directly caused by the ill-advised championship of Dr. Bacon, a Congregational minister of New Haven. He having (apparently) no work to do in saving souls, indites a series of articles to the N. Y. Independent lauding Beecher and, by insinuation, condemning Tilton. Mr. Tilton in self-defense prints a statement of the matter from the first, including part of a note from Mr. Beecher written in 1871, in which he begs Mr. Tilton's pardon for a grevious wrong, and wishes that he were dead. Tilton also says that Mr. Beecher has committed a crime against him which he forbears to name or characterize. There is to be another scene in this act. In some way or other this nameless wrong is to be named. Its truth proved or disproved, and the Christian world will deplore his fall or rejoice in his vindication. The end is at hand.

TO LICENSE LAWLESSNESS.—Twenty years ago Massachusetts had a stringent and effective prohibitory law. It was brought in by the reformation in the churches. After a while the Washingtonians pushed the ministers who inaugurated the movement one side, and then the secret temperance orders pushed out the Washingtonians. To-day the State is full of those secret orders and the temperance sentiment weaker than it has been since the first prohibitory law was passed. Just now the legislature has done two things: passed an act abolishing the State constabulary, and another licensing rum. Gov. Talbot has also done two things, that is, vetoed both these acts. What is the State constabulary? A body of men acting under a chief constable whose duty it is to detect and arrest violators of the State liquor laws. The men thus employed are many of them Masons and have neglected to enforce the law on the Masonic liquor-sellers. They have, however, done a good deal, and Massachusetts is as much better than Pennsylvania in regard to this traffic as light is better for workmen than darkness. The legislature is now largely in the hands of little Freemasons and G. A. R. men who have varied their statesmanlike practices on Sumner by acts to license lawlessness. We never heard of Gov. Talbot before, but give a "God speed" in his work so far as reported.

CENTRAL BAPTIST CHURCH.—This beautiful building in Syracuse, N. Y., has just caused the death of fourteen persons and the serious injury of fifty more. As a large company were gathered in the parlors the floor gave way; three hundred people were precipitated to the room below, and then the cries of the wounded rang out on the night air. The newspapers of the country are making this the text of sermons on incompetent architects and penurious people. We choose to derive another lesson from it. Is it or is it not true that the large majority of men, even church members, are absorbed in pursuit of two things, money and pleasure? Is it or is it not true that prayer meetings are almost a "lost means of grace," and that festivals, concerts, operas and lectures have pushed them into a very small corner of the religious world? Is it or is it not true that men are more anxious, many of them, to have a large church than a pure one? To have a fine building than one less costly where seats are free! To have a popular minister than one who is busy about the living reforms of to-day? Is it or is it not true that the catechism is thrown aside for the exceedingly thin Sabbath-school book, and that pastoral visits have degenerated into social calls? We have no answer to make to those questions, save the general one that the churches are in many instances losing their spiritual power by conformity to the world. We have no quarrel with innocent festivals like the one in progress when this fearful event took place. We only wish our fellow Christians to study this and the many like providences that are occurring, to ascertain if we are not in danger of departing from our God. Aside from his service there is no security for body or soul. Let us build up the prayer meeting and draw near to our Lord.

MAKING THEM STAND UP.—Within a few years past there have been three Masonic funerals in Wheaton, Illinois. At the first of the three there was hardly a corporal's guard present. When the second came there was an effort made to have a good turn out. Masons came from all surrounding villgaes, washed their faces and behaved very well until the services were over, when they felt so badly that they were compelled to fill the two saloons of the place perfectly full of their white linen aprons (the emblem of innocence and badge of a Mason, etc.,) to obtain spiritual consolation. This was a little worse than to have a small turn out. So when the third funeral came they fell back on the home guard, and this time again we were exhorted not to despise the day of small things. One Mason who was dodging around behind the other processions took up his apron and followed them and a new comer or two helped to keep them in countenance; but it was a slim affair. After it was over a young gentleman said to one of the "brothers" "Why don't all the Masons turn out in your processions?" "Well," said he, "they have got to do it. We ain't going to have men any longer that are ashamed to come out on the street with us." This is all right. By all means let us know who they are, and let any man that is ashamed to wear his bib be turned out for unmasonic conduct. We have known some fellows to be in the ring for years and never follow the apron (in public) till the "greatest and best men of every age" would extend their privileges by getting them an office. These men who are "endowed with a competency of divine (Masonic) wisdom so that they can get office before they march with the Masons are a mean set. Make them all come out and stand up. Every good Mason should be willing to march whether he gets an office or not. Altogether they should sweetly sing:

In the Mason's bib I glory
Stretching o'er my abdomen;
All the innocence of ages
It describes when it is clean.

Bribes and printing steals unending
The apron still doth sanctify;
Buy it, wear it and then wash it,
You will need it when you die.

THE GAG LAW.—Senator Carpenter has just written a long letter to prove that his "act to muzzle the press" was not intended and could not be used to prevent free publication of all things which the people require to know. He says that a suit against a New York paper could not be prosecuted in Washington under his act. He then goes on to show that it ought to be possible to prosecute them in exactly that way. He says that the law of libel is no worse than a law against stealing, and that neither one can trouble an honest man. Of course no one expects a Senator of this period to make an ambiguous statement when about to attempt a wholesale destruction of the liberty of the press. The second section of the act is an involved and unintelligible jumble of words which seem to mean that a firm doing business by an agent in any State or Territory, may be called to trial in that State or Territory, including the District of Columbia, by a process served on the agent and his principal. Now if the apparent meaning is the true one, there is no reason to doubt, and every reason to believe, that it would apply to newspapers and was designed to apply to them. As to his statement that honest men need not dread the action of a law they do not violate, that depends wholly on circumstances. When laws are administered justly and swiftly, it is true. When Barnad, Carlozo, and their ilk are on the bench, it is very false. To call a Senator to trial before a jury composed of that Senator's clerks and suppliants would be just as sensible as to allow that Senator to drag one against whom he had a personal spite a thousand miles to stand trial before that same dependent jury. In neither case would an ordinary man expect to see justice done. There is one apology for the Senate possible. They tried to pass an inflation act and made one for contracting the currency. Then they tried to pass a hard money act and made one for inflation. If they have done as well as they knew how they are not to be blamed for an honest, insurmountable stupidity.

THE SYRACUSE CONVENTION.

The Power of Will.

Sung by Mr. Clark in the Syracuse Mass Meeting.

We have faith in old proverbs full surely,
For wisdom hath traced what they tell,
And truth may be drawn up as purely
From them as it may from a well;
Let us question the thinkers and doers
And hear what they honestly say,
And you'll find they believe like bold wooers,
That where there's a will there's a way.

The hills have been high for man's mounting;
The woods have been dense for his axe;
The stars have been thick for his counting;
The sands have been wide for his tracks;
The sea has been deep for his diving;
The poles have been wide for his sway;
Yet bravely he's proved by his striving
That where there's a will there's a way.

Have you poverty's pinchings to cope with?
Does suffering weigh down your might?
Only call up a spirit to hope with,
And dawn will come out of the night.
O, much may be done by defying
The boasts of despair and dismay,
And much may be done by relying
On—where there's a will there's a way.

Do you see afar off that worth winning,
Set out on the journey with trust;
And ne'er heed if your path at beginning
Be filled full of brambles and dust;
Though it is but by footsteps ye do it,
And hardships may hinder and stay,
Keep a heart and be sure you'll get through it,
For where there's a will there's a way.

Views of E. Honeywell,

ON SPREADING FREE TRACTS BEFORE OUR YOUTH, AND VOTING FOR FREE MEN TO MAKE OUR LAWS.

GENTLEMEN:—If we want to abate a nuisance we must stop the fountain that feeds that nuisance; else our labor is vain. So, if the workings of Lucifer in dark dens is a mystery to our youth, just send them a leaflet showing what that dark work is, and their mysterious puzzle is solved. Then that itching curiosity impelling them into a lodge is abated, and they will feel a deep loathing and hatred of all its death penalties. Therefore, if mystery is the life-blood of Masonry, and you know it is, we have only to remove that mystery and our work is done.

Now, as one of the measures for removing it, I suggest that this Convention, through a committee, send out its own tract, directed specially to our 5,000,000 young men, showing them the inside workings of the lodge, and pledging our own veracity for the truth of every word given in that tract; so that no honest man could any longer cavil as to the clearness and fulness of its testimony. This showing would remove that mysticism—that ignis fatuus—that now lures our sons into the lodge; and it would thus stop the flood of new recruits,—a result which, in my own vicinity, I have already seen. Then, if the lodge gets no more recruits, its extinction becomes inevitable. We know that ignorance is the strongest weapon that Masonry has. Shall we then encourage that ignorance by letting our sons, for want of information, be wheedled away into sly dens where banditti will chain them to servitude for life; and we, Galleo-like, care for none of these things? Heaven forbid it. We must show our boys that none but the wicked flee—into dens—when no man pursueth, for the righteous are bold as a lion. (If these expressions seem harsh, just compare them with threatenings in the lodge room, to tear out human vitals, to broil their brains, to burn the quivering bowels, and to gibbet the defaulter on the highest spire in Christendom, or to actually drown him in the Niagara River! and I think you will then complain no more of my words being harsh.)

I want a ticket ready, too, so that each man may use it just as soon as he can see through the turbid inconsistencies that now surround him: for even Antimasons have long been voting that oath-bound clansmen shall lay our corner-stones and be our law makers and our judges.. Is not this a glaring inconsistency? If we pray for God's kingdom to come, why not vote down the obstructions that stand in its way? And if the vile craft that mobbed and shot brother Rathbun is no obstruction to the free course of God's kingdom, then Lucifer himself has no weapons that will obstruct it. I know, for I have seen it, that time-servers who truckle to popular opinion, right or wrong, will not dare use a truly consistent vote till they are enlightened; for they think if their great "Diana" should be set at naught and be despised they could no longer sell their "silver shrines." Popular sentiment on popular crimes has long shown itself to be just like that of the hired girl at my house twenty years ago, who said, "I don't want slavery abolished if it's going to make calico any dearer." This was a true type of public justice to the slave. Each man then, as now, wanted to sell the silver shrines of his Diana, and so gave her his vote. But, knowing as I did thirty-seven years ago, that somebody must strike the first blow in each locality, I then gave one solitary Anti-masonic vote in old Steuben, N. Y. The next year we had two such votes; and the fourth or fifth year elected most of our town officers. This opened the eyes of our time-servers; and in twenty years more that same kind of ticket elected Abraham Lincoln, whose righteous fiat buried slavery below the sordid reach of a Jeff. Davis, or even of that Albert Pike, whose magniloquent and all "puissant" title is (as published), "Thrice Illustrious Sovereign Grand Commander of the Supreme Grand Council of Inspectors of the 33d degree of Masonry." This is only one of his bombastic titles. Just imagine then, if you can, the predicament a Masonic President of our nation must be in, when an order is "handed, sent, or thrown" to him by such a prodigy of power as is this ex-traitor Pike. If such President is under a death-penalty to obey that Masonic order, then is not our nation, in such case, ruled by secret dens? Shall we let Masonry continue to give us just such Presidents forever? We want men in office who dare stand up straight even if Lucifer stand before them with a bribe in one hand and a lash in the other. I was once floating with the current down the Mississippi River, and that current ran our boat into a whirling vortex, where it took very hard rowing to get it out again. And if we let our votes run with the heedless current, they will soon lead us into a vortex of still worse danger than that was.

Is it not a lamentable fact that popular opinion is, in many cases, the greatest knave and the silliest novice that we have? Twenty years ago a man could, and did, sell his brother man into heathenizing slavery for life, and then send that price of his brother's blood to Burmah to Christianize heathen there, who are far better than himself!—and the unthinking multitude called him a saint. Our brother Tillinghast, of Pennsylvania, himself stoned for preaching liberty to the captive, remembers, he tells me, when Wm. L. Garrison was led by a rope round his neck through the streets of Boston, because he would not join the wicked multitude in bowing servile homage to Southern slavery. And what better now? For it is a well known fact that men in broadcloth may decoy our sons into a garret, there blind-fold, strip and halter them; then, while the door is still watched with a drawn sword, make the initiate swear that he will never tell even his father, his mother, or his wife how he is befooled on penalty of having his throat cut and his tongue and vitals torn out! At a following election the thoughtless crowds take those same kidnappers of our children and, by their votes, make them our governors, our senators, and even the wicked incumbents in some of our sacred pulpits. This shows me the "Abomination of Desolation" standing in the holy place, as once seen by Daniel the prophet.

Time was when men could vote to drown witches. Again, they could vote for hounding and murdering slaves. And now they vote for legislators who protect and promote secret clans where our innocent children are slyly lured in, haltered and subjugated to bandits for life. Is it not time to stop such wicked voting? If we vote for either Masons or their sycophants we vote for chartering their five thousands dens: for even our Congress has chartered a Masonic Hall at the capital of our nation. Masonry was the sire and the nurse of American slavery; and the basis and pedestal on which it rested and flourished. And we must vote down that sire of such progeny, or it will again batter down our Fort Sumters; and then, like Æsop's fabled snake, bite our children till we are compelled in self-defense, as Lincoln was, to slaughter that snake with the sword. Thousands are now ready to help vote down Masonry, only that they are afraid of being "put out of the synagogue;" "for they fear the face of men more than they fear the face of God." But where unfettered freedom becomes popular, men will be as much ashamed that they were ever Jack-masons as they now are that they voted fetters on the slave just as long as such voting was popular.

I believe that great good would result from having the demoniac penalties, the loathsome absurdities, and the blood-curdling blasphemies of the lodge shown to our innocent youth before they are enslaved by them. For those youth are soon to be the pillars of our country. And not a man among them, if imbued with good sense, would ever enlist in the service of a "worshipful master" after knowing that a sharp sword would thenceforth hang dangling over his head for life by a single hair.

Though every secret lodge were wiped out from our land, if the young men are left ignorant of lodge-workings, they would soon rush into such seas of pollution and again endanger our country. We have already done much to enlighten our youth, but we can do more. The Cynosure Office has sent out cart-loads of Anti-masonic literature, and I have myself got more than 300,000 pages printed, showing to our sons full and positive proof of the vile oaths, death-penalties, and traitorous workings of Masonic law in its secret lodges. But we ought to have at least 2,000,000 tracts put into the hands of our 5,000,000 young men, each leaflet showing them full and convincing proof that the threatened agonies of a brutal death await the initiate as the penalty for an unguarded word or an act, which, in either civil or in gospel law, would be a virtue. I want each young man should know that just such threatenings will chill his soul for life, and perhaps longer, if he goes blindly into such sly dens—dens where just such treason as bred the rebel war is conceived, hatched and trained, ready for other bloody rebellions. Sirs, if we let our youth fall into sly pits for want of light that we can give, I shall say to you as Cicero, on a less evil, said to a Roman court, "Fathers, it must not be; it must not be; unless you would undermine the very foundations of social safety, strangle justice, and call down anarchy, massacre and ruin on the commonwealth."

Now, if by spreading tracts and books, we can enlighten most of our young men, then traveling lecturers will be in less danger of violence, and the people more disposed to hear and heed them. Each tract will also advertise the Cynosure and will break ice so that the paper may safely follow. Some of our leaflets will fall among thorns, and some under the feet of swine who may turn and try to rend you; but others will fall on good ground and bear fruit. I have found good Christian friends in about half our States ready and willing, as scores of their letters tell me, to take and distribute tracts. And Ezra A. Cook writes me that he has calls for 100,000 pages a month. When slavery was riding rampant over us, as Masonry is today, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was sent out broad-cast over the land; and it opened the eyes, mollified the marbled heart, and nerved the arm of millions in defense of freedom. God has said, "Let there be light," and it is ours to help spread that light for him and for our country.

All sins of hoary age are seen through a deep mental fog. We first acquiess, then endorse, and at last we idolize them; so that even the mote must be picked from the eyes of our best men before they can see that such idolatry is any sin at all. Even the burning of live widows has in some places been popular. The pipe is now the idol of millions. All the grog shops in Christendom have not as many obsequious sycophants as the pipe has. Full proof of such blindness is now before us; for we see the world in commotion trying to stop the flow of intemperance; while the statute law in perhaps every State of the Union, is still selling indulgences for making drunkards. Our good women who are fined a hundred dollars for giving one vote only, are out by the thousands trying to stop that stream of pollution now flowing legitimately from our statute books. Our legislatures are feeding the fountain while our women are trying to stop its nauseating streams. And our excise-boards seem to serve as the street-gutters through which those streams flow to poison the nation. Yet not one man in fifty can see through the fog that hides that polluting fountain of drunkenness from his sight. That law, through its agents, sell license to a set of men for making other men drunk. Thus the grog-shop sells its whiskey according to law; and the drunkard is made drunk according to law. Then he is fined according to law for getting drunk according to law, and the bread is taken by law from the mouths of his wife and children to pay that fine. Thus the law makes a public example of that wife and her children to show the rest of the world the importance of whiskey law. And Satan, I suppose chuckles in a glow of pomposity, on seeing the wheelcs of his machinery play together so smoothly in support of his laws. Has not the State just as much right to license me to steal your horse as it has to license Jim Boniface to make your son a drunkard? Yet not one in twenty of the legislators or of their constituents can pierce the murky mist that hides this legalized serpent of intemperance from his mental sight. Neither can he see that all this wickedness is based on the popular vote—a vote given for a national sin.

And yet that lurid fog which Masonry ejects to blind, cheat, and entrap our innocent youth, is still more congenial to Satan's rule in the earth than is the above anomalism of whisky law; and our national vote still says, "So mote it be." Can we any longer vote for such rule, such fog, and such dark dens, and not sin? Let a tract, as first suggested, be got up and go to the world by authority of this Convention, showing our sons an exact copy of the servile oaths, the fiendish penalties and the sickening obscenities of that great sire of secretism called Masonry, and they will read it, and then they will be able to bid bold defiance to all the Masonic snares that are now set for them. The tract should show plainly (and that showing should be confirmed by this Convention) that every charge made in it is already proven by hundreds, perhaps thousands, of honest ex-Masons who have simply reported their own practical experience in the lodges. Yet some Masons will tell us they have no such oaths,—for they are sworn to deny them. I ask you to pity such men. But when they murdered Morgan and others for revealing them, they sealed the fact of such oaths beyond the possibility of refutation! and it is ours to spread these facts before our young America. Our sons could never even spell their own names if never told how; neither can they ever know that Masonry cuts human throats and tears out human tongues and vitals, till they are told. But many Masons, as we are glad to know, would recoil from Masonic murders. Yet its laws and its Danites, like those of Brigam Young, all working in dead of night, are inexorable executioners. And its better members have to bow submission or renounce Masonry forever.

The Cynosure office, Chicago, writes me that it would find paper and print—for this Convention—a half million such tracts as this [show it] for sixty-three cents per 1,000; sixteen full tracts, or 28,000 words, for one cent. But we must call for one or two hundred thousand at each issue. Eighty-five such tracts are mailed to Oregon for two cents.

Had the boys of Ithaca first read all the oaths and crimes of Masonry, they never could have debased themselves to the level of brutes, as those did who, at Blanchard's lecture there, crouched to the service of Satan, by acting as docile employees and cats'-paws at the bidding of their most "worshipful" clan-made masters.

Now, brethren, shall we let other millions of boys who, in their innocence, are floating along the public tide, ignorant of the fatal gorges so near them, and of the still deeper pits of pollution before them—from which bourn none who enter ever escape but at the peril of dear life—shall we, I ask, let them fall into such pits unwarned? Shall we let them thus sink their manhood, lose their honesty and self-respect, pay a heavy tribute to ring-leaders, become servile lackeys to a master, and have a lie hermetically sealed on their lips for life, all for want of that light that we might give? If we refuse this light to our sons, will they not lay the sin of their fall at our doors, and we be compelled to assume it just so far as we neglect them?

Address of Mrs. M. J. Gage.

On being introduced to the Convention Mrs. Gage remarked that she was an accredited delegate to this National Convention from the New York State Association. She had always been opposed to secret societies. Her father had been a Mason, but seceded, and was active in his opposition to the lodge. Among her early recollections was reading Giddin's Almanac which her father used to circulate. It was the great grief of her heart that her husband was a Mason; but by her personal efforts her son was kept from joining any secret fraternity.

She was opposed to secret societies for many reasons and among them the following: These societies are the worst enemies of the most holy and precious of human relations, that of marriage. Lodge nights are prolific of disasters to the social condition. Secret societies destroy perfect confidence between man and wife; they interfere with the real, true family circle; they set one sex against another. Masonry was obnoxious in law, standing in the way of justice. It's operations against woman in this respect was seen not long ago in a very celebrated case in the Pacific coast, in which a woman on trial for her life could not get justice, through the secret workings of Masonry. Her husband had been a Mason, and the man she murdered was a Mason. The fraternity endeavored to obtain her conviction in revenge for the murder of one of their number.

Masonry excludes women, not for any great secrets it may have, but because of shame for its indecent ceremonies. How could any honest member of a Christian church, any true Christian minister take such awful obligations and in such an immodest manner! The whole thing is nothing but child's play. For instance, the questions and answers given at the door of the lodge to a candidate are very much like the children's plays. The Masons say when the knock is given, "Who comes there?" The answer is, "A poor blind candidate seeking light." Children have a game in which they use similar expressions.

The reason for admitting women to the side degrees was that she had become anxious to share any good or glory that her brothers might obtain from Masonry, and began to make her rights as an equal known. The Masons took alarm, but it would never do to admit women to the lodge with men on account of their immodest ceremonies, and so a side degree was got up to put off troublesome applicants. Masons were compelled to admit women in some way or admit themselves falling behind the age. She was urged years ago to become a member, but she would not be insulted with a pretended admission. If there was any good in the institution she had a right to it in common with other members of society, and she would have the whole thing or none. Side issues were only a farce. She wanted none of them.

Masons were accustomed to dilate and wax eloquent upon the ancient and mysterious origin of their order. If she had the tracing back of the ancient origin of Masonry, she would carry it to the time of Adam and Eve when they were induced to put on aprons by a circumstance not very creditable to them. The devil had a prominent part in the putting on of those aprons, and no doubt he had much to do with the modern aproned fraternity.

She was not sure but the love of finery among the men, (not being confined to women alone) was a reason why they joined the Masons; and the indulgence of curiosity, (not alone confined to women either), might also be another reason for their taking the various degrees. She liked to see women dress nicely, and put on ribbons and flowers if they were becoming and in good taste. But men must not charge women with devotion to dress and finery when they were attracted to the lodge for the same reason. But it is largely curiosity that draws to the lodge; and when men are in, the oath keeps them there. If they have a disgust and horror of the whole thing they feel bound to stay and finally become accustomed to the blasphemy and indecency. At the time of the French Revolution in 1793 the old Bastile was destroyed, and among the prisoners released was an old man who had been for many years in the dungeon. He found no relatives in the outside world, no old friends, no associations agreeable to him, so had his habits and tastes been changed by long associations with his dungeon. He had got used to the darkness and filth. So Masons get used to the darkness and wickedness and the creeping things in the lodge.

The National Association was urged to place woman on an equality with man in its noble work. The time is coming when she will receive all the privileges now denied her. If this reform is carried into politics, let woman have a share in the deliberations and give her the ballot. She will help on in this glorious reform.

Address of Elder J. R. Baird.

On the third evening the Convention listened to an address from Elder Baird, of Pennsylvania, a seceding Mason of seventeen degrees. He began his remarks by saying that he should not personally attack any one, but the principles of the order he should not spare in his denunciations. He was initiated a member of St. Andrew's Lodge of F. & A. M. No. 13, Canada, in 1854. He continued in the order eight years, attaining seventeen degrees, when he was converted to God and forsook the rotten concern. No man can be a Freemason and a Christian, on the ground that the obligations, practices, sympathies of Masons and Christians are antagonistic. He declared that Masons were worse than the devils in the time of Christ, because the devils finally acknowledged Christ; they believed and trembled, but the Masons neither believed nor trembled.

He believed Adam was the original Mason in this respect: he put on the apron of fig leaves and hid himself. The Masons say they are going to heaven to the presence of their Grand Master above. But that is their mistake. They deceive themselves. Their Grand Master is below, not above. For the Scripture saith that the Father hath committed all judgment to the Son. Therefore all things are under his power whether in heaven, earth, or hell. And again, it is said by Christ, Whosoever denieth me before men him will I also deny before my Father. Now the Masons as such reject Christ, cast out his name and Word. How then can they remain in heaven where Christ is to reign forever.

They say, too, that they are going to heaven on Jacob's ladder. But here they fail again of getting there, for Jacob only dreamed of a ladder and when he awoke there wasn't any ladder there. Hard work they will find climbing in by that way. Jacob acted like a Mason only once—when he cheated his brother and got the birthright. When he was old and near to die he said, "Oh my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honor, be not thou united!"

The innocence of Masonry is symbolized by the lambskin apron. Mackey tells us that in France the son of a Mason, who has reached the age of eighteen, may be taken into the lodge, but until he reaches his majority he wears a wolf's head mask, so that it appears from this account that Masonry is a wolf in sheep's clothing in practice as well as name.

Masons claim that Masonry is a system from God. It is true; it is from God; but it is a long way from God. For it is as far removed from the principles of the Bible as the poles. Masonry is as truly the opposite of Christianity as light is of darkness. They deceive themselves into a hope of reaching heaven without any salvation through Christ, for they reject him. But will they dare to come before God at the last and say, Have we not laid many corner-stones in thy name? Have we not held many festivals in thy name? Have we not destroyed many reputations in thy name? Have we not lied often; have we not put seceders to death in thy name? Will they bring such apologies to God? And yet they say that Masonry is from God, and these are the works of Masonry.

He had taken seventeen degrees in Masonry, how could the audience believe such a man—one who has taken so many oaths and broken them. He believed it to be the spirit and teaching of the Bible to disregard every Masonic oath. The Bible says "Whatsoever it be that a man pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these. And it shall be when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing." A Mason when he takes the oath is blinded in mind, his eyes are bandaged and he is in darkness—a three-fold blindness, a darkness that can be felt. In this condition he has no business to make promises and take oaths of obligation. But if he goes on and makes a consignment of himself to the devil what is there left of him; God says we must confess when it is known that wrong is concealed under the obligation. So let man revile and persecute; but let me honor God. It is the duty of Christian men to expose the sinful workings of these sinks of iniquity, and in exposing anything that is wrong no perjury is committed.

Some say, Why not preach the Gospel? What do you go rambling up and down the country for lecturing against Masonry? Why don't you proclaim the Gospel and let Masonry alone to die out of itself? Yes, that is the cry always. Slave-holders said, Let us alone; Masons cry out, Let us alone; the grangers say, Let us alone; and devils prayed, Let us alone, But Christ did not grant their prayer, and we ought not to suffer wickedness to go on unrebuked.

Masons make a great handle out of preachers, and coax them in by offering them membership free. If you join us it will not cost you anything; we'll take you in free. The preachers who join the lodge are the worst taken in set of men in the world. They make themselves thus a living lie to their own members and to the world; preaching one Gospel in church and practicing an exactly opposite one in the lodge. The churches are full of wrangling and disturbance and these Masonic ministers make a great part of it.

The higher a Mason gets in the order, the lower he sinks as a man. He had taken seventeen degrees down, instead of up, and knew the effect on the character. He became for a time an infidel through Masonic teachings. He could take no peace, no light, no liberty of the Holy Ghost until he gave up the whole thing. Then God blessed him and took from him the fear of man, so that he could speak boldly the whole truth on this subject. He had been an Orangeman, a Mason and a Good Templar. All secret orders, no matter of what nature, were but recruiting stations for Masonry. He had often seen Orangemen go home drunk, and yet nothing was done to rebuke them. Afterward when he joined the Good Templars he found himself in a strange position. He did not know what business he had to go home with other men's wives, but that was about all he saw going on. The society seemed to be a wholesale sparking school.

In conclusion he asked the prayers of the Association for his safety, as he was a subject of Masonic vengeance, which had vowed that he should be suppressed. He did not know whether he should be alive to meet with them again, but if death came he would meet it by inches rather than recant a single word, and so long as God spared him he should labor to expose the sophistries of all secret organizations.

Address of Rev. D. S. Caldwell.

[We hoped to present the excellent address of the Ohio Agent from his own manuscript, but as it has not reached us the following is written from notes taken at the time, as are the two preceding addresses, and of Elder Rathbun last week.—Ed.]

Mr. Caldwell said that in 1827, in the Morgan times, he was a boy six years of age. His father was a Freemason and a hotel keeper in Frederick county, Maryland, near Middletown. Though a Freemason he was not one at heart, for he often expressed his regret at having ever become connected with the order. The last time he saw his father was when he saddled his horse to go to Middletown, as he was accustomed to do pretty regularly to attend lodge and transact business. He never returned. Nor did any word ever come from him in any way. His mother always thought he came to his death at the hands of Freemasons. He had openly denounced the action of the order in connection with the Morgan murder and some unwary word may have brought down their vengence. He had ever since felt an opposition to the lodge.

But he was opposed to Freemasonry and like associations because he professed to be and was a Christian. He believed he could not be a Christian, or enjoy the love of God in his heart if he did not regard Freemasonry as a great evil. The Bible calls it an evil for it says that men love darkness because their deeds are evil. The Gospel is marked for its publicity, its openness; that is its very nature. In proportion to the open proclamation of the Gospel does Christianity flourish. But Masonry says you preach my gospel openly to the world, and I will persecute you, I will destroy you. How can such a thing be baptized as a Christian institution. Mackey says that to remove the land-mark of secrecy would be suicide to the institution.

Masonry believes in a God; but what one? For God the Father, Son and Holy Ghost is rejected by the order. I am, and forever shall be opposed to any system that rejects my Saviour; that slights the founder of Christianity.

Masonry swears men. Swears them without legal sanction. Swears them to do wrong and enforces the oath by terrible penalties. Its morality is that it is right to do wrong. In spite of what men may say, it does claim to be a religion; it does pretend to save men. But it saves them how? By utterly ignoring the Gospel of Christ, rejecting the office of the Holy Ghost, and denying the blood of the everlasting covenant.

When any evil is being taken in hand, the question of cowardly souls always is: Will it be safe to join the reform? Others ask is it expedient? But the question should be, Is it right? It is always expedient to do right. There can be no question about this. And always when right and truth are followed the result will show that the best thing has been done.

He spoke of several features of the Masonic oath and gave the following illustration of one: A foreigner traveling in America sees a notice posted in a car "No smoking allowed in this car." Now he must naturally infer that Americans smoke. It is just so with the clause in the Masonic oath not to violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, etc. The inference must be that Masons consider each other as perfect libertines and so put in the clause as a means of protection from each other's lusts. When railroads have such a regulation it will be found that a car for smokers is provided; and in so doing the railroad company gives its sanction to the vile habit. So the lodge in exempting part of the sex from the libertinism of its members, virtually sanctions in general, and so far as it is able legalizes adultery.

The Political Mass Meeting at Syracuse.

On Thursday afternoon, June 4th, the National Christian Association adjourned to permit such of its members as desired to unite in a mass meeting for the discussion of political measures against the lodge power. This meeting convened in Shakspeare Hall at 2 P. M., and elected Hon. Donald Kirkpatrick, of New York, chairman; J. A. Conant, of Connecticut, Secretary, and H. L. Kellogg, of Chicago, assistant. Rev. J. P. Stoddard, of Illinois, led in prayer. Before proceeding to business the chairman remarked that the present gathering is a mass convention to consider the advisability of political action in connection with the Anti-masonic reform. The National Christian Association which has been holding its annual meeting in this Hall is not responsible for any action taken this afternoon.

Mr. George W. Clark, the "Liberty Singer," was called on for a song, and responded very appropriately with "Where There's a Will There's a Way" (see second page), remarking that he used to sing those words to encourage the true-hearted men of anti-slavery days who entered the political field with as little hope of success as had the present reform.

President J. Blanchard said that a committee on political action was appointed last year at Monmouth who were instructed to consult and appoint a national political convention. They had considered this the most favorable time for such meeting. The committee had considered the various reforms knocking for admission to the platform, as temperance, woman's suffrage, etc.; but it had been deemed wisest at present to confine ourselves strictly to the reform against the lodge. He then read a preamble and resolutions, which, as finally adopted, read as follows:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

WHEREAS, As secrecy concerning all questions affecting the public welfare, is conducive to misapprehension and misconstruction, affording facility for and inducements to the prostitution of noble agencies to ignoble end; and

WHEREAS, We recognize secrecy as a relic of barbarism and the chief support of monarchical and unjust government and utterly inconsistent with all the principles on which our government is founded; therefore

Resolved, That secret orders are engines for selfish and political purposes, and are the chief danger and curse of the nation.

Resolved, That the grave truth uttered by Lincoln that no nation can permanently endure part slave and part free, is not plainer than this other truth that no nation can exist permanently with conflicting oaths in its court-houses and legislatures; we, therefore, agree to the following principles of political action:

1. We will be called by no party name but "Americans."

2. We will make issue against all known adhering Freemasons, when practicable, in all local, county and State elections, nominating candidates for ourselves against forsworn lodge men, and will do our utmost to put an electorial ticket in the field at our next Presidential canvass.

3. We hereby invite the friends of every great and wholesome reform, and in short every man, wherever born, who has a vote in his hand and an American heart in his bosom, to join us in seeking the extirpation of that organized mystery and secrecy which has proved fatal to the republics and subversive of all popular rights in the monarchies of the Old World.

Resolved, That we petition Congress and the legislatures for the repeal of the Masonic charters and the prohibition of extra-judicial oaths.

Resolved, That we will do all in our power to expose and suppress the laying of corner-stones of buildings owned by the people of the United States by lodges.

Resolved. That we proceed at once without waiting for legislative action to challenge adhering Freemasons from juries, and in case of litigation to take change of venue from Masonic judges.

Resolved, That we recognize the fact that ours is a Christian, not a heathen, nation, protecting us from the paganism, priestcraft and kingcraft which, having degraded manhood and extinguished popular rights in Asia, Africa and portions of Europe, are seeking to drag us down to their own level of despotism and wretchedness.

Before discussing the resolutions a motion was carried to limit the time of each speaker to five minutes and allow no one to speak more than once on the same motion.

Mr. C. W. Greene, of Indiana, moved to consider the resolutions seriatim. Farmer's political conventions, he said, were to be held in Indiana, Illinois and Kansas on the tenth of June. These conventions were in the interest of the grange. Any action had at the present time should be carefully taken.

This was agreed upon and the preamble adopted without discussion.

Upon the first resolution Pres. Blanchard remarked that when Brigham Young wanted a house built he pretended to have a revelation from God that it should be done and the Mormons obeyed. This is priestcraft and kingcraft the world over. The secret societies of Africa are of the same class. Seward's description of Asiatic customs explains the resolution.

W. M. Givens, of Indiana, read from an Indianapolis paper the notice of a candidate for the office of sheriff of Marion Co., Ind., among whose recommendations was his Masonic connection. Such things show what the Masons are preparing to do.

C. W. Greene said the granges get together and like all Americans they must talk politics. All they amount to is a school to learn subserviency to masters. He was opposed to the resolution because it was embodied in the preamble just adopted. Christians should not stand back and let evil men lead their politics. We are not ashamed of being here. He wished that the National Association had continued in its capacity and taken up this matter.

Prof. C. A. Blanchard moved to amend by striking out a word and make the resolution declarative.

Mr. G. W. Clark moved to amend by omitting the word "religious." These amendments were agreed to, and the resolution adopted.

The second resolution was adopted after being amended on motion of J. A. Conant to read "conflicting" instead of "two or more."

The next proposition called out a prolonged discussion. Mr. Greene wished the name might be stricken out. We were better off without any name; for the name "Americans" suggests the defunct Know-Nothing party and would have the opprobrium of the country.

N. Wardner moved to amend by substituting the name "National Reformers." The country was ripe for reform and this name would suggest our mission.

Pres. Blanchard spoke against the change. The term "Americans" expressed just what we stood for, equal rights, freedom of speech and of the press. The lodge wants a secret empire to destroy these. All who favor American principles should be Americans, and let all the rest be outsiders.

Rev. James Matthews said we believe in the Constitution. We be Americans. I was born in Old England, but born again here, and I am glad I am an American. The adoption of this name would be a going back to first principles. All will inquire, What are the principles of the new party. We can answer, We are going back to the glorious maxims of our fathers, on whose justice and truth the whole prosperity of our nation depends.

E. B. Rollins, of Vermont, suggested that the name "Free Americans" would be more appropriate, as marking a distinction from lodge-bound men who claimed to be Americans.

J. Levington, of Michigan, objected to the name "Americans," for, first, it was not true, and we have no right to say what is not true. Then it is assuming that we are Americans and others are not. Reformers is better; we are all reformers. He was in favor of that name. Free Americans is a good name. Perhaps we had better adopt that.

Mr. Rogers, of Lockport, N. Y., spoke in favor of the name "Liberty Party." That name stirred his heart in days of old and roused the same feelings now.

Mr. G. W. Clark moved to amend the amendment by using the term "Free American."

Rev. D. B. Douglass, of N. Y., remembered when the press of the country was in the control of slavery interests. There were then only seven papers which dared express sentiments hostile to the slave power. The churches were closed, the ministers silent. At length a call for political action resulted in the Liberty Party. He remembered the news of Birney's nomination and voted alone for him. We are in a like condition. The press and the church is in bondage. When the Niagara County Association was organized, it was hard to get even a notice into the papers. Three years later the editors wanted the whole proceedings to publish.

Richard Green, of Indiana, wanted the word "party" added to the name.

S. Wilder, of N. Y., favored the term American, and said the word "Free" would excite feelings at the South in those who might otherwise be with us.

D. Dempsey, of Black River, N. Y., said he was a foreigner by birth, but had come to this country and been adopted as a citizen. He wanted to be an American. We should have the name as well as the thing. Every foreigner must expect to adopt American principles if they wish to become Americans. There is danger that Americans in their ambitious liberality may sacrifice themselves to foreign influences. We should take a name expressive of our principles and maintain both.

C. W. Greene spoke in favor of the amendment. Others were Americans as well as ourselves, in the sense of allegiance to this government. But the word "Free" gives the idea we want. We must be free from all slavery, an unshackled people. Every man who loves the right and truth will love the name.

C. A. Blanchard said there was no objection to the name American that could not be brought against every other. If we say Free Americans what will men understand we are free from? We are Americans! What does that name signify? It means free government, free institutions, every precious liberty bequeathed from our fathers.

J. Levington spoke in favor of the name "Free American." He thought the name fresh and good.

C. G. Corwin, of N. Y., thought neither name suggested definite enough and moved to substitute that the title should be "Anti-Secret party." A vote failed to sustain the motion.

A rising vote on the amendment "Free American" was finally taken and declared a tie. A division of the house was called for and at the request of the chairman, all in favor of the name took one side; those in favor of "Americans" the other. The Secretaries were appointed tellers and the vote was announced as against "Free Americans."

Mr. Wardner withdrew his amendment, and the name "Americans" was finally adopted unanimously.

The fourth, fifth and sixth resolutions were adopted after more or less amendment. The seventh also passed after striking out an allusion to the Chicago Custom-House corner-stone. The eighth was adopted without change; the ninth laid on the table; and the tenth and last came up for discussion in its original form thus:

Resolved, that ours is a Christian and not a heathen government; and this fact should be recognized in its organic law: to protect us from paganism, priest-craft and king-craft, which having degraded manhood and extinguished popular rights in Asia, Africa and a portion of Europe, are seeking to drag us down to their own level of despotism and wretchedness."

Elder Bariow moved to refer back to the committee to be reported on next year, but the vote did not favor the motion.

President Blanchard said the Constitution should define itself on this question. It should say that the religion of this country is the Christian religion, which is the fact. And the laws which are based on this fact should be backed by the Constitution. It should be understood that we are not Mormons or atheists, and that the oath in our courts is by the living and true God, and not like a Chinaman by a dead cock's head. C. W. Greene opposed the adoption of the resolution as bringing in a religious question, which was foreign to the occasion. We are treating matters politically. He urged that the framers of the Constitution did not put any recognition of God by name into that instrument; and yet ours is a Christian country and there is no need of reaffirming so plain a fact. Such a religious question must be kept out of the platform if success is looked for.

Elder Barlow said that he had convictions on the subject which would not allow him to vote for the resolution at this time. He had studied the matter somewhat but his mind was not clear. He might be ready to vote next year. He did not like to have the matter forced upon his conscience before he was ready for it. If the brethren insisted it would separate good men from the movement.

J. Levington was in favor of the resolution. There ought by all means to be a recognition of Almighty God in the Constitution. The country was Christian anyway, there was no doubt about it; and if Chinamen don't like it, why let them go back to China.

Sidney Wilder also favored the resolution. He was fully decided that we should not cast God out of our politics, and there should be a proper recognition of his authority in the Constitution.

N. Wardner said the chief difficulty in the minds of those who opposed the resolution he presumed to be the danger of a union of church and state, and while the project was right we must approach it with care.

G. W. Clark moved to amend by simply expressing the fact of the Christian character of the country without reference to the Constitution. This was considered at some length and with much ardor of debate. President Blanchard said that for the sake of harmonious action such a motion might pass, but it would be almost a disgraceful retreat from the position held for two years. It was a late hour to bring up questions of conscience over a resolution upon which members of the body had been voted for.

James Matthews moved to refer the whole subject to a committee of one from each State represented to report in the evening. He was sorry to see so great difference on this subject and believed there might be harmony if there was further consideration. The motion was lost.

The debate was proceeding with considerable warmth when Mr. Clark arose and calling attention with a word sang with such effect the following beautiful song as to calm the whole house:

Be kind to each other,
The night's coming on,
When friend and when brother
Perchance may be gone,
Then midst our dejection
How sweet to have earned
The blest recollection
Of kindness returned!

When day hath departed,
And memory keeps
Her watch, broken hearted,
Where all she loved sleeps,
Let falsehood assail not,
Nor envy disprove,
Let trifles prevail not Against those we love.

Nor change with to-morrow,
Should fortune take wing,
But the deeper the sorrow,
The closer still cling.
O! be kind to each other,
The night's coming on
When friend and when brother
Perchance will be gone.

The amendment was passed and the declaration of principles was adopted as a whole.

A motion prevailed for the appointment of a committee of one from each State represented to prepare a political platform and report at a national political meeting to be held in the fall.

President Kirkpatrick not being prepared to appoint wished until evening, when he announced the following as the committee:

Illinois, J. Blanchard; Indiana, C. W. Greene; Michigan, H. Wilcox; Ohio, F. D. Parish; Missouri, G. W. Needles; Pennsylvania, Aaron Floyd; Connecticut, Francis Gillette; Vermont, J. W. Phelps; New York, J. L. Barlow.

The meeting then adjourned.

Correspondence.

The Lodge Opposes the Gospel.

Editor Cynosure:

Permit me to give you a few items of interest, by stating some facts. Facts are what the people want. In the town of West Unity, Williams Co., O., a humble servant of Jesus announced from his pulpit that at a stated time he would commence a protracted meeting for the good of the place and the salvation of souls. About a week before the time for its commencement the good (?) people of a sister denomination organized a secret lodge, for the good of the people of course. The (Masonic) Rev. C., who had charge of the said sister denomination, was engaged in a meeting out of town and did not intend to hold a meeting in West Unity.

As soon as Rev. S. commenced his meeting sinners came to it, became convicted and prospects of a reformation were plainly apparent. This state of things would not do for the founders of the lodge. So they commenced operations in full blast; told the young people not to come out at this meeting for they would have to leave the lodge and give up their good times there, as Rev. S. would not admit members into the church if they were connected with a secret society. This same Masonic Rev. C. now became quite conspicuous and interested in the lodge. Told the people he would hold a meeting, then they could get a religion that did not interfere with the lodge. Rev. S. finding how his pretended friends were his "false brethren," closed his meeting. Then said Rev. Mason C. commenced operations, but after weeks of ineffectual efforts, closed his meeting without any conversions. Rev. S. is a minister of the U. B. church and Masonic Rev. C. of the M. E. church. This Rev. C. and his friends of the lodge remind me of the scribes and Pharisees referred to by the blessed Jesus, as recorded in Matthew xxiii. 13: "But woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men: for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." This same Masonic Rev. C. while in Delta, said publicly, in the presence of his congregation, when about to receive into the church a minister (who had been tried and found guilty of charges) "there is nothing against the Bro." As the whole proceedings of the trial, &c., occurred near Delta, I concluded that Father Thomas arrived at a just conclusion when he said, "When I get a chance I am going to ask" Rev. C., "What did you tell that lie to your congregation for?" These facts can be proven by living witnesses. I have more to say, but will defer till some future time. OTTERBEIN.

Why This Objection?

I see that Bro. McNary and others object to the religion of Masonry, in that it refuses to offer prayer in Christ's name, especially when disbelievers in Christ are present. Why this objection? Is not their carrying the open Bible in their processions a mockery and sacrilege? And if they used the name of Christ in their mock prayers, offered up by infidels and profane men, would it not be simply a desecration of that name and a blasphemy? Would the use of Christ's name in their midnight orgies, be either acceptable to Christ, or a proof that their secret workings were heaven-originated?

OUR MAIL.

Rev. A. Hard, Painted Post, N. Y., writes:

"Would it not be well to print a card or ticket on light paper and send it out by the score with the Cynosure, annual and life membership cards. And get men and women to go at it all over the nation and raise funds?"

The suggestion is in the right direction. Do not wait for such circulars, however, but commence to get as many annual memberships and life memberships as possible now. Begin at home.

W. N. Coffman, Potomac, Ill., writes:

"I believe the cause in which you are engaged to be a good one, and it has my hearty endorsment. I feel unwilling to do without the Cynosure, knowing it to be a fearless defender of whatever it thinks or sees to be right, and that hence it is worthy of a good support."

Lois B. Smith, Berea, O., writes:

"Our place is almost entirely under the influence of secret societies so that those who (I know) are good anti-secret persons, were afraid to have their names seen under those petitions, and asked me if I was not afraid the Masons would kill me? But I am strong in the faith that good can be done."

H. Spafford, Fond du Lac, Wis., writes:

"I have been desirous of assisting in the circulation of the Cynosure, and have lent my papers to some of my neighbors; but as my business keeps me very busy I have done no canvassing as yet. Hope to do something ere long."

J. Buss writes from Bear Grove, Iowa:

"I am out here on a visit and so find opportunity to work a little for the Cynosure."

O. Breed, Elizabeth, Ill., writes;

"If you have any tracts or anything for distribution send them along, for the dens of darkness are strong in this place, and the opposition weak. There is plenty of opposition to the works of darkness if it can be brought out. . . I feel more and more encouraged to battle for the right."

W. B. Lloyd, St. Charles, Ill., a graduate of Wheaton College, writes:

"I look for that (the Cynosure) every week as containing the words and works of many of my school day's friends."

A. H. Ober, Pringhas, Ia., writes;

"I have been trying to get some subscribers for your good paper, but it is uphill business after a grasshopper raid. I have succeeded in getting a few three month's subscribers, and think that I can raise a large list after a while. . . I mean to work in this good cause."

J. S. Hickman, Wellington, Ill., writes:

"I think it will be sometime before I drop the Cynosure, if the good Being spares me and gives me health."

Benj. Ulsh, Silver Lake, Ind., writes:

"I am anxious to do good."

Jas. W. Robb, Millard, Wis., writes:

"The Christian Cynosure is just the paper for the times, and should be in every family in the United States."

Wm. N. Smith, Waitsburgh, Wash. Ter., writes:

"With the grange, Masons, Odd-fellows, Good Templars and Red Cross, a lodge of each in the village, the majority of the community are entire members or adherents. Consequently, it is difficult to have light to shine on darkness."

J. Lautz, Centerville, Mich., writes:

"I like the Cynosure very much and will try and get some subscribers for it."

Daniel Bermond, Harvard, Neb., writes:

"The Christian Cynosure is a very good paper. . . It gives my doctrine exactly. I am opposed to all secret societies for I really think they are the ruin of many men."

S. D. Greene, Chelsea, Mass., writes:

"When Col. Francis Bailey, of Chelsea, who was a Freemason, was on his deathbed and dying, at the age of nearly eighty years, he called his son, who was a Mason, and said to him: "My son, my son, Freemasonry may do to live by, but it will not do to die by. I have neglected this too long. I should have warned you long ago." And while the Rev. Mr. Plumb was praying with him holding Mr. Bailey's hand, Mr. Bailey said to Mr. Plumb, 'Stop my son! I want to live. I have not done my duty.' Mr. Plumb continued his prayer, and the Colonel said again to him: 'Stop my son. I want to make an exposc to the church. I have not done my duty. But I must die. Pray on. I am ready.' And under these circumstances he closed his life. I had this statement from those who stood by his bedside and witnessed it."

I. W. Baldridge, Cherry Fork, O., writes:

"I am circulating the Christian Cynosures that I get. A soon as I read them, I hand them to some of my neighbors. I trust the people will get their eyes open after a while. The grangers are making considerable headway here. They are likely to cause some trouble in our church, the United Presbyterian. Our minister, I fear, has failed to warn his people of the danger of these secret orders till they have become so numerous and popular that it is now too late."

Ellen Ewing, Xenia, O., writes:

"You have my earest prayers that God may bless you in pulling down this stronghold of Satan. May you live to see it crumble to the dust."

Charles T. Collins, Windsor, Conn., writes:

"The pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church in this place is a Mason. He preaches a full and free salvation and is very much liked. But how he can reconcile Masonry to the Gospel I don't see. . . . I am a member of the Methodist Episcopal church here. Have some Masons that are members, but I do not think they understand its Christless character."

A. C. Staples, West Branch, Ia., writes:

"You may stop my paper when the last charter for a Masonic lodge is surrendered in the nation. . . . The grangers are the hardest things to fight just now."

S. B. Daniel, Ridge Prairie, Ill., writes:

"I am pleased with the Cynosure and do not wish to be without it. I prized it before its enlargement, but since, much more. I like the Sunday-school lessons.

Mary Good, Millersburg, Pa., writes:

"I like my papers. After I have read them I give them all away to others to read."

Eliza Bradbury, Owego, N. Y., writes:

"I am much pleased with the enlargement and style of the paper, and I am trying to circulate it."

Welsey Richie, Oakland City, Ind., writes:

"Our community is strongly infested with Freemasons and Odd-fellows. Yet there are many strong workers for the right. Rev. T. B. McCormick is exerting all his influence in this and adjoining counties."

Wm. McKamy, Flat Rock, Ill., writes:

"We sent sixty names as petitioners to the President of the United States as our expression against the Freemason movement in Chicago."

John Jones, Phœnixville, Pa., writes:

"May the Lord be with you and prosper you and not allow you to grow weary in the good cause. My age forbids my doing as much as I would like to do. I believe it is the Lord's cause and he will carry it on to its consummation, though men and devils may conspire to oppose it."

S. B. McClelland, Sulivan, Ill., writes:

"I like the paper better than before the change. . . I think it is one of the most consistent Christian papers I have become acquainted with."

S. H. Edwards, Pleasant Hill, Ia., writes:

"I am poor and have but little, but cannot very well afford to do without the Cynosure. I will try to send a few more names."

Does not this friend practice true economy in appropriating a little money to food for the soul?

J. Hubbard, Freedom, Ill., writes:

"I shall do what I can for you. Be of good cheer, there is a better time coming."

J. N. Lloyd writes:

"It is the one paper I always read. Though taking several they would all go before the Cynosure should."

T. C. Radabaugh, Camden, Mich., writes:

"I am fighting the Beast here to the best of my ability. My means are small but my hope in God is large. The good cause is prospering here slowly, but steadily. I bid you God speed in your labor of love."

John McCullough, Pella, Ia., writes:

"I rejoice that truth is mighty and will prevail. May the blessing of the Lord attend the efforts made for the doing away of these secret combinations that is calculated to ruin the government and everything else."

"Still the Cynosure comes," writes a gentleman in Iowa to a friend in this city, and is read with care and interest. I tried a little to get some subscribers to it, but so far, have failed. I am giving them to a man on Buck Creek who has several boys and they read it, so that your favor will do some good in our community. I pray that its cause may triumph over all opposition, and that all secret rings may be broken to a thousand pieces and scattered to the four winds never more to be resurrected."

J. S. Riddle, Canning, Ont., writes:

"Through Mr. A. J. Turner, of Canning, Ontario, a copy of the Christian Cynosure has fallen into my hands.

I am, dear sir, glad to know that you are willing to stand erect and in the face of such a mighty mouldering evil as Masonry, and "cry aloud and spare not."

I have been shockingly alarmed at the tendency secret societies has to supplant the church. Yes, the church—the institution against which Jesus Christ, of Nazareth, says, "The gates of hell shall not prevail."

Facts are now being disclosed, thank heaven, which go to show the danger in supporting such an institution. God is a jealous God and should not his people—most especially ministers of the Gospel—to whom he says, "Zion behold your God," become jealous of such a prevalent evil. The church has the power to put it down, and God will hold us accountable if we refuse to make use of the power."

LESSON XXVIII.—JULY 12, 1784.—THE AUTHORITY OF JESUS.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK i. 16-27. Commit 21-27; Primary Verse 22.

16 Now as he walked by the sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and Andrew his brother casting a net into the sea: for they were fishers.

17 And Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men.

18 And straightway they forsook their nets and followed him.

19 And when he had gone a little further thence, he saw James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother, who also were in the ship mending their nets.

20 And straightway he called them: and they left their father Zebedee in the ship with the hired servants, and went after him.

21 And they went into Capenaum; and straightway on the Sabbath day he entered into the synagogue and taught.

22 And they were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the scribes.

23 And there was in their synagogue a man with an unclean spirit; and he cried out,

24 Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth? art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art, the holy one of God.

25. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him.

26. And when the unclean spirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him.

27. And they were all amazed, insomuch that they questioned among themselves, saying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean spirit, and they do obey him.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

What is the principal topic? What does the word authority mean? Where was Jesus at this time (verse 14)? Galilee was the northern division of Palestine, and in the time of our Lord, had about sixty little cities and villages with a population of three millions.

What is the first topic? Where had Jesus been? (vease 13.) The place is thought to have been Mt. Quarantania, in the wilderness of Judea. What had happened to John? (verse 14.) Where was Jesus walking? What other names are given to the Sea of Galilee? (Num. xxxiv. 11; Josh. xii. 3; Luke v. 1; John xxi. 1.) Who did he call? What did he promise them? What did they leave? (Luke v. 11.) How long did they wait before they obeyed? Has Jesus called you? Have you obeyed?

What is the scond topic? What city did he enter? What is it called in Matt. ix. 1.? It was on the north-west shore of the lake. Many wonderful things were said and done here, (see Matt. ix. 1-9; Luke iv. 38; vii. 1-10, etc,) Jesus condemned it Matt. xi. 23, 24.) Where did Jesus go? This was the usual place of worship. Try and think how Jesus taught, what he taught, where he taught, who he taught. Write it down and show to your teacher. does he teach now? How? What? Where? Who?

What is the third topic? Who was in the synagogue besides Jesus and the people? Why did the demon go to church? Did he love the poor man? Did he wish to hear Jesus? Did he like the sermon? What did he do? Did he know Christ? What did he ask of him? What did Jesus do? Did his command have authority? What did the demon do? What does this prove?

What is the fourth topic? They were filled with astonishment. No one thought that Satan could be overthrown, and cast out, but they were glad. What do you think about it?

Lessons. Jesus' call is superior to all others; we ought to obey at once, and follow him. 2. Jesus' commands are all important; we must not take the words of others in the place of Christ's. 3. Jesus, authority is supreme; all will one day be compelled to obey.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

Truth by Thinking.

Most persons might think if they would. Religion, as a system, requires thought; searching, intelligent thought. Persons pleased with a dance, a frolic, or a feast, are not prepared to enjoy a study of God's Word. The vocabulary of fashionable society has very few words, and is run into continuous talk by vain repetions and interjections. Its phrases do not range up with the intellectual nature. There is a disposition to take things for granted in the churches. People say, "I'll set my watch by your clock, if you please," not even thinking that somebody's clock has been timed by somebody else's watch. People are generally led hither and thither by the ear.

It is high time that Christians had quit their half thinking, their tender, touch-me-not thinking, as if the Bible would explode like a powder magazine in case a flaming fact should dart athwart its pages. For God intends that we shall come into deliberate knowledge of him, not by mere traditional introduction, not as a casual Sunday acquaintance, met by accident, continued with as a convenience; but that as in prophecy foretold, prefigured, typified, and as in Jesus Christ manifested, he shall be recognized, loved, enjoyed, and served in willing and uplifting obedience.

Hence the necessity of regular and continous lessons day by day, and year by year. By well-directed thought we grow into a knowledge of our Lord and Saviour.

Some persons who have proper vision of material objects, are singularly blind or double-sighted when they are pointed toward spiritual things. Here they stand in low places, and under the shadows, and look only at the corners or cornices of great objects, losing altogether the beautiful perspective that opens into far eternity. They glance to and fro in cross-lights, in flickering blazes, self-confused, or seet-confounded, and never apprehend the true proportions and winning symmetries of divine truth. Then, too often, because the view is unsatisfying, the beholder imagnes the deformity is in the object observed rather than in the observer himself. The religion of Jesus, in its antecedents, in its history, in its doctrine, and in its adaption to sinners, must be viewed by well-opened eyes, eyes brought to the proper stand-point, and under the sanctifying light of the Holy Spirit. The Gospel itself says, "Come and see."

So the Christian has a higher, wider range of thought-area horizoned around him than is afforded any other student. The truth invites investigation, and has the power to make men free indeed. Here are subjects for thought which concerns everlasting interests and relations—matters on which profoundest men have meditated with adoration and delight—which inspired prophets and apostles have spoken of with bated breath. To these grand themes the teacher leads his class and to meet these problems and solve them, there must be a careful discipline of well directed thought.

"Think on these things." We are liable to lapse into indolence, to be diverted by idle tales, to be warped by predjudice; and there is danger that we may miss the Way, the Truth and, the Life, at last. We must think and watch and pray. "Give us, O Lord, in thy light to see light! Open thou our eyes that we may behold wonderous things out of thy law."—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

Unconscious Influence.

On this theme a writer in the S. S. Times suggests a fresh instance:

Probably the greatest influence we ever exert over our Sabbath-school classes is put forth at times when we are most unconscious of exerting any influence. It is the few minutes before the school opens, and those which follow its closing, which tell most powerfully on the child's heart.

When engaged about the lesson, it is expected that the teacher will be serious, and will speak of things pertaining to the Sabbath. But how does he deport himself at other times on the holy day? Do his teachings and example go together? If, when he comes in, he begins to chat lightly with a fellow teacher about the events of the week, its business and its pleasures, and the prospect of the week to come, the listening scholar will feel that the Sabbath sanctity is with him only a lesson to be conned and taught, not practiced.

If on the contrary, he is devout and serious from the moment he enters his seat; if he seems to turn naturally to the lesson, as the great matter of the hour to him; if he improves the few moments before opening, in speaking an earnest word of counsel or sympathy with one of his scholars, how will the heart thrill, and the conscience bear witness to his faithfulness.

A minister has said, that his first religious impressions were caused by the Christian conversation of some Sabbath-school teachers, as they stood around the stove one winter's morning. Years after, the conversation was as distinct to his mind as on the day it was uttered. It is needless to say it was not on frivolous, worldly subjects, yet they doubtless had no idea of exerting any influence at the time. They were merely speaking to each other from the fullness of their hearts.

Home and Health Hints.

Cholera Infantum in its Incipiency.

This and the following months in years past has struck terror and dismay into many an household as the closed windows and drapped doors in so many homes will testify, the alarm was well grounded.

So much might be written or should be concerning this nearly fatal disease among infants, that it seems useless to print just a newspaper paragraph, but shall this hinder us from lighting our neighbor's lamp from the light of our experience? You should remember however bright and sparkling your little one is at bed time, not to add to its already excited state, but should encourage sleep and freedom from joy as well as sorrow. While grief depresses, joy exhilarates, and that is just what you would wish to avoid. When the child has wrestled with sleep so long in coming, you may notice a blue skin under a profuse persperation. This shows a profound depression. If the child is restless or utters sounds or words, or especially if the head is drawn over backward, its lids open, or balls unusually active or drawn up, you may be quite sure your child must have care for a few hours at least, if you would avoid serious illness. If the child remains covered with sweat until it awakes, have a nice tepid bath with mustard in, and immerse the child ten minutes, drying well afterwards. But if the child has lost its pallor and blueness, is rolling its head from side to side, pulse quick and hands hot, leave out the mustard, and give the bath the same length of time. Have the room quiet; avoid close wrappings,—its night dress is its most comfortable garment,—and give three drops of the spirits of nitre if you have not aconite or belladonna in your house. If the child does not appear better in one hour after its bath, these medicines are of vital importance, of course a sensible, honest physician would be your helper; but mothers or nurses are derelic if they depend entirely on physicians; the mother province is to avoid the sickness which she may not be able to control.

The great secret of having clean white linen is thorough rinsing.

One drop of salt butter is said to relieve the earache very soon.

An exchange says hot lemonade is one of the best remedies in the world for a cold.

To Keep Insects from Canary Birds.—Suspend a little bag of sulpher in the cage. It has proved an effective preventative.

Farm and Garden.

Advantages of Under-Draining.

The land is sooner in the spring, later in the fall, and oftener during the year, in a condition to be worked. Then a longer season is secured—a longer time for the farmer to do his work, and a longer time for plants to grow.

Under-draining removes stagnant water. The water line is lowered to the depth of the lowest drain. Stagnant water poisons the soil and thus the crops. It lowers the temperature of the ground and thus chills and retards growth. It invites early and late frosts, and the land freezes more readily, oftener and harder. Land freezes not only according to the degree of cold in the atmosphere, but especially according to the amount of moisture in the ground. Dry ground will not freeze at all. Stagnant water poisons the atmosphere even when below the surface, and the health of the locality or district will in a measure be determined by the amount of such land lying around.

Under-draining prevents surface-washing, for drained land never becomes so full of water but that it may absorb more. The ground becomes like a close sieve, letting water through, but not so fast but that its fertilizing qualities are retained and carried deeper into the soil. It deepens and loosens the soil, enabling the full natural spread and downward growth of roots, giving them larger feeding space, greater firmness against winds, and protection from sun and drouth. Under-draining supplies air to roots, which is necessary to enable them to do their duty, and which comes to them charged with moisture. Under-drained land is always much more moist in a dry season and much dryer in a wet season than the same land would be without draining. Any one who understands what is meant by percolation and capillary attraction will know why.

Under-draining produces harmony of appearance in crops, no mean advantage in the eyes of the farmer of esthetic sensibility, or who wants to sell his farm, or only to brag about it. Better still, it secures uniformity of quality of higher grade of crops, which means dollars and cents in the market, and no more outlay to get it.

Under-draining unifies the farm. It takes out all the barren, wet and cold spots which must be plowed round, and be left uncultivated because not paying for cultivation. Thus the separation of parts are removed, and the farm becomes connected. —Dr. Geo. C. Heckman.

Don't sell the Pelts.—The skin of an animal, whether cow, calf, colt, or horse, that dies on the farm is worth more at home than at the tanner's. Cut into narrow strips, and shave off the hair with a sharp knife before the kitchen fire, or in your workshop on stormy days and evenings. You may make them soft by rubbing.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, July 2, 1874.

THE CORNER-STONE: WHO LAID IT?

The Chicago Tribune and Times say that Judge Blodgett of the United States Court laid it. The Chicago Journal says the lodge laid it. Both statements are true. It was twice laid, once by the United States, in the person of Judge Blodgett, and once by the lodge, with its heathen ceremonies and prayers to Baal or "The unknown god."

Mr. Rankin, the superintending architect, is a pleasant man and weak-kneed Freemason. He strove to please everybody. He asked President Grant to lay it, but Grant was foxy, and would have nothing to do with it. He next tried to get Vice-president Henry Wilson, who is an Anti-masonby conviction and practice, but he too shunned it. Judge Drummond was then invited, but with similar result.

The Committee were divided. They grew angry and desperate as petitions poured in upon General Grant at Washington; and remonstrances, by such men as Mr. Carpenter, Matthew Laflin, Tuthill King, and other old citizens and large property-owners of Chicago, were sent to those who had the building in charge, praying them to save the people from insult and the building from desecration by the detestable despotism of the lodge.

Judge Blodgett was at last induced to come to their relief. He was assigned a high seat near the stone, and the people had been promised that he should lay the stone. But for this promise it is not impossible but a mob of United States citizens might have been organized, as the Chicago Times had suggested, and driven the lodge, with its harlot impudence and harlot finery, off the ground.

The sweltering Masonic mass wedged in and around the spot, loaded with finery and feathers bought with money wrung from their besotted and befooled dupes, American mechanics and laborers, who have sold their birthright of liberty for the pottage of the lodge. The awful moment came. Then poor Mr. Rankin, who, like all waverers, fell to the wrong side at the last, arose and said aloud:

"Most Worshipful Grand Master of Masons in Illinois, in behalf of the National Treasury Department, and in the name of the President of the United States of America, I now request you to lay the corner-stone of the building to be erected on this spot, in accordance with the formalities of your ancient and honorable institution."

"Grand Master" Hawley bowed and with mock solemnity called for an invocation to the Masonic deity, the "Grand Architect of the Universe." Then came the high priest of Baal, Forrester, a Universalist preacher, and acting Grand Chaplain, and followed in an ice-cold, Christless, pagan prayer to the unknown god of the lodge, which, if it could have affected the bodies of the sweltering mass, as it did their souls, would have cooled them in spite of the heat. The prayer was the same as that of Dr. Tiffany at the corner-stone of Douglas Monument, in substance and spirit, with the exception that Tiffany obeyed the laws of the lodge, making no allusion to Christ, while Forrester had the brazen impudence to wind up his heathen prayer with a violation of Masonry, and an attempt to swindle and impose on Christian people by adding the words: "Through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen." Now this clerical falsifier knew very well that such allusions to Christ are unmasonic, and have been condemned and forbidden by lodge-authority again and again. The very name of Christ in his lips was, therefore, not a prayer, but a falsehood and a blasphemy!

After this swindling prayer and other parts of the Masonic farce were enacted, came the part of Judge Blodgett representing the United States, which cut no figure beside the secret empire. Judge Blodgett's part is thus described by the Masonic Chicago Journal:

"The Grand Master spread a portion of the cement, and then handed the trowel to Judge Blodgett, who finished the spreading, a nominal operation. This called the laying of the corner-stone, being over, Judge Blodgett returned the trowel to the Grand Master, and stepped back to his place, having no further play of courtesy to respond to."

The Chicago Tribune, which, amid the general apostacy shows a cleaving to the Republic against the secret empire, gives Judge Blodgett's part thus:

"Grand Master Hawley (addressing Judge Blodgett)—On behalf of the Free and Accepted Masons of Illinois, I invite your Honor, as one of the Judges of the United States Courts, to assist in these ceremonies by spreading a portion of the cement.

Judge Blodgett came down from his seat, and, taking a trowel, spread some mortar on one corner of the base-stone.

This done, the Grand Master ordered Grand Marshal Duval to direct the craftsmen to lower the stone."

Hail impudence! Hail political harlotry! Hail treason to the United States! Human effrontery here reaches its acme! Judge Blodgett's father was an abolitionist and Anti-mason, and the Judge himself has been supposed to inherit the principles of his sire. He is here, however, simply as Judge Blodgett of the United States Court, and invited by this shameless committee to lay the corner-stone of a building belonging to our Christian Republic. This, the people demanded through their thousand mouths, the press. This, thousands of petitioners demanded of President Grant by their petitions taken and delivered to him in person by Aaron Floyd, Esq., of Pittsburgh. This the Chicago Times demanded and threatened a mob of United States citizens to drive off the Masons if they attempted to seize on United States property for their advertisement and display!

And what do we see! A bustling, consequential, unknown lodge-master, asking Judge Blodgett to assist in these ceremonies by spreading a portion of the cement. And Judge Blodgett instead of answering such impudence with a blow; or, what more becoming the dignity of his position,—walking away in disgust, takes up the trowel and, spreading the cement, subsides, and the damning farce goes on. So have we seen an English family in decay, insulted by the bustling strumpet which "my lord" has brought in to patronize and degrade and insult the meek mother of a Christian household.

People of the United States

> "Can such things be
> And overcome us like a summer cloud,
> Without our special wonder?"

If there was a United States marshall in the crowd, it was his duty to have extemporized a posse of citizens and collared and walked those officious meddlers off the ground, and allowed the Government of the United States in the person of Judge Blodgett to lay that corner-stone, bought, paid for, and laid by the taxes of the people.

But no! Instead of this, a marshall, not of the United States, but of that secret empire which defied and defeated the judiciary of New York when they murdered Morgan, and which hates popular government everywhere, made the following:

PROCLAMATION.

"The Grand Marshal was ordered to make proclamation of the laying of the corner-stone, and did so, shouting: In the name of the most worshipful Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of the State of Illinois, I now proclaim that the corner-stone of the structure to be here erected has this day been found square, level and plumb, true and trusty and laid accoraing to the old customs, by the Grand Master of Masons."

Then Grand Master Hawley arose and made a "report" commencing:

"Gentlemen representing the National Treasury Department, Fellow Citizens and Brethren: I have the honor to report that in compliance with the request of the United States authorities, the corner-stone of the new Custom-House and Post-Office building, here to be erected, has been laid with the ancient ceremonies of the craft."

He then proceeded through some minutes of fustian and highfalutin falsehoods like the following:

"It is seldom that our fraternity appears in public. Freemasonry shuns notoriety. Its mission lies in another direction. But when the Government, under whose protection we live, requests our assistance in the performance of a peaceful and honorable duty, we may with propriety leave our quiet streets, perform our work, and once more return to the seclusion of our lodges. We may have no more monumerts of stone to rear—yet the fraternity which exists wherever are found the civilized haunts of man will march on in its mission of rearing higher, broader and deeper its great living principle of charity—which shall endure longer than stone or brick."

And so with a benediction from the high priest of Baal, Forrester, the farce closed, and like slaveholders after a compromise which gave all to slavery and took all from liberty, the Freemasons went their way to their secret dens rejoicing.

Citizens of the United States! The doings of that black saints-day must and will be reversed. Those tramplers on the national flag, the national honor and the national judiciary, must be driven from the jury-box, the ballot-box, and from the halls of legislation, as the forsworn janizaries of a power unknown to our laws and courts. They showed you at that corner-stone the exact theory of their system, which is that our civil and religious institutions are mere subordinate creatures of the lodge !!—which handles your courts as its "Master" handled Judge Blodgett, their representative.

When slavery was unearthed and the people saw what it was, the moral indignation of mankind sunk it. So if the lodges were uncapped, as in the day of the Morgan outrage, the Masonic masses themselves would leave the lodge with loathing. They will yet do so. They are Freemasons because they are dupes. And when the lodges go down, as 1,500 of them did go down then, they never will rise again; for their true religious nature is now understood as it was not then. But now the Christian religion, which underlies and supports all the freedom on the globe, is set against this Christless phantom and "Image of the Beast," and it is surely to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming.

BEECHER-TILTON AGAIN.

We know who said, "For there is nothing hid which shall not be manifested; neither was anything kept secret but that it should come abroad." Mark iv. 22.

The great Brooklyn Council decided some things about Congregationalism of which few know anything definite, and fewer care to know any thing. Deacon Bowen's accusation of his pastor as "an unsafe man in families," that is, as a lewd man, was totally ignored. Tilton's direct charge upon H W. Beecher, as guilty of adultery and fornication, was but vaguely hinted at. Great speeches were delivered; great orators praised; Leonard Bacon is toasted as "the embodiment of Congregationalism," and

> "All went merry as a marriage bell."

But there is a "day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." Dr. Bacon, in his zeal to mend the battered character of the man who raised the money which gives him his bread, denounces Tilton as a cowardly slanderer, until he (Tilton) will no longer stand it; and though he has shown himself willing to pocket the indignity and insult of adultery with his wife, so far as the crime and insult are concerned, he will not brook being called a coward by the aged Dr. Leonard Bacon.

He, therefore, comes out with a letter to the trustees of Beecher's church, offering to stand trial for slandering their pastor. His offer is rejected by the leaders of this "free" "Congregational" church, without laying it before the members. Tilton then publishes, in direct language, what is understood to mean that Beecher has lain with his wife; and gives a letter signed by Mr. Beecher ending with the words:

"I wish I were dead. H. W. Beecher."

Now comes the most loathsome of all. In the Independent, a paper belonging to Deacon Bowen, who himself accused Mr. Beecher of lewdness, the hoary Dr. Leonard Bacon is cautiously treading backwards, and with his hard, cunning articles covering the whole infamy, and writing the public mind into confusion on the subject. God save the Christian religion! God save the Republic!

THE INDEPENDENT CHURCH OF CHRIST.

This is the corporate title under which the members of the Methodist Episcopal church of Marengo, Ill., opposed to secret societies, have organized themselves into a "body of Christ which is his church." They acted conscientiously and faithfully on the plan of remaining with the parent body, and crowding the loathed lodge out of their way. They were a majority of the local society; sent a delegation to conference requesting that no more Freemasons be sent to decorate their pulpit and deprave their young men by his example of herding with the rowdies of the lodge in oath-guarded nightly cabals; and showed, as they felt, every disposition to remain in, and seek the peace and honor of the church of their choice. Their wishes were granted by sending to them the Rev. N. D. Fanning under whom the Marengo church had prosperity and peace. Either this was a feint to cover their intentions or the lodge-men who run the conference were stung by the alternative which they saw coming on them, when they must soon leave the leeks and garlics of the lodge, or be put at a discount with their own churches, which were like to do as the Marengo church had done, and refuse to receive Freemasons as their pastors; and nearly two-thirds of the preachers of the Rock River Conference were Masons.

The conference turned sharp on its heel; and sent a jack-mason to Marengo who is the tool of the lodge. He did the work for which his masters sent him ably. He turned out of office the men on whom the church rested, with the coolness of a Jack Ketch chopping off heads at the mandate of royalty, and drove the Antimasons into secession.

They have built and paid for the finest church building in Marengo. It was dedicated to the worship of God in Christ on Thursday, June 26th. The new and beautiful building was crowded full as it could well be without bringing in seats. Rev. W. A. Brewster, pastor of the Congregational church Geneva, Ill., preached the sermon. The Presbyterian, Baptist, and Rev. J. Burch, of a neighboring Methodist Episcopal church, took part in the pulpit exercises; and its prayer of dedication was offered by the President of Wheaton College. The whole occasion was full of joy and hope. The new church is fast increasing its membership under the pastor whom they love, Rev. N. D. Fanning, who has left the work assigned him by the lodge-masters in the conference to be their shepherd under Christ; and they were happy as uncaged birds in their own free grove.

The following is their testimony concerning secret societies, which is a model for all churches which may, as they have, escape the fangs of the lodge dragon:

"Membership in secret societies shall disqualify for membership in the church; but one who publicly renounces his relation to a secret order and ceases affiliation with it and attendance upon its meetings, shall not be held to be a member in such a sense as to disqualify him for membership in the church."

NOTES.

—As an encouraging feature of the reform, we cannot overlook the wide publication of the Syracuse Convention. The Associated Press dispatches giving brief but fair reports went to every principal city in the country. Mr. C. W. Greene's speech was published in the Chicago and New York Tribunes, and the resolutions appeared in the latter. The N. Y. Evening Post also published the resolutions in part and speaks editorialy against the trade unions and minor societies. The "corner-stone" discussion is sharpest however. See the press remarks on this page, and more to appear next week.

—The grange has found a new enemy, if we may credit the following from the Chicago Journal:

The grangers of Wisconsin are losing some of their Catholic members, it is rumored on account of a recent order from the Bishop of Milwaukee, who declares their unions with the Patrons unnatural and against the laws of the Catholic church regulating its followers in the matters of secret organizations. All the Bishops of the Catholic church in this country are generally expected soon to promulgate orders similar to the one issued from Milwaukee. This action will doubtless hasten the abolition of secrecy in the order of Patrons of Husbandry, and the establishment of open granges.

—Over five hundred subscriptions expire next month. It will be a rare time for some workers to pick up renewals and keep rolling on the ball. We can safely promise a paper worth all that is paid for it. See the publisher's notes.

—The reports of the Sixth Anniversary have for several weeks compelled postponement of contributed articles and many letters of interest. With the exception of a few items, which, though related, are not properly a part of the report, the whole meeting has now been placed before our readers. The whole, which is soon to be published in pamphlet form, will be of great value to the workers in this cause.

—Among the memorable incidents of Wednesday, the 24th, was the bold proclamation of Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, of the Reformer, of "Down with Masonic Favoritism; up with Equal Rights." Bro. Arnold came in from Sycamore to make this protest against the usurpation of the lodge. It was a standard printed in large, bold type, so that the crowds could not fail to read it. After being carried through the streets, it was planted conspicuously in the crowd to the east of the stone in full view of every eye. But the best part of it was, that the great "Oriental Consistory" of thirty-two and thirty-three degree Masons, with their cockades, stars, plumes, swords, and wonderful imaginary dignity, with Dea. T. T. Gurney at their head, was halted and put through such evolutions immediately in front of and within a few feet of the awful banner, that hardly one of them could escape noticing it. The effect on their bloated pomposity to see such an expression of popular indignation, is better imagined than described. All honor to Bro. Arnold for so boldly setting forth the protest of the people!

The Press on the Chicago Corner-Stone Affair.

From the various remarks, editorial or otherwise, on the vain glorious attempt to display the virtues of Freemasonry on Wednesday of last week, the following extracts will be read with interest. There are plenty more in reserve.

Letter from Dr. Roy to the Tribune.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune:

. . . When those three solid men of Chicago, Matthew Laflin, Tuthill King, and Philo Carpenter, waited on the Executive Committee to present them the petition, it was replied: "We would state that the points you take have been anticipated." And this was by securing Judge Blodgett, which shows their purpose to accede to the remonstrance. A still further evidence that the Committee made this arrangement in deference to the remonstrants is the fact that in the programme and ritual of the occasion, carefully printed in the papers the day before, no mention of the United States Judge was made. It was there made to appear wholly as a Masonic affair. But in anticipation of the call of the delegation, the service of a Government official was announced.

But the Journal seems to chuckle over Judge Blodgett's part as "a nominal operation," a "play of courtesy." Perhaps many others thought that this had been a smart way of disposing of the objections. But, pray tell us, gentlemen of the regalia, what was your whole performance but a "nominal operation," "a play of courtesy?" The mimic trowel, and plumb, and square,—what were they but boy's playthings?

The Committee seem to be answering the argument of the petitioners, based on the ground of partiality as between sects and societies, by representing the Masonic fraternity as a "body not confined to creed, party, or sect." But they are confined to and by awful extra-judicial oaths, and are themselves a sect of the straitest sort, with temets and a religious ritual, which makes many men say that Masonry is a good enough religion for them.

As I was observing the procession, the last thing to appear was a banner, born aloft, and inscribed, "Jesus Christ being the Chief Corner-stone." A gentleman at my side, viewing it, said to his friend: "There's a fellow in opposition to Masonry." Now, why, from the inscription should he draw such a conclusion? Simply, of course, from the fact that such a motto was incongruous in a pageant characterized mainly by the Masonic order, whose ritual in deference to Jewish, Mahomedan, and Deistic members, allows no place to the name and office of Jesus Christ. That exclamation of a man, in evident sympathy with that fraternity, was a striking comment of the religious element of Masonry. "There's a fellow in opposition to Masonry"—and that because he carried a Christian banner! On the other side of it we read: "Y. M. C. A.; Gospel-meeting this evening." And next was a cart loaded with tracts, and behind it on foot, in dust and sweat, that indefatigable worker of the Association, Mr. Cole, dispensing his reading matter. . . . .

It may as well be understood by gentlemen who may be put to the management of like occasions in the future, that such a compromise as that of yesterday will not be satisfactory to the mass of the people, who believe in fair play, and therefore do not wish to have this organization put forward beyond all others in such obtrusive place. Nothing but equal treatment as between all sects and societies will satisfy them. Masonry, like all other systems, must take its chance in coming to the light of reason and argument. So do the Christian Church and Christian theology. So do ministers of the gospel. So do the scientists and all other orders of men that seek recognition as such. Meantime, and always, let it be understood that there is to be a discrimination between good men in an institution, which is disapproved, and the institution itself.

J. E. Roy.

Chicago, June 25, 1874.

New York Daily Witness, June 24th.

We are glad to see that at last the custom of enviting or allowing Freemasons to lay corner-stones of public buildings has been broken up, and this good result we owe, like many other good things, to the great West. Masons have no more right to officiate at such times with their mummeries than Roman Catholics or any other communion. If it were a committee of real builders—masons, bricklayers, plasterers, and carpenters—which claimed the honor of laying corner-stones, there would be some sense in it; but for a lot of sham Masons, who never worked a day at a building in their lives, to step into the place of honor, tricked out in masquerading costume, is altogether at variance with common sence.

From the Advance, June 25th.

Welcome to the new structure whose corner-stone is just laid in Chicago! It will have a great moral and social as well as artistic value. It will mark a new epoch in our public history. But why should its corner-stone be laid by secret societies? With what right do those whose affairs are manipulated behind curtains, in dark conclaves, and with a host of mysterious tactics, appear so prominent on any public occasion of general interest? Public celebrations should be conducted in the most straight-forward, open-faced manner. They should be in the hands of those who have the most perfect transparency of heart and life, and who are in the most manifest sympathy with our free institutions. "This thing was not done in a corner." It did not require any resort to such arts or agents. It ought to have been done so as not to offend those who look upon such a parade and pomp of aprons, scarfs, and pins, as mere boy's play, or as a clandestine and fantastic humbug.

From the Christian Union, June 24th.

Whatever may be the merits or demerits of Freemasonry, it is a private and not a public institution, and embraces in its membership but a fraction of the male inhabitants of the country. We are, therefore, at a loss to understand on what principle of propriety or common sense this secret fraternity is so often intrusted with the duty of laying the corner-stones of public buildings, to be devoted to purposes in which all classes of the community, without regard to sect or party, have a common interest. The question is now a subject of fierce discussion in Chicago, where the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of a new U. S. Custom-House has been confided to the "craft." What claim to such official recognition has Freemasonry over Odd-Fellowship? Or, why should either be selected for such a service rather than the Catholics, the Episcopalians, the Presbyterians, the Baptists, or the Methodists? Either of these bodies, we suspect, is as truly representative of the whole people as Freemasonry or any other secret society. Moreover, thousands of people are conscientiously opposed to secret societies, and the use of their ceremonies on such occasions is to them an offense. Are not the officers of the United States, of the various grades, competent to lay corner-stones of buildings to be used for public purposes? Why, then, call in the aid of a secret association, whose ceremonies, however beautiful in themselves or in the eyes of the "craft," are yet distasteful to multitudes of intelligent and conscientious people?

The Home Circle.

The Desert Rock.

BY HORATIUS BONAR.

Rock of the desert, pouring still
Thy stream the thirsty soul to fill;
  Rock of the desert, now as full
  Of living water, pure and cool,
    We stand beside thy stream.

Rock of eternity, to thee,
In thirst and weariness we flee;
  Thy waters cannot cease to pour;
  Thy fullness is forevermore,
    Let him that thirsteth come.

Bright water of eternity
We come, we come, to drink of thee.
  The voice of welcome that we hear,
  The voice dispelling every fear,
    Is, "Whosoever will."

River of life, upon thy brink
We sit and of thy waters drink;
  The murmur of thy sparkling wave
  Speaks still of him who came to save,
    Who bids us drink and live.

River of peace, so full and bright,
Each drop clear-shining with the light;
  And still the voice that comes from thee,
  The voice that telleth all is free,
    Is, "Whosoever will."

River of love, so deep and wide,
All heaven is in thy flowing tide;
  For all the love of God is here,
  The love that casteth out all fear,
    The "whosoever will."

River of God, still flowing on,
Thy source the everlasting throne;
  River of heaven, translucent stream,
  Thy fulness ever at the brim
    For "whosoever will."

River of health, thy current pours
Its freshness on these leprous shores;
  Pure Jordan, bidding all draw nigh,
  For health and immortality,
    With "whosoever will."

Dear river, what a sun is thine!
What glories on thy waters shine!
  What freshness in thy sparkling drop!
  And still the voice that cometh up
    Is "Whosoever will."

A Spark Kindled.

In 1829, the Rev. Mr. H—, passing through Central New York, preached one day to a small congregation; and having delivered his message of love, went on his way. But his lips had been touched with heavenly fire, and that fire reached at least one Christian heart, and quickened it to renewed zeal. Mrs. W in that solemn hour resolved to improve every opportunity to work for God.

Two carpenters, Mr. C— and Mr. N—, were spending some months in her family, erecting a new building. She told them how the sermon had impressed her, and appealed to them to begin with her a new life in the service of God.

The two carpenters had much conference on the subject, when Mr. N—, the younger one, said decidedly, "Do as you will, I am going to lead a new life."

N—was in deep earnest, and that night he sought a retired place to pray. There, in the solemn stillness, with God's Spirit alone to aid him, he tried to find his way to the cross; but instead of finding the relief that he expected, his load of sin only became heavier. He sought the prayer-meeting and every available help. There was a gradual change, but the light was so faint that he hardly dared call himself a Christian Yet he observed every known duty, and there was a marked change in his outward life that could not be gainsaid.

His severest trials were the jests of his partner and the hands. They asked him why he did not make more ado about his religion; why he did not sing and shout, as well as pray. But none of these things moved him.

Very quietly the fire burned in that heart; and though for the first three months of his Christian life he dared not claim adoption as a child of God, yet with a thankful heart he ate the crumbs that fell from the Master's table.

About this time, while at a prayer-meeting one evening, he seemed under an unusual cloud. The heavens seemed brass over his head. He usually offered up his simple prayer, but that night he felt that he could not pray. He knelt by the side of a colored man, and resolved that when his brother finished his prayer, he would try. All he could think of was, "O Lord," but he tried to say these two words; and when he opened his mouth, the Lord filled it with prayer and praise. The heavens were opened and his hungry soul filled.

The fire no longer slumbered. From that time N—, at his own request, prayed with the ungodly families where he worked, asked a blessing at their table, and he and a handful of other Christians held little prayer-meetings from place to place. Thus they strengthened each other.

He bore the ridicule of scoffers silently and unmoved, except as it moved him to pray more earnestly for their conversion. All this spare time was spent in reading and searching the Scriptures.

One day Mr. C— said to Mr. N—, "You don't think, do you, N—, that one can get religion just when he is a mind to?"

"Not until he makes up his mind to it, and then, if ever," answered N—. "God is willing now, and only waiting for you to make up your mind."

Several days passed, and N— noticed that Mr. C.——, instead of his usual jovial manner, was very sober. One day he found Mrs. C—— very much troubled about her husband. She questioned N— closely; she was sure something was the matter, for she said C— did not act like himself; he groaned nights and did not sleep, and yet he would not own he was sick.

Three weeks from the time the two men had their talk at the carpenter's bench, N— saw C— coming to his work one morning singing, not one of his old songs, but singing, with a radiant face, one of the songs of Zion. One sentence told the story. C— had found Christ precious to his own soul. It is needless to say that N— was overjoyed. The year that had been full of trials ended gloriously with the young carpenter.

The fire spread. Mr. C—'s conversion was followed by that of his wife, two sons, two daughters, and the carpenter's apprentice. Soon conviction came down on the neighborhood. The fire broke out here and there, and that winter a general revival of religion was enjoyed. A congregation was formed noted for its Christian zeal. It was a glorious work, a work over which heaven and earth mingled their rejoicings.

A spark of heavenly fire had fallen from the lips of one of God's humble servants, and had been kindled to this mighty flame.

How often ministers are tempted to think their words are lost, but what joyful surprises there will be for God's faithful servants in the great hereafter! How they will glorify God who has so magnified their work!

But my story is not yet told. It never can be fully told until the pages of eternity reveal it. There are saints in heaven to-day who are trophies of that revival. Mr. C—, faithful to the end, is one of those who have gone home.

N—, the young carpenter, was called from the carpenter's bench to the ministry. That true, persevering convert was a zealous, successful minister, and no pen can portray the blessed results of his faithful, laborious Christian life.

Servant of Christ, never despair. You cannot now see the full fruit of your labor; but "what thou knowest not now, thou shalt know hereafter."

The Striving of the Holy Spirit.

There is a certainty about the Spirit striving. No man can go to hell-fire till the Spirit has striven with him, and given him up. That the Spirit strives with all is evident from the following considerations:

1. Christ died for all. 2. The experience of both saint and sinner testifies to it. 3. Salvation is impossible without it. 4. It is only on this ground that God can judge and condemn the wicked.

Without the Spirit, there would be as much probability of Satan becoming a true Christian as man. Man is totally depraved; therefore the "convincing him of sin, of righteousness, of a judgment to come," can neither be of himself nor the devil. Nothing but the Spirit can teach or lead him. (John xiv. 16–26.) Oh, that all could understand the wise and loving Spirit! If God has provided through the Holy Spirit all assistance for man necessary to free him from the grasp of the enemy, and lead him to heaven, how terrible must it be to oppose and rebel till the Spirit withdraws and exposes him to the awful sequel—God's wrath and hell's fiends! "My Spirit will not always strive."

Under the Jewish economy there was a law of extremity. There was no forgiveness for some sins—no blood, no lamb, no sacrifice; so under the Christian economy; (Mathew xii. 31.) "All manner of sins and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven." This is "quenching the Spirit."

Dr Chalmers says; The sin against the Holy Ghost is not some deed, around which a disordered fancy has thrown a superstitious array, and which beams in deeper terror upon the eye of the mind from the very obscurity by which it is encompassed." No! it is resisting the Holy Wooer, till he has left us alone. Then, being left alone by the Spirit, there is but one thing more awful that can happen to the sinner, and that is damnation. Left without feeling, left without desire, wrapt in carnal security, till, Sodom-like, he is swallowed by the flames of perdition.

It is good to be arrested by the Spirit; but, Oh! what a germ to begin to be led by its influence. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God."—Am. Wesleyan.

Heavenly Economy.

"Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost." Multitudes of men, women, and children perform their daily labor because they must. Their necessities compel them. They have no other motives than to procure food, shelter and clothing. They are slaves. Necessity is their master, and they are driven to their toil by his whip. They get nothing but what they work for—freedom from the lash and a supply for their natural wants. They get no intellectual and moral development. There are no fragments after their feast. They eat everything to the bone. Others again, work for comfort, for elegance, for beauty, for fashion, for equality with others, for wealth, honor, and power. Whether they succeed or not in the thing they work for, they obtain nothing beyond it if they work for these alone. There are no fragments for them—no higher soul within.

Another class, and I fear much the smallest, do the same natural things. They cook and sew, and order the household; they buy and sell; they dig in the field, and work in the sooty shop; they make money and hold office and gain honors and power. But they do much more than this. They put a higher purpose into their work, and they reach a much larger reward. They do not work any harder, they do not work so hard. Their ruling motive is to do good, and not to get good. They work from love to the Lord and man, and while they get the same natural wages, they get an amount of spiritual good that far exceeds in value their natural wages, however great they may be. They are enlarging their souls, and forming them into the image of heaven, and preparing them to receive heavenly and eternal delights. They reap the fullest reward of their labor on every plane of the mind. Every faculty is fed, and there is more than they can receive that will last to eternity. Is it not a miserable waste to work for that which perishes in a day, when you can get the temporal wages, and gather up an eternal reward besides? Can there be any other economy than that which calls all man's faculties into play, from the highest to the lowest, and gathers up the spiritual as the natural reward?—Chauncy Giles.

My Labor-Saving Husband.

Some husbands are more plague than profit, and make vastly more work than they do good; but mine is one to brag about. When I was married—to my shame be it spoken—I had never made a loaf of bread or a pie. I had no idea of saving time or of saving work. But I had a husband who had love enough for me to bear with my simplicity, and not scold when the bread was burned and the pies not fit to eat.

Going into the kitchen one morning. he saw me baking buckwheat cakes, and greasing the griddle with a piece of pork on the end of a fork. He said nothing but went into the wood house and soon returned with a smoothly whittled stick, about six inches long, through the split end of which he had passed a folded strip of white cloth, and then wound it around the end and tied it with a bit of string. So I had a contrivance which could be dipped in melted grease and passed smoothly over the griddle.

One day he saw me scouring knives with a piece of cloth. "Dear me!" said he, "you will surely cut your fingers." So he contrived a machine by nailing a broad piece of cork to a spool for a handle, sinking the head of the nail into the cork so far that it should not touch the knife. This lifts the hand from the knife, and does not cramp the fingers.

I used to call him occasionally to thwack over the mattress and straw bed for me. "What a nuisance!" he exclaimed, and replaced them by a spring mattress. Of all the nice things for beds this is the best. It is always in place, requires no shaking up, and it always looks round and enviting, and gently yields to the sleeper.

He saw the dish towels hanging helter-skelter around the kitchen stove, and forthwith made the most convenient hanging frame over the wood box, where it can take up no room, and is near the stove. Here the towels hang smoothly, and are always in place.

I fretted because my refrigerator had no shelves, and I could not make room for all the meat, butter and milk. So he made two racks, and fitted ventilated shelves from one to the other. The shelves are ventilated by being bored thick with auger holes, and can be removed for scrubbing.

He is troubled to see me sew, sew, and stitch, stitch, and makes sewing machines the constant topic of conversation. He reads to me every advertisement and every letter from women who praise them in papers. If he could make one, I should be in possession of one immediately; but as he cannot, I must wait till "the ship comes in."

These are some of the ways by which he lightens the labor of the house. Would that more husbands were like him. —Ex.

Monopoets.

The Boston Transcript coins the above word to designate that numerous class of writers who have given utterance to but one memorable poem, and it enumerates the following:

"One Henry Carey is supposed to be the author of 'God save the King,' but who remembers the name of the young Lieutenant to whom is attributed the 'Marseillaise,' or has heard that of the inspired private soldier who conceived the 'Wacht am Rhein?' Is it on record that Hopkinson and Key ever made any other verses than 'Hail Columbia' and the 'Star Spangled Banner' respectively? John Howard Payne did compose some unsuccessful and now forgotten dramatic pieces, but, so far as we know, 'Sweet Home'—thrown off hurriedly to fit some music—was his only poetic effort. Edgar A. Poe was almost a monopoet, but the 'Bells' and 'Annabel Lee' will be remembered nearly as long as the 'Raven.' David Everett's 'You'd scarce expect one of my age,' Edward Everett's 'Alaric,' Charles's Wolfe's 'Burial of Sir John Moore,' Joseph Rodman Drake's 'When freedom from her azure heights', and Albert G. Greene's 'Old Grimes,' are monopoems; so are Charles Kingsley's 'Three Fishers,' and those wonderful lines of Charles Dickens on England's 'Rare old plant'—so replete with tender and genuine sentiment, and so free from the morbid fancies and distorted outlines which mar the prose works—at least the latter ones—of this brilliant author. Miss Julia Ward Howard's 'Battle Hymn of the Republic,' that soul-stiring strain, is the only one of her poems which even now can be called to mind."

Success.—My friend, if thou hast all the artillery of Woolwich trundling at thy back in support of an unjust thing, and infinite bonfires visibly waiting ahead of thee, to blaze centuries long for thy victory on behalf of it, I would advise thee to call a halt, fling down thy baton, and say, "In God's name, no!" Thy "success?" Poor devil, what will thy success amount to? If the thing is unjust, thou hast not succeeded; no, not though bonfires blazed from north to south, and bells rang, and editors wrote leading articles, and the just thing lay trampled out of sight to all mortal eyes an abolished and annihilated thing. Success! In a few years thou wilt be dead and dark—all cold, eyeless, deaf; no blaze of bonfires, ding-dong of bells or leading articles, visible or audible to thee again at all forever. What kind of success is that!—Carlyle.

Blessed is the hand that prepares a pleasure for a child, for there is no saying when and where it may bloom forth.

Libraries are the shrines where all the relics of ancient saints, full of true virtues, and without delusion or imposture, are preserved.

He who thinks he can find, in himself, the means of doing without others is much mistaken; but he who thinks that others cannot do without him, is still more mistaken.

The pledge of Harlan Page, the successful tract distributer and earnest Christian: "I will act as though there were no other one to act, waiting no longer for others."

In God's great plan there is nothing small or trivial; the humblest life cost the death of the son of God. Does it not throw a vail of sanctity around the poorest and most unworthy, when we think of the ransom paid for such a life.

On a Spanish sun-dial is written, "I mark only tne bright hours." This is wise. There is more sunshine than shade, more bright than dark hours to be remembered.

Children's Corner.

Learning the Verses.

A young friend, who had been for days laying at the gates of death, remarked one Lord's day to the children, who were repeating the Bible verses in her room:

"Oh! I would learn all the verses I could now, while you are young. How much I would give if I knew the Bible as your mother does! How I should like to say it over to myself when I lie here, too weak even to read!"

The poor girl was early left an orphan, and thrown upon the tender mercies of worldly people, who cared only for the amount of labor that could be got out of her young hands. There was no Christian training, no blessed Sabbath influences. Yet a mother's prayers followed her, and even then she sometimes prayed most earnestly to herself, and made resolutions to seek the Saviour. For six years she has professed Christ, and he does not desert her in this hour of sorest need that ever comes to mortals.

I wish all our children would heed this message from Annie's dying bedside. Learn many Bible verses. You do not know how much nor how soon you may need them. It is thought a piece of commendable prudence for children to begin to save little sums of money, and put them in the savings bank. It will be useful to them in maturer years, when they wish to set up in business for themselves. It may be their sole dependence in some time of adversity, when fortune frowns or sickness comes.

But what fund in the bank could ever compare with a bank of golden texts, all payable by a banker so rich that no possibility of a failure can ever for a moment exist? Do you think that millions in money could buy from this poor dying girl her interest in that verse, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin?"

It will make no difference a century hence whether you laid up money in bank or not. But these precious verses are enduring treasure. You can take them with you when you leave this world.—Christian Intelligencer.

I Will Stop.

"I shall never become like him," a young man said to me, as he pointed to a poor, reeling drunkard across the street. I had been trying to warn him of the danger of touching alcohol in any form, for, alas! he sometimes drank cider, beer, and wine.

"I shall never become like him," he reiterated earnestly again.

"Do not be too sure, Charlie," I answered, "for you have taken the first few steps in this path that poor L— is now traveling. Unless you now stop at once, you will become the same wretched thing that he is—a drunkard."

"No, you are mistaken," the young man said, "for whenever I discover danger ahead I will stop; I know that I can."

"You will never discover it until it is too late to turn about, Charlie. Poor L— yonder, was lost before he knew it," I answered.

"Do not borrow trouble about me," he replied, with a light laugh, as he turned away.

Five years have elapsed since the above conversation passed between Charlie S— and myself, and to-night he sleeps in a drunkard's grave. Poor Charlie did not see his danger until it was too late, and so he went to ruin. He did not possess the moral courage that he was sure he could call into command at any moment, and his frail constitution gave way in a little while, and Charlie was lost in darkness.

"I was mistaken," were the last words he ever said to me, "for I have become just such a wretch as poor L—."

Boys, look at the poor, bloated wrecks of humanity all about, and be saved while it is possible. You will become just such a poor object of pity, unless you leave the path of intemperance. Leave it now, for if you wait until to-morrow, you may be bound in chains that never can be broken.

—Cross and Crown.

He Could be Trusted.

Alfred was missing one night about sunset. Mother was getting anxious, for she always wished him to be home early. A neighbor, coming in, said a number of boys has gone to the river to swim, and he thought it likely Alfred was with them.

"No," said the mother, "he promised me he would never go there without my leave, and he always keeps his word."

But seven o'clock came, then eight, and mother was still listening for Alfred's step; but it was half past eight before his shout and whistle was heard when he ran in at the gate.

"Confess now," said the neighbor, "that you have been to the river with other boys, and so kept away till late?"

How the boy's eyes flashed, and the crimson mounted to his cheeks!

"No, sir! I promised my mother that I would never go there without her leave and do you think I would tell a falsehood! I helped James to find the cows that had strayed in the wood, and didn't think I should stay so late."

James coming up the street just then, came in to say he was afraid they had been alarmed; he and Alfred had been so far in the wood it made them late in getting home.

"I think," said the neighbor, turning to the mother as he took his hat to go home, "there is a comfort in store for you, by him. Such a boy as that will make a noble man."—Ex.

Religious Intelligence.

—The number of Baptist churches in London is 127, with 29,125 members against 27,225 members in 1873; a gross increase on last year 1,900 or a net increase of 911 members.

—There are now 150 Presbyterian ministers in India, ministering to a Christian community of not less than 30,000 persons, of whom 8,000 are the fruits of missionary labor.

—There are said to be about 250,000 Friends in the United States, 12,000 of whom reside in New York city and Brooklyn, and worship in less than half a dozen meeting-houses.

—At Rome Protestantism now numbers more than forty chapels or places of worship open every Sunday, and several times during the week. A Scripture Reader's Association has been formed for the purpose of reading the Bible from house to house.

—The Colored Methodest Episcopal church in America has four Bishops, fifteen annual conferences, 607 traveling preachers, 74,799 members, 535 Sunday-schools, 1,102 teachers, 49,956 scholars, and is endeavoring to establish a school for the education of its young ministers.

—Some French cannon, captured in the late Franco-Prussian war, now sound out each Sabbath peaceful invitations to the people to come to the house of prayer. The cannon were given by the Emperor of Germany to the St. Mathew's German Evangelical Church, of Baltimore.

—A convention of Presbyterian laymen of New York is to be held at Saratoga Springs in August. The meeting is called for the purpose of awaking a deeper religious interest, for discussing the duties of Presbyterianism, and to consider schemes for the support of feeble churches.

—Rev. E. P. Hammond is at Macomb, Ill,, and prosecuting the good work with vigor. The whole town seems moved, and immense meetings are held every night. One hundred and thirty-five persons arose for prayers in one evening, and about three hundred hopeful conversions are reported.

—"The Journal of the Disciple of Satan," is the title of a paper which has appeared at Palermo, Sicily. The Young Men's Free Thinking Association of that city hailed its appearance in the following terms: "We salute the birth of a paper which bears the name of the true god, the god of science, liberty and progress, the god we worship—Satan." Italy has yet to learn, it would seem, that liberty does not mean license.

—Canon Ryle, of England, is laboring to curtail the autocratic power of the Bishops. "As things are now," he says, "I know no one, hardly, except a Roman Dictator, or a Russian Czar, who is such a thoroughly irresponsible autocrat as an English Bishop! No one has such absolute official power as he has, and no one is so entirely nonaccountable to anybody but himself! I believe that no mortal man is fit to have such power. The result is that bold and rash Bishops often do too much in some special direction, and make immense mistakes, while timid and cautious Bishops do nothing at all, from the very fear of doing wrong." He would have these ecclesiastical dictators brought down to the level of constitutional monarchs at least, and made subject to the advice of a council.

From the General Agent.

Saegartown, Pa., June 26, 1874.

Dear K.:—I have delayed reports of my work since the Convention, knowing that you had matters of more importance and greater interest to your readers. I will send a brief outline of my campaign in western N. Y. and Crawford Co., Pa.

From Syracuse via Auburn I reached Le Roy on the evening of the eleventh. After taking supper at the hotel mentioned in the "Broken Seal" as "Hall's Tavern," Mrs. S. and myself went to the Free Methodist church where we found our excellent brother and true friend, Rev. Wm. Jackson, with his praying band engaged in the exercises of their regular weekly prayer meeting. To us it was a time of refreshing. Before the meeting closed, arrangements were made and notice given for me to speak on the following evening. Bro. J. took us to his house where we were heartily welcomed by his excellent wife and where we enjoyed every kindness and Christian hospitality which could be desired during our stay.

Le Roy is historic ground, and while there I made the acquaintance of several of the now aged men who engaged personally in the exciting scenes and thrilling events of 1826. These men recall those scenes with great vividness, and confirm without exception what Mr. Greene has given to the public in his "Broken Seal." It seemed strange that this book had not found its way into this place sooner; but so far as I could learn not a single copy had ever been read or offered for sale. I disposed of several before leaving and arranged with Bro. Jackson to supply those who desired with this and other of our reform works. At the P. O. I made the acquaintance of Mr. John H. Stanley, deputy post-master and clerk of the town, who accompanied me to several places of note. He showed me a brick house on Lake street, two buildings north of N. Y. C. depot, which Mr. Morgan built during the summer of 1825. It is a square, two-story, brick structure, evidently "well laid," and is now owned and occupied by Mrs. E. W. Blodget. We went to the place where Miller was rescued and put into the stage, and Bro. S. pointed out the places where Miller was captured by the Masons after leaving the office of Justice Bartow, where his sham trial occurred; and still farther up the street where he was retaken by his friends. We visited the locality where the famous Le Roy Convention of 104 seceding Masons was held. The "Round House," as it was called, in which that meeting convened, has been removed and the ground is occupied by a church partly built of material taken from the old Round House. I also saw the window in which Solomon Southwick stood when he made his Fourth of July speech to an immense gathering within and outside the Presbyterian church.

The lodge in Le Roy, I am told, is composed mostly if not entirely of men whose morality and integrity is, to say the least, of a very questionable character. They are the "men of business" who paint their windows and put screens just inside their doors, because, as Christ says, and his children believe, "Their deeds are evil." I was told that they had one preacher in their lodge, and tried to imagine how he would feel when surrounded by his red-nosed, bloated, jolly brothers, saying grace over their whiskey bottles, or uttering Christless prayers at the mock funeral services of the unfortunate Hiram Abiff, right in the very town where Freemasonry had shown its murderous and true character by taking the life of one peaceful citizen and attempting that of another by treachery and deception under forms of civil law. How long will the Christians of Le Roy, or elsewhere, sustain or even tolerate such desecration of the sacred office?

After speaking four times in Le Roy and one evening at Bethlehem, an adjoining town, we took the cars for Buffalo, from thence to Dunkirk, where I stopped off and Mrs. S. continued her journey toward Chicago and to our home in Illinois. Bro. Amsden, of Findley's Lake, N. Y., met me at North East on the morning of the 17th, and after a pleasant ride of seven miles through a very picturesque country, we stopped at the door of his hospitable dwelling, where I enjoyed bountiful provisions and pleasant associations during the three days which I spent there. Our meetings were well attended and much interest apparent at this point. Bros. Amsden, Thompson, Durfee and others are in earnest and extend to any of the friends who are passing that way a cordial invitation to visit them. These brethren have inlisted for life, and will never strike their colors before the army of the lodge.

I reached this place on Saturday a little before twelve and rapping at the door of Bro. Robert Shaw soon gained the response, "Who is there." Giving the desired information, I soon found myself in comfortable quarters recuperating for the work before me. On Sabbath morning I preached for Rev. Brown, pastor of the M. E. church in this village whose kindness and gentlemanly treatment of our cause and its agent during my stay here are worthy of note and mention with special gratitude, as also the kindness of the other two resident ministers of this place. All are now, through the generosity of Bro. Shaw, readers of the Cynosure, and they will undoubtedly become more active as they are better informed upon the facts and features of our reform. Bro. Shaw has been indefatigable in his labors scattering the good seed with a liberal hand. Opposition he does not fear, but his faith is sometimes sorely tried by the listlessness and indifference of those who profess friendship and sympathy with our work. Bro. Shaw's wife enters most heartily into her husband's views and feelings, and their children have inherited the principles of their parents. Friends of our cause passing this way will receive cordial greetings at the house of Bro. Shaw, and sitting down in his easy chair will find the Cynosure, Free Press, Wesleyan and other reformatory papers, testifying to his sincerity and advertising his principles. During our meetings here Bro. Shaw has devoted his entire time to helping on in the work, and has coveyed me whithersoever I listed with his carriage and "noble steeds."

After speaking three evenings in Saegartown, I went with Bro. S. to a Wesleyan chapel on the hill near Bro. Jones', where brethren Crooks and Stratton are both kindly remembered. Here we had a good audience and successful meeting. The "Patrons of Husbandry" have spread their net upon this hill; but from what I could gather they were not meeting with remarkable success. The real object of the interested managing patrons at headquarters has been detected sooner at this than at some other points and there is already great commotion inside the hive, and talk out side of bringing suit to recover initiation fees.

Our friends generally in this region favor political action, direct and decided. I have not as yet attempted an organization, as the work is comparatively new and the mass of the people need more information in order to act intelligently. I have taken three life memberships and enrolled a few names as annual members. I have great confidence in this feature of our work and believe if our agents and friends will use proper effort a formidable organized opposition may soon be presented to the lodge and the funds necessary for the prosecution of our work secured.

Bro. Baird is to meet me on Saturday the 27th, at Meadville, where I am to speak in the Court-House at 2:30 on "Freemasonry in our courts, and in our civil administration." Bro. B, will probably remain to hold meetings for a time in this county. I purpose going on to Ohio next week.

Respectfully and truly your Bro.,

J. P. Stoddard.

The Rev. Wm. M. Givens, of Ind., has just closed a series of lectures in our place on the subject of secrecy; subject of first lecture, The Laws of Masonry, their despotic character, its claims to antiquity, etc. The subject was handled in a calm and fair manner, his quotations were exclusively from Masonic authors, except a few from the Bible and Josephus. His comments were fair, and it seemed to be the especial aim to give offence to no one.

After the lecture was over we heard the remark from quite a number, "How fair!" "Just the thing we have wanted for a long time;" and yet some were very much offended. One in particular, a rather prominent church member said it was nothing but "slang whang;" that he got perfectly disgusted with it, and left before the lecture was half out. Perhaps no one has occasion to quote the lines of Tom Hood.

"Alas the variety
Of Christian charity
Under the sun,"

oftener than Anti-masonic lecturers. There was some talk of arresting Bro. Givens for carrying concealed weapons, but the truth was he carried but one weapon and that was the truth, and the trouble was he did not conceal that enough.

The next lecture was on the Religion of Masonry. It being lodge night, only few of the craft were present, but the house was well filled and the attention good. He proved from its own authors that Masonry is a religion; in fact, it is no uncommon thing to hear the remark, "Masonry is good enough religion for me;" or this, "If I am ever compelled to leave the lodge or the church, I'll leave the church." What a glorious thing it would be for the church.

Tuesday night he told the audience how Masons were made. The house was full, quite a number were obliged to stand. The attention was good. He spoke over two hours of the worse than child's play of the initiating ceremonies of the Entered Apprentice and Master Mason. We think Webb, (of Masonic Monitor fame) was right, when he said the "ceremonies were little more than visionary delusions." The lecturer, after proving from the Bible and Josephus, that Hiram the widow's son was not killed while the temple was being built, but that he wrought all of King Solomon's work (1st Kings vii. 14,) described the farce of the death-burial and raising of Hiram. We cannot see why so silly a farce should ever have been invented, unless it was that a few fools might play Solomon.

Bro. G. told the members of the craft at each lecture that it was not his intention to misrepresent them, and if he made any misstatements, it was not only their privilege, but their duty to correct him. After he got through he gave an opportunity for any one to make any remarks, or correct any misstatements made by him; but as he was not corrected it is generally taken for granted that he told the truth. We cheerfully recommend Brother Givens to all who need lectures on the subject of secrecy.

The Toledo Blade speaks of our convention at Syracuse as a small affair, about forty delegates present. If it had been held at the "Confederate X Roads," perhaps "Nasby" could have done better. The Cleveland Flain Dealer speaks of us as a few fanatics, or something to that effect. J. G. MATTOON.

Correction.

In the Exposition of Odd-fellowship on page 14, following the paragraph ending, Forget it not; Forget it not, the account of bringing the candidate to the chair of the Vice Grand is omitted and the next paragrage should be headed: VICE GRAND'S CHARGE.

Correspondence.

The "Christian at Work" on the Syracuse Convention.

"The Kappa-Alphas, Psi-Kais, Sigma-phis and the 'secret' debating clubs and children's secret societies will please take notice and disband at once! The Great National Christian Association have organized the Great American Party for the suppression of secret societies and 'all other anti-Christian and anti-republican agencies.' Freemasonry is to be overthrown, the grangers dug out and harrowed, and the Odd-fellows are to be annihilated by the odder fellows of this Great National Organization. The Sons of Temperance and the Rechabites too, must sell their paraphernalia and stop winking at each other and shaking hands with thumbs and little fingers interlaced. Christianity depends upon the suppression of these secret cabals; the life of the nation demands the sacrifice,—the great American eagle soaring in cirrus and cumuli screams for the suppression of secret societies. Not till this movement is crowned with success will this be a happy country; not till then will the lion lie down with the kid without laying outside of him. The Great American Party organized by the Great National Christian Association is around, and its voice will be heard from Mount Desert to the Golden Horn,—from Alaska to Florida reefs! If you belong to a secret society get out of it; if husband and wife have any secrets between each other let them at once disband or publish their secrets in the village paper having the widest circulation—for the "Great American Party" is coming and it will prove as terrible as an army with banners."

The above I clip from the "Christian At Work" by T. DeWitt, Talmage, which paper I have been reading several years. Mr. T. rather recently came to its throne with flambeau, and sackbut, and cymbal, and other attractive things, and I was willing "for a season to rejoice in his light." Though less gifted yet in some respects he seems to be an improvement on Beecher, whom he evidently aims to outgo in this bid for "popular applause," for I am at a loss on reading it to see what other object a man of his pretentions could have in writing so flippantly about men who deserve the admiration and gratitude of every one who loves his God and his country. I presume Mr. T. is a "Mason" or an "Odd-fellow;" first, from the spirit of the piece and from his ready use of the title "Great." It is sad to think that a man of such opportunities for knowing and doing, and such pretentions, should be so ignorant of the history and workings and designs of Masonry as to mention it on the same page with the secrets between husbands and wives, and volunteers its defense in the only way that I hear Masons doing, i. e., laughing about the "greased pole," "riding the goat out of the window," "wink-at each other and shaking hands with the thumbs and little finger interlaced."

But I merely sat down to send this extract and yet I had such a mingled feeling of regret and shame and sorrow that such a paper should thus not only volunteer such an unprovoked ridicule of the Syracuse Convention, but place itself on the list of advocates for college and all other secret societies, I could but express it. "They that gather not with us scatter abroad." May Mr. Talmage's eyes yet be open to see these things in a clearer light! Yours, in the life work of overthrowing the dominion of darkness, R. FAUROT.

Progress and Threats.

PINE RUN, Mich., June 20, 1874.

BROTHER KELLOGG:—

About March 21st, 1874, at a meeting of the Congregational church of Goodrich, Mich., a man offered himself for admission to the church, when your correspondent asked if said candidate was an adhering member of any secret society, supplimenting the question with remarks respecting the anti-Christian character of the lodge, and was followed by two other members holding forth that no person should belong to both lodge and church at the same time.

April 6th, at the township meeting held in the same village of Goedrich, nearly sixty Anti-masonic votes were polled. April 9th I found an unstamped letter in the post-office directed to me as follows:

GOODRICH, Mich., March 7, 1874.

Walter Beden:

SIR:—We don't wish to injure a single hair of your head and have no desire to bring harm to a single filament flourishing on the devoted cranium of any of your imbecilious, self-aggrandizing co-strugglers for notoriety and appellations of hero, martyrs and the like. We have no desire to work any of you ill, and are possessed of no spirit calling for the shedding of any good man's blood, but we must have less lip! A word to the wise is sufficient; and if you and your industrious class are not too fool hardy to regard this bit of wise council, your families and friends may still continue to bask in the sunshine of your most illustrious and all puissant selves, and still dwell in the halo of your own great glory!

In conclusion we would urge—nay, warn! you all to act as wise men and avert the storm now gathering which will be so strong and so terrible that it will surely prove diastrous to many of your aspiring band! In the language of Holy Writ we would exclaim: "O that ye would; but ye will not; and the rod must fall!"

FRIEND MONITOR, E. G. G. Mc.

I have neglected to send the above that I might first ascertain who was the writer; and if hand-writing and circumstances are proof the writer is a Mason living near Goodrich.

The original I keep to exhibit.

Yours truly, WALTER M. BEDEN.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

ODD FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

REGULATIONS FOR OPENING, CONDUCTING AND CLOSING A LODGE.

NOTE.—This illustrated exposition of Odd-fellowship will be published in book form before Sept, 1st, 1874. (See Advertisement.)

The location of the Reception and Preparation Room and the various doors are of course different in different lodges. The above diagram shows the position of the various officers of a Subordinate Lodge, but the place of the Treasurer and Secretary are interchangeable and the Past Grand sometimes occupies the opposite side of the room, but the Chaplain, if there is one, should sit opposite the Past Grand.

The examiner, termed the Conductor or Outside Conductor now blindfolds the candidate, leads him to the door of the lodge and gives the usual alarm, or entersign: [Three raps on Lodge room door].

Inside Guardian. Who comes there?

Ans. by Outside Conductor. A Brother with a friend who desires to be initiated into the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. The Inside Guardian reports this to Vice Grand, on whose command the door is opened and the candidate is led into the lodge room, where he is received by the proper Conductor attended by the Supporters.

CONDUCTOR'S CHARGE.

You are now within the retreat of Odd Fellows—here the world is shut out—you are separated from its cares and distinctions—from its dissensions and its vices. Here friendship and Love assert their mild dominion, while Faith and Charity combine to bless the mind with peace and soften the heart with Charity. Those who surround us have all assumed the obligations and endeavor to cherish the sentiments peculiar to Odd Fellowship; but before you can unite with them you must pass through an initiatory ceremony, which will ultimately lead you to primary truth; be patient therefore and firm—Brothers, the stranger now awaits our mystic rites.

While this is being done the Conductor says: Man in darkness and in chains—how mournful the spectacle—yet it is but the condition of millions of our race, who are void of wisdom though they know it not. [Says to Supporters: Lead on our friend]. We have a lesson to impart to him—one of great moment and solemnity; a faithful exhibition of the vanity of worldly things—of the instability of wealth and power of the certain decay of all earthly greatness.

The Conductor is careful to take a rout and gait that will occupy the time while the Conductor's Charge is being given.

They halt before a coffined corpse or an imitation, when the Conductor begins to take off the blinds and says to the candidate: Be serious for our lesson is as melancholy as it is truthful. [Blinds are now off]. Behold a representation of the effect of sin that silent yet impressive lecturer, to vice, confusion, but to virtue, peace, is all that remains on earth, of one who was born as you were born, who lived as you now live, and who for many days enjoyed his possession, his power and his pleasure. But now alas! nothing is left of him save that sad memorial of man's mortality. The warm heart which throbbed for others' woes, or the cold one, which held no sympathy has now mouldered away and joined its kindred dust. Contemplate the scene! Should it not humble man's pride? Should it not awake the soul to a just sense of responsibility to God, of duty to itself? And in view of the common lot of all, should it not enlist the tenderest of human sympathies? My friend, that gloomy monitor is but an emblem of what you are sure to be, and of what you may soon become. Seriously meditate the solemn admonition it affords ponder it well, and see that your own heart fosters not evil—the fountain of all wrong—the progenitor of crime, hatred and violence, whose fearful consequences must continue to afflict mankind until the coming of that period (yet hidden in the womb of time) to which Hope looks forward with ardent joy. When the chains of human bondage shall be broken, and the tears and woes of this world be submerged, by the healing tide that shall flow from the Fountain of Benevolence and Peace. Then one law shall bind all nations, kindreds and tongues of the earth; and that law shall be the law of Universal Brotherhood.

Right Supporter. Then shall the Wolf dwell with the Lamb, and the Leopard lie down with the Kid, and the Calf and the fatling together and a little child shall lead them; and the Cow and the Bear shall feed, and the Lion shall eat straw like an Ox.

Left Supporter. And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people, and they shall beat their swords into plow-shares and their spears into pruning-hooks. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. He has made of one blood all nations of men, to dwell on the face of the earth

The candidate is again blindfolded and is then addressed as follows, by the Conductor: "You may think it strange, my friend, that we thus blindfold you; its symbolic purpose will, in due time, be fully explained. The candidate is then led to the Warden where the blinds are removed and the Conductor says: This, my friend, is our venerable Warden; he has a charge to deliver to you; Listen attentively to what he may say.

Warden to Candidate. Friend, hear the voice of wisdom speaking from age and experience, and let it sink deep into your heart. These trembling limbs and this wrinkled brow betoken that the weight of years is upon me. I have indeed seen many years, and many solemn scenes have passed before me. A wise man has said: "I have been young but now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken or his seed begging bread." I would impress this upon your mind, and will add another maxim, which I pray you heed and be wise. It is this: that in practice, Friendship, Love and Truth will be found the best safegnards against the ills of life. Forget it not; Forget it not.

Stranger, having entered within these walls, you are never to make known the secrets of this order, or to make any discoveries to any person or persons upon any pretense or for any purpose. Will you comply with these rules?

Vice Grand to Conductor: Restore him to light and liberty. (Here the blindfold is taken off and the chains also.)

Vice Grand to Candidate: Stranger, it is my duty to administer to you a solemn and binding obligation—one which we have all taken, but which will not conflict with any of those exalted duties you owe to your God, your country or yourself.

With this assurance, are you willing to take such an obligation?

Ans. I am.

Vice Grand to Candidate: Place your right hand on your left breast, and repeat after me the following

OBLIGATION:

I, ————, in the presence of the brothers now assembled, do solemnly promise that I will never communicate to any one unless directed so to do by a legal Lodge, the signs, tokens, pass-words, or grips, belonging to the Independent Order of Odd-fellows; that if any books or papers containing anything relating to the Independent Order of Odd-fellows should be placed in my hands, I will never expose or lend them to any person or persons, except to one legally authorized to receive them. Should I hereafter be thought worthy of receiving any or all of the higher degress in this Lodge, I will never communicate the same to any one not legally qualified to receive them. I furthermore promise, that I will support and abide by the by-laws, rules and regulations of this Lodge, and of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows of the ———, or any other Grand or Working Lodge to which I may be attached; that I will not improperly communicate the quarterly, traveling, or other pass-words to any one. I also promise that I will never wrong a brother, nor see him wronged, without aprizing him of approaching danger, if in my power so to do. Should I be expelled, or voluntarily leave this order, I will consider this promise as binding out of it as it is in it, to the true and faithful performance of which I pledge my sacred honor.

Vice Grand to Candidate: Stranger(s), you have now entered into a society that is far more important than you at first imagine. It is quite conformable to law, religion, and sound morality. Nor does it permit anything contrary to the allegiance we owe to our country, or the duty we owe to ourselves. Let good conduct procure you the esteem of your family and friends. Let strict caution guard you against making any improper discoveries to the uninformed, so that by your example, you may convince the world that good faith and virtue are the peculiar characteristics of a true Odd-fellow, for according to our laws, we can be Odd-fellows only while we act like honest men. I will now recommend you to the Noble Grand, who will further instruct you, and I hope your deportment will be such after your initiation, as to give us no cause to regret that we have accepted you as a brother.

Vice Grand to Conductor: Proceed with our friend to the principal chair, there to be introduced to the Noble Grand.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abducted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS. in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

Publisher's Department.

Three month's subscribers do not generally renew their subscriptions. Will not those who sent in their names call on them, so far as possible? A word from a friend is often more effective than anything else, in leading one to continue his paper.

FIVE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-ONE subscriptions expire in July. Many of these subscribers have been receiving the paper as a gift during the last three months. Will those who obtained these subscriptions try to keep the number good. Some have already promised to do so.

SEND RENEWALS FOR THREE OR SIX MONTHS, if you have not the money to pay for a year; or at least write asking to have your paper continued, stating that you will renew as soon as possible if you wish to have it continued. When times are dull we are obliged to work a little harder. Let all friends take hold. Do what you can and make July leave a good record on our mail list. Do not let the number of our subscribers diminish during July and August. Satan never is busier than in the summer. Let Christians be as earnest in promoting truth and righteousness as his followers are in promoting falsehood and sin.

We feel like thanking those who circulated the petition against the laying of the corner-stone of the Custom-House. Reports were not accurate that were at first received but now the number of petitioners is considered a little more than fourteen thousand. Most of these we believe were collected in less than a week. Let us thank God for this victory. (It has made its impression) and with new spirit, earnestness and wisdom go to work, aiding lecturers, distributing tracts and Cynosures, enlightening those ignorant of the evils of secret societies and increasing the circulation of the Cynosure.

We publish next week a letter from Edward H. Magill, President of Swarthmore College, a large and important institution in Pennsylvania. He says that he has read the new pamphlet on College Secret Societies with pleasure.

Send orders. Thirty-five cents single copies $2.25 per doz., post paid, $15,00 per hundred, expressage extra.

THE TRACT FUND.

This fund, which is for the free distribution of tracts, has had a very heavy drain on it for the past month, and we are sorry to say is now exhausted. From May 25th to June 24th, over fifty thousand pages of tracts for free distribution were called for and sent out, forty thousand of them were Cynosure tracts. For every additional dollar contributed to this fund, we send out two thousand pages of tracts, post paid.

TO SECEDING ODD-FELLOWS.

We ask the especial attention of all seceding Odd-fellows to the exposition of Odd-fellowship, which is being published in the Cynosure. IS IT CORRECT? We do not want an error in it. HAVE YOU TAKEN THE ENCAMPMENT DEGREES? or can you tell us of a seceder who has taken those degrees.

IS IT FAIR.—Gen. O. O. Howard has been a friend to the freedmen. For this reason those who hate them, hate him. He is also a Christian; for this reason some infidels hate him. He has been charged for several years with improper administration of funds belonging to the Freedmen's Bureau. He sustained a Congressional examination several years since and was acquitted. His enemies called this whitewashing. They reiterated these charges until he demanded a trial, and a court-martial consisting of General's Sherman, McDowell, Meigs, Pope and Reynolds, and Colonels Miles and Getty, all of the regular army. After a long and careful investigation those officers declare that General Howard has not violated his trusts in fact or technically. That is that the charges against him are untrue. He then asked Congress to pay the expenses incurred in his defense and they refused. The case at present stands thus: If a "carpet-bagger" contests an election, solely for his own pecuniary benefit, Congress will pay his expenses and sometimes even his salary, whether it was proved that he was elected or not. If an officer who has given an arm and offered a life for his country is forced into a court-martial to defend his name and character, the Congress that allows Fernando Wood to slander him in the House will refuse to pay the costs of the suit they have compelled him to enter, and thus is added another ounce to our national disgrace.

THE ORDER OF ENOCH.—Brigham Young has lately started a new order—"The order of Enoch." We say started; more properly he has named an order, "The order of Enoch," for it is only Masonry modified and re-christened. The object of this order is to get possession of the property of other men. That is, the leaders constitute "The Church." Then they get as many to join as possible, and every man who is initiated, vows to give his property into the hands of the church. That is just the way they do here. The Mason joins the lodge and expects to get boosted up in various ways. He hopes first for an office. Failing in that, he wants an easy place to work, or a place where he can get a living by loafing. Some few are so fortunate as to realize their expectations. Most of them find that they have got into the order of Enoch. Dues must be paid. They must help kill Hiram Abiff and obey the man who hangs his hat "on nature's peg;" but when they die the lodge neither gives them a decent burial or cares for the widow and orphan. There is one very encouraging thing about the present aspect of this matter, and that is, that so many are leaving this order of Enoch. More than eleven thousand last year refused to pay dues, and counting deaths, dismissals, etc., thirty-five thousand men have left the order of Enoch within twelve months. Onward then, O soldiers of Jesus; circulate the Cynosure; speak the word and never faint in your labor;

> For conquer we must, when our cause it is just,
> And this be our motto, In God is our trust;
> Till the Star-spangled Banner no longer shall wave
> O'er a Freemason's lodge or a Jesuit slave.

TAKEN SUDDENLY SICK.—In Louisville lately a musician died suddenly after being initiated into Boone lodge of Knights of Pythias. His attending physician testified that he died of heart disease and was sick five days. His wife, however, has brought suit against certain Knights for causing the death of her husband. She charges them with conspiring together to persuade and induce Frank Lamadrid to enter their secret society, and that they, with others, to her unknown, did beat, drag and bruise her husband in going through with their rites or pretended rites, by reason of which he died. She therefore asks damages for his killing.

This is not so unusual a thing as may be generally supposed. The Kappa-Alpha fraternity at Cornell University had been persuading Mortimer Leggett three weeks before he consented to join their lodge and was killed. So in a little town called Stillwater, in New York, a young man joined the Masonic lodge, took a cold while stripped for the initiation, from which he died in eight days. The Masons did not bury him, nor would they return to his wife the money he had paid for the first degree that killed him. This is bad enough, but there is something worse. Every man who joins the lodge is taken suddenly sick. Some are taken sick of the senseless indecent mouthings of Masonry. All such are in a good way. But many are taken sick of manhood and honor. The average Mason or Pythian or Odd-fellow is belittled in heart and mind by the contemptible and wicked rites of the lodge. The average Mason falsifies to his wife, if he have one, and to his neighbors if he has not, concerning the order; and associations formed in lodges are seldom such as elevate, almost always such as degrade. If these lodges would kill men's bodies, they would do little harm. It is because they injure the mind and ruin the soul that they must be destroyed.

THE LAND OF THE FREE.—Fourth of July orators never tire of talking about the land of the free and the home of the brave. They used to do so while United States Senators, Representatives and judges held, whipped and sold like cattle, men and women who were far better than themselves. They do so now, and add to the stanzas they used to repeat some very affecting words about the dark stain of slavery being washed off of the Star-spangled Banner with the red blood of her sons "and a' that."

If this means anything, it means that an honest man who does not interfere with his neighbors may work for a living if he gets a chance. In Ohio at the present time, there are a large number of men who would be glad to earn a living by mining coal. They insult nobody and ask nothing but the privilege of laboring for men who want to employ them. And yet these same men have to be guarded by armed sentinels and to carry revolvers, as if they were outlaws. The other night three of the workers were caught by the roughs and ropes put on their necks, while the other end was passed over the limb of a tree. In this condition they were compelled to accede to demands made under threats of hanging. What is the reason for this? Why, a secret society decided that none of its members should work for less than a certain sum per day. They also decided that other men should not work for less than the same sum, and that if they undertook to do so, the members of this secret order would kill them. This is the legitimate work of a secret society. It is needed for no good purpose. It can be used for any bad one. Treason, murder, cheating, gambling, defrauding, debauchery and common theft all depend for their successful accomplishment on the same principles which are taught in Masonic lodges and societies of the Jesuits—a silent tongue, a listening ear, and a heart that is faithful to the clan. It was such a society that was murdering men in Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, three years ago. Now the killing is in Ohio, and next year it may be in Illinois or New York. Secret societies are in their nature conspiracies against all who are not connected with them. They are rebellions against God. They must cease to exist, or our liberties will be subverted, and our land destroyed.

THE PROVINCE OF BEER.—The Germans have lately had a festival of music and beer at Cleveland, O. The entire space below the stage was converted into a vast bar-room and every thing was ready for the festival from the music stands to the beer kegs. Here came in a trouble. The Ladies' Temperance League becoming aware of the state of things, decided that they would not support the musical interludes because they could not support the beer play. Nor was this all. The managers wanted to have a children's matinee concert and the parents protested against the concern so universally that it began to be feared that the chorus would be a failure. The Superintendent of schools then gave the public to understand that those children who refused to sing would be dismissed from the public schools. He afterwards was compelled to state that he didn't mean to carry out the threat. It was intended according to the explanation to scare and not kill. This is all very interesting. In this same Cleveland the Catholic bishop has attempted to drive Catholic children from the public schools. Women have been assaulted for praying on the street, and now, children of Christian parents must sing for beer-guzzling infidels or be turned out of school, or threatened with it. Is it not growing reasonably plain that the Christian sentiment of the American people must assert itself and command respect, if it wishes to secure it. Just so surely as tobacco and beer are elevated to the place here that they occupy in Germany, just so surely will we have some William and Bismarck to manage a people too sluggish and besotted to govern themselves. Just so surely as we are an infidel nation we shall fall into the condition of France, which has climate, soil, minerals, everything but Christianity, out of which to make a happy, prosperous and intelligent nation. The farms of our people will be consolidated to make possessions for the rich. The cottages of our laborers will become the property of their employers and the working American become a serf, unless the onward march of the rum and beer army and the increase of practical and theoretic atheism can be checked. This kind goeth not forth save by fasting and prayer. Let us rise and cry mightily to God. His arm alone is sufficient to save us, and his arm is all sufficient. He interposed for our salvation when we were poor and feeble. He raised us up when we were low down in the dust, and he can avert threatening dangers if only we humble ourselves before him.

Proclaim the Truth.

[Sung by Mr. Clark in the Syracuse Convention.]

For the truth then let us battle
Whatsoever fate betide,
Long the boast that we are freemen
Has been made and published wide.

He who has the truth and keeps it
Keeps what not to him belongs,
But performs a selfish action
That his fellow mortals wrongs.

He who knows the truth and places
Its high promptings under ban
Long may boast of all that's manly
But can never be a man.

He who hears the truth and trembles
At the danger he must brave
Is not fit to be a freeman,
He at least is but a slave.

Friend, this simple lay that hearest,
Be not thou like either them;
But to truth give utmost freedom,
And the tide it raises, stem.

Be thou like the noble Roman,
Scorn the threat that bids thee fear;
Speak, whatever may betide thee,
Let them strike but make them hear.

Be thou like the first apostles;
Be thou like heroic Paul;
If a free thought seek expression,
Speak it boldly; speak it all.

Face thine enemies, accusers,
Scorn the prison, rack or rod,
And if thou hast the truth to utter Speak and leave the rest to God.

The Chief Corner-Stone.

Much of the architecture, both of the old and new world, includes a variety of buttresses, transepts and towers. Indeed, many of the ancient castles were a group of buildings rather than single edifices. Particularly is such the case with some of the imperial palaces to which additions have been made from age to age by successive sovereigns. Such architecture, of course, involves many angles and corners. And it is evident that every corner of such an edifice, should be firmly supported, and especially that of the main body or principal tower of the building. For if the corner-stone should work loose and give way, the whole superstructure would be in danger of falling to the ground.

Hence, by virtue of its office and relations, the corner-stone has been magnified and dignified by references to it in divine revelation as one illustration of Him who constitutes the great foundation of all truth. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." "Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious, and he that buildeth on him shall not be confounded." When the Father sent the Son into the world, he laid the foundation of the mightiest and grandest superstructure of the universe, and which in the process of its erection is presenting a scene which for moral sublimity never has been and never can be—excelled.

Now then, in the initiation of any great human enterprise, be it moral or material, it would naturally seem most fit to employ agents of some practical knowledge and experience in the work to be done, and then to recognize in a suitable manner Him who constitutes the only safe and permanent foundation. Nothing could appear more appropriate in the erection of a great, stately edifice. "For," in the language of Sacred Writ, "Except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it." Nor is it more true of private than public enterprise. Are we not a Christian people? Do we not glory in a government based upon Christian principles? Are we ready, as citizens, all equal before the law, to have our public authorities lend their sanction to institutions that expressly and designedly eschew the great foundation of all successful enterprise? Yet, what else do they do, when they allow a great public edifice to be founded or dedicated under the auspices of speculative Masonry; which, if we are to believe its own authorities, ignores the Christ of the Scriptures? What can be more incongruous with the whole history of our nation, and the principles that gave it birth, and thus far have contributed to its prosperity and its rank among the nations of the earth? May the God of our fathers forbid it! Let not this Christian nation become an accompliee with an institution, which, by its express statutes, turns its back upon the Son of God. Let the nation hear what Christ himself has said, "Did ye never read in the Scriptures, 'The stone which the builders rejected, the same is become the head of the corner; this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes? Therefore say I unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."

Let the Americans ponder the history of that people who said, "Let his blood be on us and on our children," who have been persecuted as no other people have been, and to-day, scattered over the whole earth, without any local habitation, are a standing and living monument of the displeasure of the Almighty, on account of their rejection of his Son. Yea, ponder and behold the final doom of every individual and institution that ignores the only true foundation, as well as the future and permanent glory of all men and nations that build upon the chief corner-stone.

A Wife's Victory.

Willimantic, Conn., June 19, '74.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

While at our late Anniversary in Syracuse, I gave a little incident of my life, showing how I was saved from joining the lodge, which I was asked to give to the Cynosure for publication.

In the year 1858, while living in Litchfield county, Conn., I formed the acquaintance of several very respectable men who were Masons; with two of whom I was in daily intercourse. The one in whose company I was the most constant had considerable to say respecting Freemasonry, and of course he always spoke in praise of the order.

I used to state to him such objections as arose in my mind, to all of which he was always ready with an answer. Never having read or heard much upon the subject, I was ready to believe the statements of my friend who had my confidence, and I often listened with attention to his recitals of the good and charitable deeds of the order, until I was induced to make application to become a member of the "ancient and honorable fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons."

In due time I was informed that my application was unanimously accepted, and the lodge would be ready to confer the first degree on a specified evening.

Hitherto I had been in the habit of conferring with a faithful and loving wife respecting plans for the future, but in relation to this project I had said nothing to her; although I had never heard her say anything upon the subject whereby I should be led to think that her feelings would be in opposition to my taking such a step. The truth is, I had partially fallen into the meshes of the lodge; the fine, silken thread of the satanic spider had been thrown around me to draw me away from that which was good, and in being thus charmed by the old serpent, I was led to keep secret from my best earthly friend this very questionable step I was about to take.

But "God moves in a mysterious way." When I was preparing so got to the lodge, my wife came into the room and aked if I was going away. I said, "I am only going up town."

"But you don't generally fix up, just to go up town," was the reply.

"I know I do not, but I thought I would make a little change to-night," said I.

"Why, John, you are not going to join the Masons, are you?"

What could I say?

What should have led her to mistrust anything of that sort? Had our Heavenly Father put that thought into her mind?

My reply to her was, "I am thinking of doing so." She threw her arms around my neck, and bursting into tears she plead with me, saying, "O don't, John—don't." Seeing how she felt about it, I replied, "I will not join them to-night, Carrie."

She says, "Don't ever, John; don't ever."

I replied, "You will think and feel differently about it, after we have talked it over, but I promise you that I will not join them to-night." Having respect for her feelings, I deferred joining the order for a time; still expecting to do so after she should become reconciled to it.

Truly I was a "poor, blind candidate;" but thanks be to God for opening my eyes without my being stripped, hoodwinked and cable-towed, which was on this wise: I was a subscriber to the American Wesleyan; Rev. C. Prindle was then editor. About this time there was some discussion in the Wesleyan upon the subject of Freemasonry. Also, Mr. Prindle advertised a tract he had written upon this subject. Realizing that as a Christian I ought to be willing to read the objections that Christians might raise to the institution, I sent for the tract and read it carefully. My eyes were opened, and I had no more desire to become a Freemason.

I now thank God that I listened to the pleadings of a loving wife—that by his Providenee I was led to read the little tract, "Masonry and Odd fellowship," by Rev. C. Prindle, which tract is about to be reprinted with a supplement, by Rev. A. Crooks, one of the present editors of the American Wesleyan. Let all who read this artiele, send to Rev. A. Crooks, Syraeuse, N. Y., and get this tract—read it and lend it to your neighbors.

Troublers in Israel.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

And it came to pass that when Ahab saw Elijah that Ahab said unto him, "Art thou he that troubleth Israel?" (1 Kings, 18, 17.)

In conversing with a pastor of a neighboring church, I remarked that it was hardly to be expected that Masons and Anti-masons would live together in the same church in peace. He assented to this, but said that it was the Anti-masons that caused all the trouble. He did not say, but left it to be inferred, that it was not the Masons, but the Anti-masons, who were to be turned out as disturbers of the peace.

So it was during the anti-slavery struggle. It was the abolitionists that were charged with troubling both the church and the nation. The slaveholders would be as quiet as lambs, if left undisturbed and allowed full sway; but the abolitionists were like the early Christians, "pestilent fellows and movers of sedition." It was hardly practicable to turn out of the church all the abolitionists, for the infection was constantly spreading, and it will hardly be practieable to turn out all the Anti-masons, for so long as the Spirit of the Lord is in the church, this iniquity will be seen and hated, and the irrepressible conflict will still go on in this case as in the other.

In the estimation of the class of men of which this minister is a specimen, it is always the Elijahs that trouble Israel; Ahab and the four hundred prophets of Baal never give the least trouble,—certainly not so long as they are permitted to carry on devil worship without rebuke. It never occurs to this class of men that a popular sin can be hateful to God. It never occurs to them that the way to secure peace in the church is not bydiscouraging all investigation, and consenting that sin may reign unrebuked, but rather by rebuking and excluding it. To be "first pure and then peaceable," is to them most unpracticable. They would rather be first peaceable and let the purity take care of itself.

O when will the church learn that it is iniquity and not the rebuking of iniquity that is the cause of all the trouble; and that it is the Ahabs, the Jezebels, and the four hundred prophets of Baal, and not the Elijahs that ought to be rebuked and east out! O that there were ten thousand Elijahs who would not only rebuke Masonic Baal-worship, but who would when rebuked for such rebuking, reply like the old prophet, "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house, in that thou hast forsaken the commandments of God and served Baalim."

Is Doubt more Intellectual than Faith?

There are doubts and doubts. Not so many, perhaps, as is generally supposed, of those "honest" ones in which there lives—according to Tennyson—"more faith than half the creeds." It has, in fact, become the fashion in certain quarters to over-compassionate the doubter, to accredit him with a greater depth, and even with more thorough conscientiousness than the man convinced. But with every desire to find the reasonableness of such a view, we have entirely failed to discover why the holding of a creed should imply a smaller share either of intelligence or honesty than the holding of a doubt. Credulity has its negative side as well as its positive one, and there is as much room to slip on the one side as on the other. Clough—himself the most conscientious of poetical skeptics—admits that if on the one hand "hopes are dupes," on the other "fears may be liars," and, in short, there is no good reason, other things equal, for supposing that the man who rejects evidence may not be quite as great a fool as the man who accepts it. Creeds, no doubt, are easily adopted. We in a sense fall heir to them. They lie about us from our very infancy, and as soon as we are able to think, they are recommended to us by those whom we naturally respect. In this way it is not to be denied that we are apt to creep into them with only too little inquiry. But on the other hand, are the great majority of doubts not only equally weak at the root and held with infinitely more self-complacency, not to say conceit? Search faith for its foundations, and in too many cases we dare say they will be found loose and flimsy enough; but subject doubt to a like scrutiny—strip it of all the mystical generalities it seeks to clothe itself in, and the pensive, practical sadness it so frequently affects—and in all, but the rare exceptions, you will find that it is neither more nor less than our old friend Sir Oracle in a new disguise.—Blackwood

The following lines are taken from Sir Humphrey Davy's Salmonia: "I envy no quality of mind and intellect in others—be it genius, power, wit or fancy—but if I could choose what would be most delightful, and I believe most useful to me, I should prefer a religious belief to any other blessing; for it makes life a discipline of goodness; breathes new hopes; varnishes and throws over the decay, the destructions of existence, the most gorgeous of lights; awakens life even in death; and from corruption and decay calls up beauty and divinity; makes fortune and shame the ladder of ascent to Paradise; and far above all combination of earthly hopes, calls up the most delightful visions of palms and amaranths, of the blest, and security of everlasting joys, where the sensualist and skeptic view only gloom, decay, annihilation and despair."

The Corner-Stone Remonstrance.

The following report is from the Chicago Tribune of July 24th, the day on which the stone was laid:

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the Corner-Stone Celebration was held at noon yesterday in the office of Col. J. C. Rankin. The chair was occupied by Mr. Geo. M. How.

The subjoined communication, which caused some sensation, was read by Col. Rankin:

To Gen. John McArthur, J. C. Rankin, George M. How, N. B. Judd, H. D. Colvin, and John C. Dore, Committee, etc.:

GENTLEMEN: The petition inclosed herewith was adopted by a large and respectable consultation of citizens, met in the basement of the First Congregational Church of this city.

It is circulated for signatures to be presented to yourselves.

We are advised that petitions, from other localities, bearing near 20,000 names, have been forwarded to President Grant, against laying the corner-stone of the United States Custom-House of this city by the representatives and with the ceremonies of the Masonic order, and asking that it be laid by one of the Judges of the United States Courts, or some representative of the Government.

Relying on your patriotism and sense of propriety, we beg to add our personal solicitation to those of the petitioners. In this request we think we express the wishes of two-thirds, if not nine-tenths, of our entire population.

Hoping that you will cheerfully accord with a request so general, and, as it seems to us, so reasonable and proper, with assurance of personal confidence and regard, we remain your fellow-citizens.

MATHEW LAFLIN, JAMES M. HORTON,
TUTHILL KING, W. W. STRONG,
PHILO CARPENTER.

Mr. J. Ward Ellis thought that the document ought to be answered forthwith.

The Chair, on motion of Col. Rankin, appointed the mover and Mr. Ellis to draw up a reply to the communication, which they did in the following terms:

GENTLEMEN: Your communication, numerously signed, asking that one of the Judges of the United States Courts lay the corner-stone, has been received In reply, we would state that the points you take have been anticipated. The President of the United States had been invited to lay the stone, and the Vice-president also was communicated with. They being unable to attend, we invited Judge Drummond, who is detained at Springfield. Judge Blodgett, of the United States Court, the highest judicial officer now present, has kindly consented to serve.

The Treasury Department requested the Masonic fraternity to lay the stone, they being a body not confined to creed, party, or sect, and being accustomed to officiate at the laying of corner-stones, from the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol, at which George Washington, the father of our country, officiated as Grand Master, to the present day.

We, as citizens, decided to take a part in the ceremonies, believing that all our citizens, either as individuals or societies, could participate in them without prejudice, and we have endeavored to make the platform so broad that all persons inspired with a feeling of patriotism could unite in the ceremonies. We believe we have fully succeeded in our endeavor, and that to-morrow will see at least 100,000 strangers present in our city. And we respectfully invite your petitioners to join in the exercises and assist in entertaining our visitors. EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

To this communication the following reply appeared the next day:

To the Editor of the Chicago Tribune:

DEAR SIR: The letter prepared by J. Ward Ellis for the Executive Committee of the Corner-Stone celebration, and published in your columes yesterday, states that George Washington officiated as Grand Master at the laying of the corner-stone of our National Capitol.

W. S. Gardiner, Grand Master of Freemasons in Massachusetts, made the same statement in a speech delivered at the laying of the corner-stone of the Boston Post-Office in 1871. This statement appeared so extraordinary to a member of the National Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, that he addressed a note to Mr. Gardiner requesting to be informed on what authority that statement was made. A courteous answer stated that his authority was derived from an account of the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the Capitol at Washington given at the time, in a paper published at Georgetown. This account is published in fulll in Gen. Phelps' new book on "Secret Societies," which can be bought of the Western News Company for 50 cents. A careful examination of it shows that Washington's Masonic title was Worshipful (not Grand) Master of a subordinate lodge, and there is evidence that he did not even hold that office at the time the stone was laid.

After quoting the article from the Georgetown paper in full, Gen. Phelps writes:

"By referring to the order of procession, we see that Washington was placed between the Grand Master pro tempore (there was no full Grand Master present) and the Grand Sword Bearer. This is a post of honor, and not of Masonic office; for in the real Masonic form of procession there is no higher officer behind the Grand Master. The prefix given to Washington is Brother, and not his Masonic title. The letters and words following his name are W. M. No. 22 Virginia. These letters W. M., stand, we presume, for Worshipful Master; but this does not imply an office higher than Grand Master, and one which qualifies the incumbent to lay corner-stones Masonically. Besides, we have Washington's own statement, made five years later, in 1798, that he presided over no lodge, either of English Masonry or any other, and that he had not been inside of a lodge more than once or twice during the latter thirty years of his life! That he was not the Worshipful Master of Lodge No. 22, Virginia, is plain from the statement in the account, that, while the procession was passing through the open ranks to the corner-stone, the Grand Sword Bearer led the van, followed by the Grand Master P. T. (pro tempore), on the left, the President of the United States in the centre, and the Worshipful Master of No. 22, Virginia, on the left.

Nor is there any evidence that Washington officiated as a Mason in laying the corner-stone, but only as President of the United States."

Respectfully yours, EZRA A. COOK.

BARBARIC REMNANTS.

There is a good deal of barbarism yet extant in civilization. Our primeval savagery still clings to us and finds expression on a thousand different occasions. Such, for instance, is the case with the wearing of jewelry.

Of the same barbaric origin is the love of processions and public displays. The savage who will trade his pony or his wife for a brass button, which he hangs about his neck, is inspired by exactly the same feeling that is the modern Knight Templar, or Knight of Pythias, and the like, who decorate themselves with plumes, fancy helmets, and glittering baldricks.

If these trappings have any meaning of value, any intrinsic worth, why not have them always? Why should not our senators array themselves in scarlet, add waving plumes to their headdress, and buckle on a glittering sword? If they mean anything, why not have them without limit—in the pulpit, on the stump, the bench, the forum, everywhere? We do not, simply because in the major portion of our instincts and our feelings, we have become civilized. We recognize that they would be an absurdity on ordinary occasions; and we tolerate them on other occasions only because there is in human nature an element of savagery yet unextinct. It would be an evidence of our complete emancipation from barbaric slavery, were we to abolish them on all occasions. There is nothing to be done in these times, in the nature of civic performances, that requires the absurd ornamentation characteristic of war. A peaceful Templar or Knight of Pythias has no more right—estimating the matter from the stand-point of good taste—to wear a sword or a helmet than a washer-woman has to don a shirt of mail.—Chicago Times, June 25.

DEMAGOGUERY REBUKED.

When the Custom House ring selected the Freemasons to represent the government of the United States on a civic occasion, the ring did not intend to honor the fraternity, but to profit themselves; and in committing so manifest an impropriety, they alienated from the pageant every other organization which could boast a shadow of self-respect. That's where the failure came in. The Freemasons had a right to enter the procession on an equality with all other unions, societies, bunds, or brotherhoods; they had no right beyond this, and the Custom House ring could not morally confer any other right upon them. The ring impudently tried to do it, and they know now that they failed. How much better would it not have been if the ring had so managed this important affair of humbug that all the societies of the city might have participated in the ceremony, and the spectacle have been thus rendered worthy of the cosmopolitan and democratic city of Chicago? The ring cannot say the Times did not warn them.

In addition to the greater insult, a minor one—a mean, shabby, petty insult—was perpetrated at the last moment. Thousands of citizens, smarting under the Masonic pre-emption of the corner-stone, presented a respectful protest to the ring, requesting that one of the United States Judges be invited to lay the stone. With unequal effrontery, the ring responded that they had tried to secure President Grant and Judge Drummond; that neither of these gentlemen could come, and that the request of the protestants would nevertheless be complied with, for the stone would be laid by Judge Blodgett. The protestants separated satisfied, unaware of the fact that they had been subjected to the smallest and meanest lie that ever emanated from politicians' mouths. They were led to understand that President Grant and Judges Drummond

Reform News.

—The General Agent has arranged to return to Pennsylvania in August. He is now speaking in Medina county, Ohio.

—Bro. L. N. Stratton, of the Wesleyan, held a series of meetings at Howell, Mich., during the last week in June. He spent last week at Wheaton, at the College Commencement and is now in Bureau county; address, Princeton, Ill. We hope friends in that direction will not fail of securing him for a series of lectures.

—A good many of our workers will see their own experience in Bro. Nessell's interesting letter.

—And all will be rejoiced at the blessings attending Bro. Kiggins work in Iowa. Nothing but the power of God could bring about such results.

—Very interesting letters from Alwood, Loggan, Kelly and others are waiting. Expect them soon.

Notice from the General Agent.

To the Friends of the Anti-secrecy Reform in Pennsylvania:—After holding meetings at several points in Crawford county, I have arranged to return and resume the work after haying is over, (about Aug. 10th). In prosecuting the work of a thorough canvass and organization of this county, I have conditionally secured the aid of Rev. J. R. Baird whose ability is established by the victories which he has already achieved in many sharp encounters with the foe. I shall be glad to confer with friends in different parts of Pennsylvania with reference to lectures in the State. I find everywhere a strong opposition to the "secret ring power" which needs to be brought out and organized for a united and effective effort to rescue this government and the church from the hands of their covert enemies. Let me hear from those interested at the Cynosure office.

J. P. Stoddard, Genl. Agent.

Notice from the N. Y. State Association.

Particular attention is hereby called to the fact that Elder J. L. Barlow, State Agent and General Lecturer of "The New York State Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies" is now settled in the city of Syracuse, and is ready to answer calls for lectures from any part of the State.

Believing that the time has come for an energetic forward movement against Freemasonry and its kindred organizations—and that the providence of God points the way, the Association has called Mr. Barlow into the field as their agent, believing him fitted both to interest and instruct those who have not hitherto given this subject the attention which its importance demands.

The Executive Committee trusts that the friends of our cause in all parts of the State, pastors of churches and all others will of this matter, and send in their calls for lecturers at once, and we suggest that the friends in the different localities or counties consult together and furnish a list of appointments running through several towns by which means the expenses may be greatly lightened.

ORGANIZATIONS

of counties and towns is greatly needed. The enemy is thoroughly organized, and if we would meet him on equal terms we must be also. Those county associations already in existence will confer a favor by communicating to us through Rev. A. F. Dempsey, Seneca Falls, N. Y., as to their present condition, time of next meeting, and any other matters of interest. We trust the officers and members of these bodies will see the importance of this and respond promptly to this appeal. The State Agent will hold himself in readiness to attend all such meetings with words and deeds of help and cheer when informed of time and place in season. The sooner this information is in hand, then, the better.

Will J. B. Nessel, of Chataugua; D. B. Douglass of Niagara; H. Gregory, or some other brother of Ontario; L. N. Stratton, of Onondaga, and J. M. Monroe of Chenango, and friends from other county associations, whose names we cannot recall, consider themselves personally responsible for this work?

The committee hope to be able to meet all calls for lecturers. Should Mr. Barlow be unable to fill them all, Zebulon Weaver, Esq., who also holds the same relation to the Association, will be in readiness to respond as will also other competent brethren well known to the Association and its friends.

Our cause is one of vast importance, or it is not. Let the friends of Christianity and republican government inform themselves and then judge. If it is, then let us be up and doing; for while we are sleeping the powers of secrecy are everywhere vigilant, aggressive and increasing in strength.

Will the Methodist Free Press, the Free Methodist, Religious Telescope, United Presbyterian, and other papers friendly to our cause, circulating in this State, either publish the above, or give it prominent mention in their columns.

Let calls for lectures be directed to Rev. A. Crooks, Chairman of Ex. Committee; Rev. L. N. Stratton, Sec'y, at Am. Wesleyan office, Syracuse, or to J. L. Barlow, 48 Chestnut St. Syracuse, N. Y.

By order of Ex. Com. of N. Y. S. C. A. O. S. S. Syracuse, July 3, 1874.

From Green County, Iowa—Glorious News from Bro. Kiggins' Lectures.

Jefferson, Iowa, June 27, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

The citizens of this place have been highly favored with lectures from Rev. J. T. Kiggins which told terribly on the fraternity in this section of the country. They are trying hard to counteract the influence on the minds of the people by false reports of the meeting; have even filled up quite a space in the county paper with lies concerning the lecturer and others, in order to falsely impress the minds of those who did not hear the lectures, but I am satisfied the blow will fall on their own heads. All who heard Bro. Kiggins will of course know the reports made by the lodge are false and only false,

It had been the brag of the brotherhood of the widow's son that it would not do for the "Antis" to come here to lecture, and the impression had been made on the minds of many that it would not be safe for any man to get up in this place and tell the whole truth about the wicked system of Freemasonry. But all at once the news was sounded forth, Behold the man cometh who is not afraid to meet this Goliath. Well, after being refused the use of the Court-house (to which we "Antis" have as much right as the grange or Masons) we finally got permission to use the Congregational church, and Mason preachers had the unpleasant task of announcing on Sabbath that Rev. J. T. Kiggins would address the people of the vicinity on Wednesday eve, the 17th of June; subject, Secret Societies. The people looked amazed and the faces of Masons were seen to turn red.

The evening of the 17th drew nigh, but Bro. Kiggins was not here. The friends of reform were disappointed but not discouraged, for we knew that God was on our side. Of course the "widow's son" rejoiced but the rejoicing was short lived. Thursday evening's train brought Bro. Kiggins to the place, and it was announced that on Friday evening he would commence a series of lectures on the subject of secret societies.

Friday evening came, things looked rather gloomy, and to assure the people of no disappointment, a boy was sent through the streets ringing a bell, announcing the lecture. Quite a congregation soon gathered with a number of Masons and Odd-fellows. Bro. K. handled his subject with such convincing arguments that the people were highly edified, and the Masons were perplexed. At the close Bro. K. announced that next evening his subject would be, "How a man was made a Mason," and very cordially invited the Masons to be on hand as he wanted to take their testimony as to the truth of the statements he should make. He wanted to put them all on the witness stand and make them testify; and they were puzzled to know how he could do it.

Saturday evening came and with it a large congregation. A good many Masons were present and Bro. K. after talking awhile, opened the lodge and went through with the first degree, showing the people how a man was made to take the first step in the "ancient and honorable institution." But after the lecture was over I doubt if by many it was thought to be so very honorable and exalting, and I am sure that the Masons present could not help feeling ashamed of their doings and the cut-throat penalty. When Bro. K. gave them a chance to rise and testify if what he had said was not true, there was nothing but silence, thereby testifying that it was correct; and the people took it for granted that it was correct. All were highly pleased except the Masons and some who courted their friendship. On Sabbath the Masonic preachers had the unpalatable duty of announcing that Bro. Kiggins would preach at three o'clock in the afternoon on the Religion of Freemasonry, from Eph. v. 11, 12. The discourse was heard eagerly by a large congregation for they knew it was the truth. Two Methodist preachers were present. One of them, a Mason, was much affected, and seemed to be drinking in the truth while the man of God poured it out to them by the measure full; God sustaining the word by the Holy Spirit, carrying it to the hearts of all. He lectured again on Sunday evening to a house full of attentive hearers.

Arrangements had been made to close up the lectures on Monday evening at Scranton Station, some miles west; but the friends of reform thought they must have one more lecture in Jefferson. So Bro. K. went to Scranton, gave the nest of lodge vipers an awful stirring up; returned to Jefferson on Tuesday, and the friends having talked the matter over, concluded to organize themselves into an anti-secret and reform association, and according to previous announcement the friends of reform met at the church Tuesday evening at eight o'clock and proceeded to business by electing a chairman and secretary. A constitution had been prepared and a number of names subscribed to it; it was read and adopted as a whole by a unanimous vote, and quite a number gave in their names as members. Permission was now given to any one to speak who wished; whereupon Rev. S. Ranks, M. E. preacher got up before the audience and said he had been a Mason for sixteen years, but wished now to newly consecrate himself to God and renounce Masonry now and forever. He told how he was persuaded to join by brethren in the ministry, but now in order to walk in the light of God he must declare himself free from its obligations as they did conflict with his religion if kept. He said that they taught him in the lodge to travel east to get light, but he had found it by traveling west and he proposed to travel still farther west. He testified that Bro. K. had told the truth concerning Masonry as he had found it by experience, so far as Master Mason's degree.

This renunciation has thrown consternation and bewilderment into the ranks of the brotherhood, and helped to fix the truth into the minds of the people as to the anti-Christian, anti-republican, Christ-rejecting, and soul-damning influence of the lodge.

We now proceeded to elect officers for the permanent organization as follows: Judge Danl. Mills, President; Rev. L. H. Buffkin and N. M. Williams, Vice-presidents; G. W. Hall, Secretary; Rev. S. Ranks, Corresponding Secretary; J. Pilbeam, Treasurer. After which we listened again to the truth from Bro. K. on the third degree of Masonry, plainly showing that the lodge was opposed to the laws of God and to the laws of the country.

Bro. K. will never be forgotten by this people. May the blessings of God go with him as he labors in the vineyard, pulling up the weeds that are choking out the corn.

Our county paper here is in the hands of Masons and we can't get a hearing through it. But its columns are open for all the lies and abuse they wish to heap upon us. May God forgive them; they know not what they do. Perhaps they have forgotten that all liars are to have their part in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone; but blessed are they that overcome and receive not the mark of the beast or his image. We ask the prayers of all true Christians for the cause of truth in Green county, Iowa.

G. W. HALL, Secretary.

Meeting in Fulton County, Ohio.

DELTA, O.

Dear Cynosure:—The anti-secret association of this county held on Tuesday, the sixth of June, its first annual meeting, and we had a grand time. Bro. Givens, of Indiana, was with as and also Bro. Caldwell, of Ohio. The meeting lasted until the evening of the tenth. Bro. Givens gave us four excellent lectures, in which among other things he gave us an illustration of the initiation of a candidate into the first three degrees of modern and dishonorable Freemasonry; delivered in Bro. Givens impressive and eloquent style, they made them doubly interesting to those who heard him. The fraternity seemed at first to treat the whole matter with contempt; then they began to wonder what we were doing; then they came out to see, but they came at a bad time for them, for they came on the evening that Bro. Givins killed and resurrected Hiram Abiff, and they looked troubled for they did not like to have their manly sports of the lodge exhibited to an intelligent audience. But they kept their jewel admirably, perhaps some of them remembered replying to Bro. Caldwell a few months before.

Taking everything into the account I think that our meeting was a grand affair, though not so fully attended as it ought to have been.

The grange is very quiet here at present. One man got a bite and left the other day. He had some wheat to sell and of course the grange must sell it for him. They promised to give him what they got for it at the point to which they shipped it. He was elated with his prospect of gain. His wheat was sold, he got his money, and went to town no doubt to brag; but found upon inquiring, to his chagrin, that he had been swindled out of just twenty-three cents on the bushel.

From Vermont.

WILLIAMSTOWN, VT., June 27th, 1874.

DEAR BRO. K.—I would say through the Cynosure that I left Syracuse after the Convention and came straight to Vermont. After resting a few days started for the quarterly meeting held at Welltown, stopping on the way with Bro. Perham in Brookfield, and found him a faithful worker in our cause, distributing books and getting subscribers for the Cynosure. I tried to get a resolution before the conference; but was told there was no room for it, there was so much business. So it failed. After the meeting was over I gave out notice that I would examine an article written against a lecture I delivered last September in this place. The people came together and gave a candid hearing. One Mason was very cross and intimated that all I said was not true. The lodges here are small, and there are many old Anti-masons. But they appear to be entirely asleep to the influence of the lodge. They remember the days of Morgan, and declare they do not know what they will do. They see their sons going into the lodge and disappear. They see the influence Masons have on their courts. Some of them shut their eyes rather than commence a warfare against the lodge. I will deliver lectures if the way is opened. My address is W. Randolph, Vt.

Colporteur Work in New York—Interesting Report from Bro. Nessell.

ELLINGTON, N. Y., June 26, '74.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I herewith transmit my report of proceedings during my abscence from home, making up three weeks lacking two days. My first business was to attend our county anniversary on the first day of June. This our fifth anniversary, was well attended, and the form of the Fourth was present to bless his "PECULIAR PEOPLE WHO ARE ZEALOUS OF GOOD WORKS" and are heartily opposed to every evil work, and such is the kind he delights to bless. The order of the day—first, singing; 2d, prayer; 4th, singing; 5th, a prayer meeting, and changed into a conference meeting, and was followed by a business one, electing officers, etc., for the ensuing year. Speeches were made by a young seceding Mason, and two older ones.

But the most effective speaking was done by John Levington, of Michigan, who addressed the convention both afternoon and evening, and the address of the president of our society, Rev. S. L. Mead, Forestville, N. Y.

While attending the National Convention, as one of three delegates from our county society, I was invited by our good old friend, Hiram Preston, of the town of Linklaein, Chenango Co., to lecture in the meeting house in Burdick settlement. I agreed to go. The time set was Tuesday, of the next week, afternoon and evening.

Directly on my way thither, I reached De Ruyter on Saturday in time to attend worship with our much esteemed friend and brother Stillman, of Sabbatarian persuasion, with whom I was agreeably entertained during my stay in this business town.

These people have the largest meeting house, and much the largest membership of any other denomination in town. We secured their house to speak in Sunday evening. Notice was accordingly given out by the ministers in the Methodist and the regular Baptist church, and everything looked favorable for a good turnout. But that terrible storm that unroofed houses and blew down steeples, and caused death and destruction in many places, prevented all but a few coming to hear what we had to say.

Monday morning we started out for a peddling trip, from house to house, to sell books we had procured of E. A. Cook & Co. We found this a good means of making new acquaintances. The first man I met in the street was a return delegate from that great Mason splurge, lately held in New York city, and I told him I would like to sell him "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. William Morgan. He hardly answered me, and looked as if he would rather hear any other name mentioned, than that of Morgan. On this same street I saw two men, and offered to sell them some Anti-masonic literature. One was a Mason and the other an Odd-fellow. The latter said I had come to a poor place to sell such books, when the former began calling me an old perjured villain, and prefixing those epithets with awful profanity. I then asked him how he came to know me—having never seen me before. He said in reply, "Do you suppose you can go through the country on the business you are engaged, without being known in nearly all the lodges in this State?" I asked him what I had done to make me a perjured villain. This question he did not see fit to answer, but immediately withdrew from the field, and left me and the Odd-fellow to finish out the interview, which was soon done; he of course taking sides with the reptile in human shape who had just left. My next place to make sale was at a house on the other side of the way, where lived a friend Quaker family. I had their sympathy, but no funds to purchase books; they would gladly do so to help the good cause along. This inspired me with fresh courage to go on in this good work. This new courage was destined, however, to undergo a trial. I entered a good looking house, where I was met by a middle aged woman, rather tall, somewhat good looking, and of queenly bearing. I told her what kind of books I had to sell, and would like if she would purchase some. She said that was out of the question, as she was a Mason, and her husband was also. Then said I, "you have the Star degree, which you are entitled to, if your husband is a Master Mason; but that is no part of the Masonry your husband has got, which he is bound by oath to conceal from you, while at the same time he knows all abouty our little Star degree. This is all unfair between man and wife. Now I offer you the real Morgan book for 25 cts, having in it the first, second and third degrees, that will make you equal with him in the sublime mysteries; and by securing this boon to all women Morgan sacrificed his own life. He was murdered by Masons. She said, "Good, they served him right."

In holding so many combats with Mr. and Mrs. Masons, I did not get over much ground, but soon got on to another street where I did much better, and sold some four or five books and talked Anti-masonry without let or hindrance. About 4 o'clock P. M., I started for my next appointment some three miles away. We did not get through till the next morning, and when we got within a half mile or so of our friend Preston's, we were shocked with the sad tidings of the sudden death of his wife on the day before. This deprived this family and their connections of the privilege of attending the convention. But it was a decided success notwithstanding, especially the evening session.

We learned when we returned to De Ruyter, that Miss Thompson had been a faithful worker in the cause, and although as "deaf as an adder," she has distributed tracts, bought and lent and sold books, and procured subscribers to the Cynosure. Her remark that a Freemason lodge was a good school to learn how to murder, was a very correct one, and I thought it a little in advance of some of our lectures. I cannot help noting the difference between her and that other woman who had taken so wide a leap towards total depravity, as to uphold and sustain murder!

I left De Ruyter on Thursday for Plymouth, to visit some of our old

Masonry 'Tween Decks.

YORK, Pa., May 29, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

In a former letter I told you how the gunner's mate mixed things when he gave the watches their arms at night. But most of the time, while the "Wissahikon" was in Stono Inlet and Stono River, only a few miles from Charleston, the men had no arms or anything to fight with, day or night. The sentinels most of the time had no arms or ammunition. At times they had a musket, but no cartridges or caps. They would have preferred a broom-stick, as it would have been lighter.

The crew had no practice in the use of the small arms, and a well-drilled crew of half their number would have captured the vessel in five minutes, as many of the arms were breech-loaders, and the men did not know how to use them. All the time I was on the vessel, there never was a single drill in the use of any of the small arms.

Some of the crew were entitled to receive a Sharp's rifle, horse-pistol, cutlass and dagger, while the whole powder division (about ten men) had only a pike, which is about eight feet long, with a spear on the end. No man could defend himself with it after the enemy boarded his vessel.

The crew of this vessel had no confidence in their officers. I believe the rebels could have captured us without a fight at any time. Several of the men asked me if I would resist the rebels if they tried to board our vessel, remarking at the same time that they would not know what to do in such a case. I told them that I would do just what the captain ordered. But the fect is, we all felt that our vessel was not to harm the rebels, and we could not have even defended ourselves very energetically, as we all believed we were at the mercy of the enemy or our officers.

It was generally believed by the crew that blockade-runners passed in and out, on dark nights, without any attempt on the part of our officers to capture them. Some of the men claimed to have seen them while on guard. As our own vessels carried no lights at night, our sentinels may have mistaken them for blockade runners. But still there was sufficient cause for suspicion that all was not right; and rebel gold perhaps was a great temptation. Rebels in citizen's dress several times held interviews with our captain.

The gunboat "Waterwitch" was captured by the rebels without a fight. And if the whole of our squadron was not managed according to the square and compass, it is very evident to me that not a few of the vessels were.

Yours for the truth,

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

Our Platform—Government and Religion.

PITTSFORD, N. Y., June 26th, 1874.

In reference to the connection of government and religion; reference to acknowledging God and the Christian religion in our Constitution, I hold and have long held the following views:

Government should ever acknowledge its dependence on the great and infinite, but should not assume the prerogative of God in enforcing religious belief; because government has no power to look into the heart, or know the virtue or guilt of the heart.

1. Human government only deals with outward acts, and its province is especially the temporal welfare and happiness of men.

2. Government may and should suppress outward acts of vice and immorality, because they injure the temporal welfare are happiness of others, and disturb the peace of society as theft, Sabbath-breaking, profanity, sale of intoxicating drinks (and I think we should have a plank in our platform in favor of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating drinks, except for medicinal and mechanical purposes), and tobacco.

3. Government should also acknowledge the temporal and moral benefits of religious and charitable institutions in the welfare and happiness of society, in relieving all directly religious and charitable and educational institutions, from the burden of taxation. The temporal benefits of these institutions to a nation, tenfold repay society for relieving them from the burden of taxation.

Polygamy should be forbidden because it injures the moral welfare of individuals and of community and is a crime against the temporal welfare of society; depriving many of their just rights and bringing with it many evils.

I think we should be a Christian nation and yet allow to all men the free exercise of their religious convictions where it does not lead men to commit crimes against society, or against the temporal welfare of others. We should allow pagans and Mohammedans in their conscientious belief. But if a person's religious belief should lead them to burn widows on the funeral pile of the husband, or to throw infants to crocodiles, governments should prevent it and punish the perpetrator. Government then should acknowledge its dependence on God, but should not enforce religious convictions or belief, but should repress external acts of crime which disturb the peace and injure the temporal happiness of individuals or of community.

I think this is God's truth. If the blessings of good government are not from God, then we should not acknowledge him. But if these blessings are from God we should acknowledge him in all our ways, and he will direct our steps. If the virtue, honesty, truth, happiness and prosperity of a people are the effects of religion, we should as a people and nation acknowledge it. National prosperity comes from God. There are some who think that if we acknowledge God as a nation or government we open the way for religious persecution; that as years ago Baptists were fined and whipped and imprisoned in New England and Virginia for believing and preaching the Gospel contrary to law, so now, if we acknowledge God in our Constitution they may be whipped and imprisoned again. But Baptists never denied their dependence on God or Christ as their Saviour. It was because they followed so closely to Christ that they were persecuted and rejected traditions. There is a wide difference between a nation's acknowledging their dependence and obligations to God and persecuting Baptist or even persecuting Mohammedans or pagans. A nation may honor and and acknowledge and give liberty of conscience, or "soul liberty" as Roger Williams calls it. Hoping to hear from others upon this subject, I remain yours in Christ,

SIDNEY WILDER.

OUR MAIL.

Pres. Edward H. Magill, of Swarthmore College, (see notice of Catalogue) writes:

"Please find enclosed amount of bill for twenty-five copies of College Secret Socities. I have read the work with great pleasure.

I was myself in Yale and afterwards in Brown University, a secret society man; but I am well convinced that it would be a blessing to the young men in colleges if such organizations were given up entirely. There is some good in them; but just enough to make them all the more dangerous, for the real good is a cloak for the evil. All the good obtained, can be obtained in a better way without them. . .

I think that I informed you that in this College no secret societies are allowed. They are not in accordance with the principles of the Society of Friends; under whose care this institution was established."

Wm. Gray, Albia, Iowa, writes that he thinks that quite a club for the Cynosure can be got at Albia. He says:

"We will do our best."

F. M. Curtice, Greeley, Col., writes:

"The cause is dear to me because it is the cause of Christ. I would try for subscribers if I had health. . . I sew them (the Cynosures) into monthly volumes and lend them to my neighbors. A Freemason is reading the April numbers."

Elizabeth Coleman, Seneca, Kansas, writes:

"I have a book of 140 pages written by Solomon Southwick a solemn warning against Freemasonry, addressed to the young men of the United States, would like to have it republished but dare no send it to you for fear it would be lost as I think it is the only one left unburnt.

Perhaps you can send one of your good men out here next fall to lecture to the people in this dark corner of Kansas."

Pres. H. Gilliland, Galesville, Wis., writes of the new book on College Secret Societies:

"I am pleased with its pointed, truthful utterances. If possible, make it even sharper. Steel print it."

T. R. Shiner, Osterville, Mo., writes:

"Eighteen or twenty years ago Gov. Brownlow, of Tennesee, burned the Religious Telescope for its anti-slavery spirit, but what do we see? Four millions of Southern cattle turned to American citizens and allowed to be educated, and best of all, allowed to vote.

Slavery was a hard foe to conquer. We are now fighting her twin sister, and the worst of it is, she does all of her work in the dark. But let us not be discouraged, if the Lord is for us who can be against us?"

L. A. Wickey, Mt. Top, Pa., writes:

"The anti-secret cause is gaining strength in this county. We preach, pray and work for it. Some of our fellow ministers think we do wrong, but the Lord strengthens us for the work."

R. M. Webb, Watkins, Iowa, writes:

"May God hasten on the day when all that pretend to be Anti-masons will be willing to show their colors."

E. Gould, Pillar Point, N. Y., writes:

I am going to do all I can in circulating your paper."

Rev. J. L. Barlow has just moved to Syracuse, N. Y. He writes from that city as follows:

"Arrived here last night with wife—so tired. Am off to-morrow for Broome county to start the fight anew. Am told the Masons in that section have written me not to come. If they wish to make up the issue as to free speech or no free speech, I am as good a subject to draw their fire as any one perhaps."

Wm. Varey, Marengo, Ill., writes:

"I thought I could not take this paper for another year, but I find we do not like to do without it. God bless the Association in their noble work, is the language of my heart."

John Adair, Indiana, Pa., writes:

"I like the paper very well and hope you will succeed in putting down these secret societies. I have opposed them for more than forty years. I am now advanced in age and not able to do much; but I will endeavor to send you some new subscribers."

John Splitstone, Linesville, Pa., writes:

"I have been an anti-slavery man for more than forty years, and also an Anti-mason.

I cannot vote for a Mason while the oaths remain as they now are. I cannot see how a man can swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, between two neighbors when one is a Freemason and the other an Anti-mason, and yet swear to espouse his brother Mason's cause so far as to extricate him (if in his power) whether right or wrong."

Ira B. Allen, Three Rivers, Michigan, writes:

"No compromise with sin and no quarters to the devil."

A. Oldfield, Bay City, Mich., writes:

"I intend to do what I can to scatter Anti-masonic literature and get subscribers for the Cynosure. In this business I feel the Divine approbation; and by this I judge it to be my duty to go ahead. I still continue, at every suitable opportunity, to testify against the vile craft. . .

I am living here where secret society men swarm as did the flies of Egypt; yet I do not fear them. I am, however, aware that they can do me much harm.

I have found, in this city, a Methodist minister whose name is Springstein who has been a Mason of three degrees, and he boldly renounces it. I think he will soon make a good yokefellow with J. Levington."

We hope he will be owned of God in accomplishing much for light and truth.

Rev. A. W. Curtis, Coldwater, Michigan, writes:

"As the light increases, hope brightens, and the lovers of light have great reason to expect ultimate success and triumph in the world's illumination. Go on, and prosper in the glorious work to which I trust God has called you, and be assured you will reap in due time, if you faint not.

I am greatly pleased with the changes through which the Cynosure has passed in its enlargement, and its improvements otherwise; and I trust its many friends will not suffer it to decline for want of pecuniay aid, or from lack of interest in the righteous cause which it so nobly, ably, and so fearlessly advocates. In the name of the Lord, I say again, emphatically, Go on and prosper."

Henry Kumler, Lewisburg, O., writes:

"I am still awake, although old, to do what little I can against the workings of the darkness of this world. The grangers are roping many into the mysterics of heathenism here.

John Stuart, Stemton, Pa., writes:

"I shall do all I can for the advancement of the cause."

J. N. Cooper, Timber Creek, Ia., writes:

"We want a good lecturer. We have some Masons, a great many grangers. There are many that do not belong to secret societies. The grange is going down."

Rev. W. H. Chandler, Haldane, Ill., writes:

"I am very much pleased with the Cynosure in its present form. It has a welcome place on my table; a warm place in my heart, and an interest in my prayers. I will do what I can for its circulation."

Thos. Moore, Rocky Fork. O., writes:

"I wish my paper to continue as long as I live. . . I have never taken a paper that I was better pleased with."

"I am now almost seventy-eight years old, stout and hearty, but troubled with the rheumatism so much that I have for more that twenty years had to walk with two canes, and I feel thankful to my Maker that I can get along that way.

I believe all secret oath-bound combinations are a curse to Christianity and if not stopped will prove its overthrow. It is a worse infidelity than Tom Painism. . . It is as impossible for Christianity and Masonry to dwell together as for Christ and Belial to dwell together."

Curtis Cogswell, Deer Lick, O., writes:

"I am doing all I can for the cause against secretism in circulating your tracts, and books, and papers, and some talk besides; the cause lies very near my heart. I shall do all I can while I live, in money and labor, to destroy Masonry. I got seventy names that I sent to Syracuse against corner-stone laying by the Masons. I shall send you some more money before long, and cheer you up in your labor to do good, and try to destroy the beast. I am about seventy years old, and about ready to die, but my heart is in the cause. I will fight Masonry while I live with you, God being my helper."

Rev. A. Hard, Painted Post, N. Y., writes:

"Be full of courage."

E. B. Parvin, Cuba, Ill., writes:

"I am raising a cloud with some small thunder. Oh! for more lightning."

J. P. Bartlett, Blackberry, Ill., writes:

"You may consider me a life subscriber. I have been an Anti-mason more than forty years. I voted for Wm. Wirt for President in 1836."

J. W. Thompson, Engleman's Mill, Mo., writes:

"In my humble estimation its (Cynosure's) value is altogether beyond value, at the present time. I take it not for my own especial good, but for the good of others. I shall try and increase its circulation."

JULY 19, 1874.—THE LEPER HEALED.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK i. 38-45. Commit 40-45; Primary Verse 41.

38 And he said unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there also: for therefore came I forth.

39 And he preached in their synagogues throughout all Galilee, and cast out devils.

40 And there came a leper to him, beseeching him, and kneeling down to him, and saying unto him, If thou wilt thou canst make me clean.

41 And Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou clean.

42 And as soon as he had spoken, immediately the leprosy departed from him, and he was cleansed.

43 And he straitly charged him, and forwith sent him away;

44 And he saith unto him, See thou say nothing to any man: but go thy way, shew thyself to the priest, and offer for thy cleansing those things which Moses commanded, for a testimony unto them.

45 But he went out, and began to publish it much, and to blaze about the matter abroad, insomuch that Jesus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in desert places: and they came to him from every quarter.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"Lord, if toou wilt, thou canst make me clean."—MATT. viii. 2.

TOPICAL ANALYSIS.

The Compassion of Jesus, " 40, 41.
The Work of Jesus, " 42-44
The Witness for Jesus, verse 45.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

In our last lesson we studied the authority of Jesus. What was the result of his miracle in casting out the demon? (verse 28.) Who was healed? (verses 30, 31). Who else? (verse 32.) What happened in verses 33, 34? Where did Jesus go to pray? (verse 35.) Our present lesson tells of his love. The Golden Text and Principal Topic may be called a prayer and an answer.

What is the first topic? Where did he preach? (verses 14, 38, 39.) Think of his sermon at the well, (John iv.) The sermon in Simon's house, (Luke xiv.) The one from the cross. The sermon on the mount, (Matt. v. vii.) How do you think Jesus preached. Does he preach now? Are you one of his hearers?

What is the second topic? Who came to Jesus? Were lepers permitted to approach persons? (Lev. xiii.) What lepers are mentioned in the home readings? Why, do you suppose, this leper dared to approach Jesus? What four things are said of his coming? (verse 40.) What was it he doubted? What did Jesus do? (verse 41.) Why do you think he touched him? What did Jesus say? How long did Jesus keep him waiting?

What is the third topic? How long was it after the Lord spoke, before the man was healed? (verse 42.) Do you think he was healed a little at a time, or all at once? Can Jesus heal now with his word? Can he heal sinners as easily as he healed the leper? Are you a sinner? Will he heal you? What did Jesus tell him? (verses 43, 44.) He did this because the law required it, and the man dared not go home until he had the testimony of the priest.

What is the fourth topic? Did he testify for the Lord? (verse 45.) Would he have given better testimony to have done as Jesus said? The highest testimony is obedience.

LESSONS. Jesus the great preacher. His wonderful sermons. Jesus the compassionate Saviour, heals in the kindest manner; has a tender sympathy with the suffering. The mighty word of Jesus. The power in the word. His blessed work, to heal the leprosy of sin. Jesus' best witnesses—those who obey him.

A Possible Excess.

Hearth and Home points out a danger that is worth considering. Of this matter it may be said, "These ought ye to have done, and not have left the other undone."

Sabbath-school work has become a profession, and the professional Sabbath-school man must have something to give for his money. Hence there is a tendency to depart from the simplicity and spiritual character of the institution, to introduce novelties, and to overload with appliances. Shallow nominalists want to change the name to "Blue-school," and to make capital out of the reverence for the Scriptures by the advocacy of what is called "thorough" teaching, but which is indeed nothing more nor less than a substitution of knowledge for those spiritual results which only are worthy of being sought. The fact that the river Jordan is a certain number of miles in length is of no more consequence in itself than that of the Rhine or the Tombigbee are so many miles in length; and the fact that Cain killed his brother and that Hezekiah was king of Israel have, in themselves, no more to do with the religious life of a child than any facts in Rollin's Ancient History. When Sabbath-school men lose sight of the fact that the real analogy of the Sabbath-school is not with the common school but with the church, that the Scriptures are not to be taught like geography, and that the culture of the religious and moral nature of the child through the Scriptures and the teacher's personal influence is the real objective point, we shall no longer be able to point with approval to the great results achieved. Not by a dead uniformity of lesson and a ponderous "curriculum" of study, but by the quick and living sympathy of teachers who are themselves living epistles, will the Sabbath-school achieve its highest result. As a home paper, interested in all that makes for the welfare of childhood, we hope to see the Sabbath-school reach its highest effectiveness in the education of children.

"DIBBLE IT IN."—Teachers, as well as preachers, may apply to themselves these words of an eminent clergyman:

Do not sow the Word broadcast, but as the Scotch would say, "dibble it in!" Make a hole in the ground with your sharpened stick, push the seed into the earth with your heel. Let every sentence tell. Shoot with an aim. Take your arrow from the quiver, put it on the bow with your eye on the soul and on the throne, then let it go home. Do not pull it out. Let it be a distinct and separate impression. Do not talk to human beings who are asleep. I have no faith in somnambulism in the church. Let every eye be engaged as though he would look you through. Give the children something worth receiving, and send the truth home.

Home and Health Hints.

Borrowed Out.

Some of our readers will appreciate the following story:

A family in a certain neighborhood were great borrowers, but seldom, if ever, returning the exact amount borrowed. An old Quaker lady, who lived near, had endured these invasions for a long time patiently, but at length hit upon a very philosophical mode of eventually putting a stop to the nuisance. Keeping her own counsel, the next time her good man went to town he had a separate and express order to purchase a pound of the best tea, and also a new canister to put it in. As he knew she already had plenty of tea, and also a canister, he was puzzled to determine what the old lady wanted of more tea and a new canister, but his questioning and reasonings elicited nothing more than a repetition of the order.

"Jim, did I not tell thee to get me a pound of the best tea and a new canister? Now go along, and do as I bid thee."

And go along he did, and when he came home at night, the tea and new canister were his companions. The old lady took them from him with an amused expression on her usually placid features, and depositing the tea in the canister, set it on the shelf for special use. It had not long to wait, for the borrowing neighbor had frequent use for the aromatic herb. The good old lady loaned generously, emptying back in the canister any remittance of borrowed teas which the neighbor's conscience inclined her to make. Time went on, and after something less than the one hundredth time of borrowing, the neighbor again appeared for "just another drawing of tea," when the oft-visited tea canister was brought out, and found to be empty, and the good old lady and obliging neighbor was just one pound of tea poorer than when she bought the new canister, which now only remained to tell the story. Then she made a little characteristic speech, perhaps the first in her life. She said: "Thou seest that empty canister. I filled it for thee with a pound of my best tea, and I have lent it all to thee in driblets, and put into it all thou hast sent me in return, and none but thyself hath taken therefrom or added unto it, and now thou seest it empty; therefore I will say to thee, thou hast borrowed thyself out, and I can lend thee no more."

MULTITUDES of women lose health, and even life, every year by busying themselves until warm and weary, and then throwing themsleves on a bed or sofa without covering, or in a room without a fire, or by removing their outer garments after a long walk, and changing their dress while in a state of perspiration. If you have to walk and ride both, do the riding first, and on returning, go to a warm room, and keep on all your wraps until your forehead is dry.

I was much struck lately with the wonderfully beautiful effect produced by simply placing a handful of heads of wheat in a vase of water. Each grain sent out a bright green leaflet, and continued to replenish the fading ones for weeks together. Some have doubtless seen this pretty table ornament, but to me it was new, and perhaps would be so to many others.

Farm and Garden.

Tight Barns.

"W. B. J.," of Hardwick, Massachusetts, who has kept cows for nearly thirty years, and who has tried both open and tight barns, writes to the Boston Cultivator that he finds the latter far preferable in our cold climate, but he would have the barn so constructed that it can be thoroughly ventilated at pleasure. He says: I feed good hay, and regularly; keep my cows in the barn most of the time in cold weather, water twice a day in the barn; keep them well bedded, clean out the stable twice a day, and sometimes three. I find farmers, not a few in this town, who say that their cows will not drink but once a day; I say to such, I guess you do not give them a chance; try a tight barn, and one that is warm. Farmers, when you begin to pinch your cows in drink, you bring leanness upon them, if not in your purses; you might as well pinch in feed as in drink, for either or both will cause that leanness of which farmers so much complain in these days.

"I think if farmers will try tight barns, with good hay, with water twice a day, and clean stables, with good warm bedding, that two-thirds of the feed used in an open barn will keep the cows in a much better condition. I can direct you to a farmer in town who keeps his cows, some twelve or sixteen, in the barn all winter, with plenty of water in the stable, and he told me that he did not feed two-thirds as much as when they were turned out to shiver in the cold, as was formerly done; and they were in much better condition than when left out in the cold."

The Law of the Road.

The great leading rule is, that no one has the right to be in the middle of the road, except when no other person is present to claim his right to the use of one-half the high-way; which claim he has precisely the same right to assert, when traveling in the same direction. that he has when he meets another. This is the law of every State in the Union, and, so far as we are informed, of every civilized country; and all persons violating it are liable for all damages resulting from their conduct

When teams meet, the American law is that each, turning to the right, shall give half the road. The custom and the law of England requires teams to turn out to the left—as expressed in an old doggerel:

The rule of the road is a paradox quite,
In riding or driving along,
If you keep to the left, you are sure to go right;
If you keep to the right, you are wrong.

In passing, the party in front is required to turn to the left, so as to allow the person in the rear who is traveling at a more rapid rate to pass by on his right.

Where teams approach at right angles, or intersecting roads, it is the duty of the party who, by turning to the right, would pass to the rear of the other team, to pull up and allow the other to pass.

A person with a light vehicle meeting or desiring to pass a heavy laden team, especially if the latter is going up a hill, will generally turn out without requiring the man with the loaded wagon to give half the road; but the law imposes no such obligation in any case, and under all circumstances requires each party to give half the road, unless by accident or some obstruction it is found impossible to do so.

If a party happens to be in the wrong place on the road or street, a party coming in collision with him is not entitled to damages, if, by the use of ordinary and reasonable diligence, he could have avoided it.—National Live Stock Journal.

A rawhide halter strap an inch wide, will hold a horse better and last longer than an inch rope. It is stronger than hoopiron and more durable, and can be used to hoop dry casks and boxes, and for hinges. Try it on a broken thill, or any wood work that has been split. Put on wet and nail fast. Thin skins make the best to use in its natural state. Eor other purposes it may be dressed.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, July 9, 1874.

National Christian Association.—Some good friends of our cause in remitting the fee for annual membership, enclose it in business letters to the editor or publisher of the Cynosure. Will not all remember that such letters should be addressed to C. A. Blanchard, 11 Wabash Ave., Chicago. It saves trouble to have such letters go to the place at once. Let every Cynosure subscriber collect twenty-five cents from all the Anti-masons in his neighborhood. Let fathers and mothers send the fee for their children. Then put the amount raised into a draft, postal order, or registered letter. Write down the name, age and address of each person, and send to the Corresponding Secretary, C. A. Blanchard, as above stated. Don't wait for cool weather to begin. Now is always the best time to do good. Two life memberships came in last month, and a large number of annuals, while nearly five thousand members tickets are now in the hands of devoted laborers in this cause. Send in the names and fees at once; we cannot afford to delay.

The Beecher-Tilton scandal is now sweeping over the American press like the Mill River deluge. The Cynosure has no need to say anything more, as we have put that matter, long ago, where the press will leave it when it gets through. If anything occurs important to them or the cause of Christ, our readers shall have it. The one grand humiliating fact is that Leonard Bacon and H. W. Beecher are placed, by the superficial and undiscriminating press, at the head of American Congregationalism and reform; whereas no two men on the continent are more directly in the way of, and obstructing the cause of Christ, than these two gentlemen, who are confederates. A few years will verify these words.

The Friends' "Journal" of Philadelphia inserts our editorial in favor of a constitutional declaration that "Ours is a Christian and not a heathen government," and says that if we say that the word "religion" in our Constitution, means the religion of Christ, church-and-state and persecution must and will follow.

The very opposite of this is true. Christ's is the only non-persecuting religion on earth; or that ever was on earth; simply because he commanded men to love their enemies, and forbade explicitly the use of the civil sword for religious ends; declaring that his kingdom was not of this world, "else", said he, "would my servants fight." "But now is my kingdom not from hence." We hope the Journal will study its Bible more and its fears less. Rev. A. A. Miner, D. D., (Universalist) President of Tuffts College, Mass., is one of the Vice-presidents of the National Association seeking a recognition of Christianity in our Constitution. Does the Journal think the host of men like Dr. Miner, who are in this movement mistaken?

The Jews said if they recognized Christ, "The Romans will come and take away our State and nation." They rejected him, and the Romans did come.

The meeting at Indianapolis, which the Platform Committee at Syracuse voted to hold on the third Wednesday of August, is hereby recalled, at the suggestion of its Secretary. This meeting will be postponed until our next National Anniversary at Pittsburgh, when we shall all be together, and each have our say on politics. It will then be one year before the next Presidential canvas, and if anything can be done to put our national administration back on the path where our fathers started it in 1776; the recognition of civil government as "ordained of God;" a Sabbath for man, and especially for the poor man; marriage and not Mormonism; open popular government and not secret despotism; the ten commandments and not the dicta of priests; humanity and not sworn secret clans, next May or June is the time, and Pittsburgh the place to do it. There are eleven or twelve Scotch Presbyterian churches in Pittsburgh, wealthy, clear-thinking people, who are all pledged by book against Freemasonry and its whelps. But when we were there in 1868, open and strong men said to us: "You are too late! The lodge has this nation in its grip, and nothing effectual can be done against it." But this counsel of despair forgets God.

I move that Dr. Julius F. Lemoyne, of Washington, Pa., come to Pittsburgh as our next national chairman. You that favor it say Aye.

THE JOURNAL OF COMMERCE' MISTAKE.

The persons engaged in the crusade against secret societies, ought to be ashamed of the specious pretence of their chosen name—"The National Christian Association." This is a pharisaical assumption that secret societies are necessarily hostile to Christianity, as they are far from being. Some of these societies are political in their aims, like the grangers. Others are mutually protective and social, like the Freemasons and Odd-fellows. Others have reforms to work out, like the temperance brotherhoods. And others, as the trade-unionists, are, besides being mutually assisting, agitators for overturning all the natural laws of labor and capital, supply and demand. . . . . There can be no objection to a fair stand-up fight, on the general question of the wisdom or folly of secret societies; but it vexes every honest mind to see the attack made with the hypocritical professions which come so smoothly from a few fanatics at Syracuse.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

We thank the Journal of Commerce for the clear statement of our ground principle, viz: That 'secret societies are necessarily hostile to Christianity." This principle is not "pharisaical," but simple fact; sufficiently proved by the one declaration of Christ: "In secret have I said nothing." This he said to the high priest who asked him "of his disciples and his doctrine," whom and what he had taught just before his death. All his methods were open, and perfectly democratic. The secret despotic organs are just as hostile to Christianity, therefore, as darkness is to light. Each destroys the other. We thank the Journal also for endorsing a fair stand-up fight on the general question. This, with the Journal's help, we mean to give.

By the way, Lewis Tappan, his brother Arthur, and a knot of reformers, started the Journal of Commerce " to exclude theatre bills, bawdy advertisements, etc., before the day of abolition. When that came, The Journal went back on the slave; and Lewis Tappan dropped the paper, saying that the boy left it while they were at family prayers, and the thought of the paper "disturbed his devotions."

THE NATIONAL PRINTING HOUSE.

Mr. Carpenter will not be behind, as his works show; but he does not wish to be drawn into a measure which flats out. And not even Rev. Mr. Hand or any one else tells what they will obligate themselves to do. Brethren, "Fine words butter no parsnips." Please say what you will do if Mr. Carpenter will give us the house.

This cause must succeed, or the nation perish. Slavery was not more certainly destructive of it. The lodge is the devil's wedge to divorce the nation from God. Its date, its structure, its rites, its theory; its practice all are heathen; not Christian. Freemasonry or free government will certainly go down. Now what will destroy Freemasonry and its cognate orders?

1. Not the political parties and papers. They are run by Freemasons.

2. Not the churches. They depend more or less on hearers who are, or their friends are, lodge-men.

3. Not the benevolent societies. There is not a a tract society that dares to stand in open antagonism to the lodge.

There must be a printing house; a tract and book society; and a daily press. Then let us have "The United Churches of Christ;"

"Distinct like the billows, and one like the sea."

Excommunicate every church which harbors the "accursed thing," after sending committees of love and labor to their conferences, assemblies, councils, synods and associations. This and this only will cleanse this country of the dark and damning idolatries of the lodge; which is Satan's masterpiece and last card. Brethren, do you see it? Go read anew how Moses treated the calf-worship, which is the same as the lodge-worship, with names and forms changed. Never will you get these idolatries out of the jury-box and communion table with measures less thorough than Moses took with the dancing, parading, befooled worshippers of that calf,—or rather the devil under the image of a calf; a sort of grange-worship, whose pretense was agriculture, but its god—Satan.

—We republish the platform prepared by a committee appointed for that purpose at Oberlin, for the last Presidential campaign. Some amendments were suggested and incorporated in the revision made at the recommendation of the National Executive Committee. Let all be free to suggest further amendments through the Political Column. (See page 6.)

—The most economical way of obtaining the full report of the Sixth Anniversary and circulating it widely, is through the Cynosure. The four numbers containing the report will be sent to any address for 12 cts.,—actually less than cost.

—Some apprehensions have been felt by friends in Iowa in regard to Bro. Kiggins personal safety. The interesting letter from Green county will set them at rest.

—The incident mentioned on the first page of a suit against a Knights of Physias lodge, has an additional interest from the fact of the good health of the victim who was five days dying of the heart disease. A lithographer in the employ of E. A. Cook & Co., our publishers, was well acquainted with Lamadrid, and thinks the story of heart disease wholly manufactured.

—Rev. J. W. Bain, author of the work so ably defending the position of the United Presbyterian church on secret societies, has accepted the pastorate of the Memorial U. P. church of this city. He will be a welcome addition to the ranks of Christian reformers here. The "Interior" says of him: "Mr. Bain has some prestige as a pulpit orator and vigorous thinker, as well as an active worker and withal, loyal to the distinctive principles. If he proves faithful in that atmosphere, and makes United Presbyterianism a success in Chicago, he will do well. We bid him God speed."

The True Doctrine of Creeds.

We respectfully beg the Chicago Tribune to republish the article below taken from the Religious Telescope. The writer is a member and editor of the church of the United Brethren in Christ founded by Otterbein some century and a quarter ago. This communion, which arose in Pennsylvania and Maryland, never swerved or relaxed its dicipline on slavery, promptly expelling its preachers who became slave-owners. In doctrine it has never been pretentious; and has never been considered Calvinistic.

Will the Tribune and the Chicago secular press, which the Patten-Swing controversy has led into creeds and doctrines, give their readers the sound and just views of this able and honest writer?—Ed. Cynosure.

FORMULATED CREEDS.

There is no doubt that much error has been formulated in the creeds of the churches; but this error has not been of the willful kind. It has been the mature conviction of the wisest men of their times as the right interpretation of scripture. The men who have originated creeds of the most worthy nature were men who were the farthest from being fools or knaves. God has seemed to own as his church the various so-called "sects" that have lived by creeds. If these have not composed his church he has had no church on earth for many centuries; for outside of the believers in the formulated creeds, we have no sacred or profane history of even a small number of persons who would seem to constitute God's visible church.

It is not consistent with God's promises that there should be a space of centuries destitute of his people organically visible to the world. In times of great persecution it is possible for the church to be scattered, so as to make little show in the world; yet a prominence will be given to the body of believers by the very fact that they are known to be persecuted and scattered.

The creeds, then, representing Christians' views of scripture and duty, are not to be treated with contempt by every one who may be favored with a new and better view of certain parts of them. If he is an honest man he will be far from setting himself up as one who has no respect for what thousands of Christians have believed. That he should seek, by proper means, a revision of the creed found by him to be faulty is his privilege. The proper place for casting his new light upon the faulty instrument of belief is not before a mixed crowd, but in the councils of his brethren. The unbelievers are all glad to hear ridicule of the creeds. They will flock to the churches of the preachers who indulge in ridiculing the very creeds they previously declare to be their own belief. The proper manner of seeking a change is to be patient and forbearing. When a new idea strikes a man he should not strike everyone who has not been smitten as himself. He may be a lunatic (moon-struck). Who knows? He must bear with his brethren, and instruct them with all long-suffering and doctrine. He should, in the mean time, abide by their formulated belief, and respect it as the creed of a number of wise, good, and honest brethren. A great number of glorified saints in heaven went up, after having lived many years in the full indorsement of this creed.

Now after he has shown that he is not a lunatic (one moon-struck), he will begin to be heard; and if he is right God will have enough of interest in this part of his church to cause the light to shine upon the faulty creed, so that his people may no longer abide in this little error. It must be remembered that the errors in the creeds are not of a serious nature, at the worst. They have never yet sanctioned Sabbath-breaking, murder, stealing, lying, &c., &c. The great complaint against them has always been that they are too severe, requiring too much strictness of faith and works. Calvinists believe that there is an elect. The gist of this creed is that the wicked cannot be saved. It does not mean that a man may consider himself one of the elect and then do as he pleases. If some take this view they are sure to be of the reprobate part. A church believes that Christians must be separate from the world's people. It adopts a stringent test of membership. This test is not so much to keep people out of the church as to keep members out of the world.

The creeds do not deserve ridicule for a seeming severity so much as to do the unsettled fallacious half-views of those who believe little of anything. The world owes its progress and best condition to those who have firmly believed something. Men who have beliefs of some kind are always tending toward truth, and will find it.

But it is not best that all who hold to creeds should let go and disperse in search of new belief. Many cut loose from their moorings would never again find a haven, but would run into whirlpools of unbelief. Hence there should not be too great impatience of the creeds. If these do not formulate absolute truth—the "to on"—they are valuable and venerable documents, approximating honestly the truth as it is in Jesus. It takes years to build up churches of steadfast principles; and though they may not make the way to heaven as easy as some would like, yet they have the virtue of being steadfast in theory, and generally right in practice, if they do formulate some error. Who, therefore, would wish to break down all the churches that the horrible creeds of the severely orthodox may be crushed out as things unworthy of the age?

PLATFORM OF 1872 REVISED.

The following revision of the Platform of 1872 was reported to the Executive Committee by a sub-committee appointed for the purpose and published July 17th, 1873.

PREAMBLE.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutal confidence and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a new party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable;

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of Jesuitism, of priestcraft, or of the lodge; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors that civil government though ordained of God is "founded in nature, not in grace," and therefore that all have equal civil rights, while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion, or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties, as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot, and the stake, we, at the same time, as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins, and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare.

We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief; and, while we consider government without God as mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes:

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen government, and that this fact should be recognized in its organic law.

2. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That charters of Masonic lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures must be withdrawn and their oaths suppressed.

5. That all secret lodges, orders or clans, affecting independence of our Government and practically claim that their principles and rules are more sacred and binding that the laws of the land, are treasonable, dangerous and destructive of our liberties, legislatures and courts.

6. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

7. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

8. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make them mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

9. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced; and that, sympathizing with the industrial masses in their effort to escape the extortion of secret rings, we regret to see them controlled and led, through the intrigues of designing men, in the lodge and grange, by the very power against which they struggle.

10. The maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. That reciprocal free-trade is the true basis of commercial interchange among nations, and that a gradual approach towards free competition in all the marts of trade, is the true policy on the tariff question.

12. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

and Blodgett had been severally invited to lay the corner-stone in their capacities as officers of the United States. The fact is, they were invited as sops to public anger, and only as guests of the Freemasons! Moreover, Judge Blodgett was not asked to lay the stone, and did not lay it. He was invited—he, a representative of the government—to participate in a public ceremony usurped from the people by a secret society; and he, a high judicial dignitary, thought so little of himself, and so despises his high office that he accepted so incongruous an invitation. There is not another United States judge in the Northern States who would have stooped so low. When the moment came in the public performance of the Masonic ritual, the Grand High Worthy Cockalorum—he will excuse us for not knowing his title—said to the Judge, "By the authority of the ancient and venerable order of Masonry, I invite you to scatter a little mortar on this stone, as a representative of the judiciary,"—or words to that effect. Judge Blodgett was thus publicly affronted by being invited, on the authority of a secret society, to play tenth fiddle in an affair with which this society had no proximate relation. Then the Masonic ritual was resumed. Judge Blodgett thinks it less to be a Judge of the United States on a United States occasion, than to be the obedient servant of a private secret society. Alas! It is not the first time that Judge Blodgett has stooped.

But the affair was a failure, closing with a tragedy. The Knights Templar were banquetting while the worn-out letter-carrier was dying—the victim of the barbarism called a procession. But in heaven's name, if we are ever to indulge in this folly again, let the weather be October, the management such that the people will respect. If there be any role to which Chicago objects, it is that of the public fool.—Chicago Times, June 27th.

FROM THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, JUNE 25TH.

The effect of the procession upon the individual hardly has a parallel among natural phenomenon. Your butcher or your shoemaker may be, and probably is, a very ordinary man; not blessed with wealth or beauty; having no soul-cravings or yearning desires for the Good, the True, and the Beautiful; the owner of a brood of rather dirty and promiscuous children; with an intellect capable of the scientific carving of a sheep or skillful cobbling of a boot. There is nothing majestic or awful about him. You would not invite him to your soiree as a paragon. Indeed, in his morning call at your house, your servant receives him, and they gosip together in a friendly way. But once array your butcher in a plug hat and white apron; throw an emblazoned crimsoned scarf about his muscular shoulders; put a boiled shirt on him and stick a rose in his button-hole; hang two or three tinsel crosses and other ornaments on his manly breast; and, if he be a large butcher, let him carry a banner stuck in a pouch, looking as if it were rooted in his ample corpus, and he becomes metamorphosed into another creature. As he marches along in his stately manner, keeping time, time, time, in a sort of Runic rhyme, to the tintinnabulation of the band, he is an awful and a majestic being, who towers above you as you stand upon the curbstone and looks down upon you as one the of the sans culottes. Yesterday he would have taken off his hat to you; today, if he sees you at all, he only sees you as an atom; one of a thousand, admiring him as a magnificent being, only equaled by a royal potentate and possibly surpassed by a Sultan in the grandeur of his bearing and the gorgeousness of his apparel. As you retire to your chamber at night with the confused pictures of flags, banners, crosses, swords, aprons, horse collars, trombones and guns flitting before you, the vision of this majestic creature appears, looming up like Mont Blanc among lesser hills. You regret now that only yesterday you vexed his very soul with complaints about tough beef; that you were threatened to discharge this awe-inspiring creature and enjoy another. You regard your dullness in not recognizing the possibilities lying dormant in him, and you mentally resolve to make your respects to him, the Thrice Illustrous Prince, of Most Eminent Grand Seigneur, or High and Top-Lofty Baron, commanding the Most Stunning Knights of Pythagoras, and request the pleasure of eating tough steak hereafter.

The Home Circle.

Faith.

Faith is a very simple thing,
Though little understood.
It frees the soul from death's dark sting,
By resting in the BLOOD.

It looks not on the things around,
Nor on the things within,
It takes its flight to scenes above,
Beyond the sphere of sin.

It sees upon the throne of God,
A victim that was slain,
It rests its all on His shed blood,
And says, "I'm born again."

Faith is not what we feel or see,
It is a simple trust,
In what the God of love has said
Of Jesus, as "the Just."

What Jesus is, and that alone,
Is faith's delightful plea,
It never deals with sinful self,
Nor righteous self, in me.

It tells me I am counted "dead,"
By God in his own Word;
It tells me I am "born again,"
In Christ, my risen Lord.

In that He died, He died to sin,
In that He lives—to God;
Then I am dead to nature's hopes,
And justified through blood.

If He is free, then I am free,
From all unrighteousness;
If he is just, then I am just,
He is my righteousness.

What want I more to perfect bliss?
A body like His own,
Will perfect me for greater joys
Than angels round the throne.

Our Florida Correspondent. The Barbecue.

The barbecue consisted of twenty carcasses of mutton, pork, pigs and kids well dressed, but entire. These were opened along the spine, put each on wooden rods about five feet long, and stretched across a trench which had previously been dug and filled full with kindlings, wood and logs. When this wood had all been converted into coals the broiling commenced. Two colored men stood on either side taking care that the meat should cook evenly, and in the mean time two others with long handled sops basted with a preperation of vinegar, salt and water the roasting meat, the sight of which filled me with amazement, as to what they could do with it all. But about three o'clock P. M. the problem was solved. A long table was improvised for the occasion, the cloth laid; upon it was placed here and there a plate, pies of all sorts and sizes, cakes frosted and plain, bread in quantities, stuffed meats, stews and soups, which were disposed of regardless of spoon or plate (you see it was a social affair) something after the manner of the Chinese. Several could eat from the same plate, at the same time. Some strange combinations appeared; as one dish (a great luxury) of broiled potatoes prepared in thickened sour milk. Col. Gary, while playing the agreeable to our Northern group, entertained himself with the rare combination of roast pork and cake with apparent relish. When the third table full had been jostled and elbowed to their heart's content, the generous board was cleaned off, leaving a meager amount for the colored citizens who then crowded around, most of them in linen apparel well laundried. Several unmistakably oily spots in the region of the pockets suggested that they were willing to take what they could get.

By this time those who had the honor of the first table, were on hand for the first dance, as they had a band engaged for that purpose. This had to be indulged in, even though the gentlemen had to carry parasols, as well as the ladies, and the fans were eagerly caught up at each pause of the dance. Rope-walking, dancing and swinging, sports fool-hardy enough for the most daring, whiled away the time until four o'clock, when we reached the station. Some kind person had hung half a dozen goards on the sign post at the tavern for the swallow's nests, and the little birds were just trying their wings. They chattered like young children. Right glad were we to hear the sound of the approaching train. We arrived home at eight, P. M.

The Tuesday following we started for our own home, running back to Augusta and thence to Chattanooga. We had dust, cinders and sunshine all the way. At five next morning we were approaching the grand old Lookout Mountain. The country here has a rich soil, well wooded and watered, and the little hamlets seemed bathed in worldly prosperity. The scenery is quite varied, rocks, hills, mountains, but over them all Lookout keeps a watchful eye, and under its shadow many a brave heart sleeps. A large cemetery skirts an eastern slope, a peaceful resting place for those who have grown aweary in this battle of life; and a funeral cortege was winding its narrow paths and depositing their dead. The quiet of the morning adds to the stateliness of Lookout as it points to the Eternal Hills where rests our hope, while the friendly bosom of our mother earth opens to receive a portion of its own.

At three o'clock there came a few ominous drops and soon the rain fell in sheets-bathing the parched earth. This called together half a dozen planters, some of whom followed that business before the war. Most of them were quite grey. One could raise cotton at ten cents a pound and pay his help every fortnight, leaving him a satisfactory margin, as his face indicated, while others thought this plan of regular payment perfectly disastrous. Did he not require his workmen to find their own tools? also to replace or repair any damages? Yes, was replied to the last query; no, to the first. I saw a little feeling exhibited as you might suppose would be shown had he been a Northern man. He was a Southernor, however, and I wished to thank him for the noble and dignified stand he took among his fellows for the cause of the laborer. May his workmen never fail him! The liberal devviseth liberal things.

But this letter is too long. In the meantime the cars have not been slow in coming forward and I am again in the smoky, joyous city of Chicago once more; for what can take the place of honest work for satisfaction.

KNOWLEDGE—the wing wherewith we fly to heaven.

A Plain Letter to a Pleasure Lover.

"MY DEAR——, I trust you will not be offended at my speaking so faithfully to you about your soul. I have been watching for signs of grace in you, but can see none. God forbid that I should be uncharitable, but, you know, the Lord Jesus says a tree is known by its fruits. Now, the things I have seen and heard concerning you are inconsistent with the grace of God.

"The Word of God tells us that they who are friends of the world are enemies of God. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart.' 'No man can serve two masters: ye cannot serve God and Mammon.' 'Because thou art luke warm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth.' Rev. iii. 16.

"If God be God, serve him. If Baal be God, serve him. A divided heart God will never accept. Christ is like the woman mentioned in 1 Kings iii. 26. The whole child, or no child. The devil is like the other woman who wanted the child halved. He wants sinners to enjoy the pleasures of the world, and hold Christ, too; but that will never do. The Lion of Judah and the lion of hell can never be yoked in the same chariot. The Word of God says, 'Come out from among them, and be ye separate; touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you.' 2 Cor. vi. 17.

"The men who set their affections on the earth have lean souls. Their Christianity is doubtful. If they are Christians, they will be chastened by God for serving other gods. They will be saved so as by fire. They will get a tasting of hell before they enter heaven.

"I hear of professing Christians who spend six or seven hours dancing, or in singing foolish songs; and never spend an hour with God in their closets. Shame on them! I would not give a straw for their chance of heaven. They are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. May the Lord open their eyes. The Lord says that some fear him and serve their own gods. 2 Kings xvii. 41. These are not God's dear ones. Another set are described in the Word, 'And they came unto thee as people cometh, and sit before thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they will not do them; for with their mouth they show much love, but their heart goeth after their covetousness.' Ezek. xxxiii. 31.

"Dear——, read these passages for yourself. You are convinced, but not converted. O dear——, at the peril of your soul get a true conversion. There may be many convictions, and yet no conversion. Satan has a counterfeit grace for every genuine grace of the Spirit. Examine yourself. When a man leaves the service of Satan to serve Christ, he gets a new set of tools altogether, and a new set of pleasures; psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs, and holy joys; but the Bible never speaks of your comic and other foolish songs, and there is not a word about men and women dancing country dances and reels, or any such thing, except they were godless creatures like Herodias' daughter. O, now, for your very life, have done with all such things as these, and get holiness to the Lord. And if once you are filled with the Spirit, you will have pleasures that will last forever.

Yours, in Jesus, "Robert Annan."

The person to whom he wrote the above, acknowledged he was right, and sought the Lord with many tears and evidences of true repentance. Would that many others might hear and heed the warning of the man of God, "by which he, being dead, yet speaketh."

Care for Daughters.

Would you show yourself really good to your daughters? Then be generous to them in a truer sense than that of heaping trinkets on their necks. Train them for independence first, and then labor to give it to them. Let them, as soon as ever they are grown up, have some little money, or means of making money, to be their own, and teach them how to deal with it, without needing every moment, somebody to help them. Calculate what you give them or will bequeath to them, not, as is usually done, on the chances of their making a rich marriage, but on the probability of their remaining single and according to the scale of living to which you have accustomed them, suppress their luxuries now if need be, but do not leave them with scarcely bare necessaries hereafter, in striking contrast to their present home. Above all, help them to help themselves. Fit them to be able to add to their own means rather than to be forever pinched and economizing till their minds are narrowed and their hearts are sick. Give them all the culture you can to every power which they may possess. If they should marry after all, they will be the happier and the better for it. If they should remain among the millions of unmarried, they will bless you in your grave, and say of you what cannot be said of many a doting parent by his surviving child: "My father cared that I should be happy after his death as well as while I was his pet and toy."

DOES IT PAY?—The late Rev. Leland Howard, of Rutland, Vt., in the faithful discharge of his pastoral duties, took occasion quite often to urge, personally, on one of his hearers an attention to religion. At length the repeated conversation became so distasteful that, in an irritated manner, he repelled all further advances by declaring most emphatically that if he ever took that liberty again he would never pay another cent toward his salary. With no fear of loss in this respect, but with a shrewd knowledge of human nature, and with a wisdom often born of love, he forbore all further personal conversation when they met, but he would tap him on the shoulder and simply ask, "Does it pay?"

Time went on, and the good, faithful pastor crowned with years and the honors of a long and useful life, went through the gate of death to be with Christ. But his words remained like a nail fastened by the Master of assemblies; and the man whose salvation he so often sought to secure became a Christian. Then he told what feelings that brief question produced. He said, "I had rather he said the whole than to ask the question, 'Does it pay?' And O," said he, "if he were only living now, that I could tell him so, what a privilege it would be."

A Hindo Story.

A tiger, prowling in a forest, was attracted by a bleating calf. It proved to be a bait, and the tiger found himself trapped in a spring cage. There he lay for two days, when a Brahmin happened to pass that way. "O Brahmin!" piteously cried the beast, "have mercy on me; let me out of this cage." "Ah! but you will eat me." "Eat you! devour my benefactor? Never could I be guilty of such a deed," responded the tiger. The Brahmin, being benevolently inclined, was moved by these entreaties, and opened the door of the cage. The tiger walked up to him, wagged his tail and said: "Brahmin, prepare to die; I shall now eat you." "Oh, how ungrateful! how wicked! am I not your savior?" protested the trembling priest. "True," said the tiger, "very true; but it is the custom of my race to eat a man when we get a chance, and I can not afford to let you go." "Let us submit the case to an arbitrator," said the Brahmin. "Here comes a fox. The fox is wise; let us abide by his decision." "Very well," replied the tiger. The fox, assuming a judicial aspect, sat on his haunches with all the dignity he could muster, and looking at the disputants, he said: "Good friends, I am somewhat confused at the different accounts which you give of this matter; my mind is not clear enough to render equitable judgment, but if you will be kind enough to act the whole transaction before my eyes, I shall attain unto a more definite conception of the case. Do you, Mr. Tiger, show me just how you approached and entered the cage, and then you, Mr. Brahmin, show me how you liberated him, and I shall be able to render a proper decision." They assented, for the fox was solemn and oracular. The tiger walked into the cage, and the spring-door fell and shut him in. He was a prisoner. The judicial expression faded from the fox's countenance, and turning to the Brahmin, he said: "I advise you to go home as fast as you can, and abstain, in future, from doing favors to rascally tigers. Good morning, Brahmin: good morning, tiger."—Ex.

Most people need all the strength which a high-toned public opinion can give them to keep them true to their conscience and their God; and that opinion is partly formed by what we do and what we are. Strive earnestly, then, to order your life with a wise simplicity. Be frugal in the shows, and generous in the substances of life. Set the example, so greatly needed, o wholesome moderation. Show that you care for character above all else. —Rev. H. W. Foote.

In the progress of the Spanish wars in Italy under Gonsalvo, it was arranged that a contest should be decided by a tourney between eleven French and an equal number of Spanish cavaliers. Neither party gained a decided victory. The Spanish knights comforted themselves that they had not been defeated, and one remarked, "we have shown ourselves as good horsemen as the French." "I sent you for better," was the cool and reproving reply of Gonsalvo. Christian soldiers should not content themselves with doing no worse than men of the world. Their Lord and Leader sends them for "better."

Have you not often wondered at the human utterances of the Divine Word? It thunders like God, and yet weeps like man. It seems impossible that anything should be too little for the Word of God to notice, or too bitter, or even too sinful for that book to overlook. It touches humanity at all points. Everywhere it is a personal, familiar acquaintance, and seems to say to itself, "Shall I hide this thing from Abraham my friend?"—Spurgeon.

"If the ax be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength." A little skill expended in sharpening the edge, will save a great deal of strength in wielding the hatchet.

Children's Corner.

A Little Sharp Fellow.

There's a bright little fellow, dressed in a suit of brown, that lives in your desk, and since you're getting so very learned, of course you want to know about him.

When I was young I used to make them for myself, but it takes—oh, dozens of men and women and boys and girls to make one for you.

Mine were made of quills from the stately goose, but the material for yours is dug from the dark holes of earth. I must admit, though, that yours are much better than mine were—as cheap, and a thousand times less troublesome.

You've guessed before now, haven't you, that I mean your steel pen? I wish you could go in Gillott's manufactory and see how bars of steel are cut and rolled and stamped and polished into dainty pens. But you have to go to England to do that, and I don't believe you can, just yet. So I'll tell you about it.

The steel comes from the Sheffield iron-works, and the first operation in the pen factory is to cut it into strips a yard long and four inches wide.

You don't see how they can cut the steel. Well, they couldn't cut it if they had only the strength of men; but they use the same useful servant that carries our messages, draws our railroad-cars, warms our houses, and makes nearly everything we use—steam. With the help of steam power it is as easy to cut steel as for you to cut an apple; and not only to cut it into strips but to roll it out thin enough for pens.

And that isn't all steam does. It makes all the rollers and stamps and presses and grind stones and chisels that I am going to tell you about.

To go back to our pens. When the steel is rolled thin enough, the pens are cut out just as you've seen cook cut biscuits, only the girl who uses the cutter holds the sheet of steel, and the cutter goes by steam. The cutter is made of hard steel, and works all the time up and down like a stamp. The girl moves the steel around, and every time the stamp comes down it bites out a pen, or the outside shape of a pen.

As it is cut it falls into a box, and from that goes to another girl at another stamping machine. One by one the girl puts the flat bits of steel under the stamp which comes down and cuts the hole at the top of the split—or where the split will be. Then thousands of them together go into a muffle.

That has a mysterious sound, and somehow suggests smothering, but it really is merely an innocent earthern box, which goes into a furnace for the purpose of annealing the pens. I needn't tell you again that annealing is only softening.

When they are cool they go to another girl, with another stamp, and this, coming down in its irresistible way, prints in the maker's name.

Have you a pen you can look at? Let me see—I have one. The stamp says, "Joseph Gillott's Pen," and there's a swan and the number 332 on it. Perhaps your pen, if you find one, is number 303, as that is a favorite school pen.

When the name is on they are ready to be rounded up; for till now, you know, they have been only flat pieces of steel. Another girl, with another stamp, presses them into their half-round shape in an instant, and then they are hardened again,

Do you know how they harden steel? I told you how they soften it. Well, it seems rather odd, but they go to work in exactly the same way that they do to soften it: they heat the pens again, in another muffle, red-hot. But instead of letting them cool slowly, as they do to soften them, the workmen plunge the hot pens into oil. A greasy bath, it's true; but it cools them suddenly, and makes them hard yet elastic, so they will bend as you write. They're dreadfully sticky and unpleasant to handle, however; so thousands of them are put into a tin barrel (did you ever hear of a tin barrel?) and shaken violently for a long time by the same steam-power that drives the stamps.

All this snapping of stamps and rattling of tin barrels full of pens make a horrid noise, I can tell you. You need to leave your nerves at home when you go to a steel-pen factory—that is if you have any nerves.

The mad dance of the pens is not yet over. They come out of a barrel into a box with sand and other scouring things, and there they have another horrible shaking,

This leaves them clean and bright and ready for another lot of girls. The first one takes a pen in a pair of pliers, holds it an instant to the emery-wheel—which does nothing but fly around all day—that grinds off the point.

The next girl takes it, lays it in a groove made exactly to fit it, and down comes a sharp chisel that cuts the split in a second. That's the last stamp and the last cut for the little pen.

Now it must be colored. Perhaps you don't know your pens are colored, but if you look at one you'll see it isn't the color of your knife-blade. It is blue or brown, and it got its color not in a dye tub, but by being heated in a metal box over a charcoal fire.

The workman—not a girl this time—watches them very carefully, and when they are exactly right snatches them off. They now have their color, but they must have a luster, a "shine," before they're nice enough to live in your desk. For this they go into a bath of some liquids, and are dried again before being shut up in little boxes, I don't know how many dozens together. You've seen them many a time.

There are some funny pens in Gillott's show room, some so large as to need both hands to hold one, and others so small you need a microscope to see the split—regular fairie's pens. Why, a gross of them will go into a nut shell—not a cocoa-nut either, but a Barcelona nut shell.

The first steel pens sold for one dollar apiece; now you can buy them at the factory for one cent a gross!

Don't tell me you don't know that a gross is twelve dozen!

I want to tell you something very wonderful that the iron and steel workers have done of late. It is almost too wonderful to be true.

They have with their immense rollers, made iron into sheets thinner than the thinnest tissue-paper you ever saw—of which sheets it would take forty-eight hundred in a pile to be an inch thick. Why, two hundred and forty sheets of ordinary note paper make an inch. Think of taking twenty of the marvelous iron sheets to be as thick as one of paper!

And this wonderful paper, as it is called, can be written on and sent as a letter.

I must tell you the story of the iron cob-webb.

To the World's Fair, in 1851, an American in Pittsburg sent a sheet of iron paper a good deal thinner than letter-paper, but not so thin as tissue. The English iron-rollers did not like to be outdone by an American, of course, so they set their wits and their rollers to work to beat this. Gillott, the steel pen man, rolled one very thin. It took eighteen hundred to make an inch,—but another English factory—a tin factory—made the very thin one I told you of.

So far in the contest England is ahead. Whether that Pittsburgh man will allow himself to be beaten by an English workman we shall see. I shouldn't wonder if he was rolling away now night and day to beat that Englishman. Should you?—Morning Star.

Commencement at Wheaton.

The exercises of the fourteenth anniversary of Wheaton College began on Thursday evening, June 25th, with an address before the Society of Inquiry by Dr. Lyman Whiting, of Janesville, Wis.

On the Sabbath following the Baccalaureate sermon was preached by Pres. Blanchard from Matthew xxvii. 22: "What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" This question of Pilate was applied to the relation of civil governments to the Christian religion. In the evening he preached a companion discourse on the relation of education and public schools to Christianity.

The annual exhibition of the Literary Union on Monday evening was considered one of the best of its kind.

Tuesday was Alumni day and was conducted as usual with a social reunion in the afternoon and literary exercises in the evening. The latter were an essay by Miss L. A. Wheaton, Lady Principal of Hedding College, Ill., and an address by L. N. Stratton, editor of the American Wesleyan, Syracuse, N. Y., on "Mastering the Situation." The essay described the progress of modern thought the growth of ideas and ultimate triumph of right principles and was followed very appropriately by the song, "Men of Thought and Men of Action, Clear the Way," by the well-known singer, Geo. W. Clark, of Rochester, N. Y. The address was a masterly one delivered in Mr. Stratton's enthusiastic style; full of earnest thought and apt illustrations, not among the least of which was a brief history of his own experience as a student working his way through difficulties and poverty.

Commencement followed on Wednesday. The day was cool and beautifully bright, in pleasing contrast with the fierce heat which so often prevails on such occasions. The spacious chapel was early filled with a fine audience in which were numerous visitors and friends from Chicago and the towns in northern Illinois. The walls, rostrum and chandeliers were tastefully decorated with flowers, evergreen and oak leaves.

The exercises commenced with good old "Cornation," in which all joined, and prayer by Rev. Lucien Farnham, of Newark, Ill. The exercises of the graduating class were introduced by Miss Mercy G. Bailey with a Salutatory and essay on "To-day." Commencement day was hailed as a glorious one not on acccount of the achievements of the class, but because of the possibilities it revealed. The influence of men and principles form a great part of the living present; and the evils in government, religion and society were pictured. The present was a glorious day because it would usher in an era of justice in governments, and of revival in the church. The spirit of great events walks before the body, to-morrow.

Miss Maud L. Bereman, of St. Louis, Mo., followed, after a finely rendered anthem by the college choir under the lead of Prof. Baker, with an essay on "Liberty in the Last Decade." The aspirations of the human soul, as each advancing step opened new vistas of knowledge, and its progress toward liberty in our own emancipation of the slave, in the unification of the German States, the unshackling of Italy, Spain and France were well described. But the direst bondage, of sin, must yet be shaken off ere the conscience is free. Men must learn that the great Liberator is Christ.

Miss Mary E. Nash, of Belvidere, Ill., read a poem on the "Ideal and the Real." The work of the imaginative faculty in leading to great discoveries, well as in forming individual character were displayed. All toilers for the good of their kind have a lofty purpose in their souls of whose great worth they are assured

"In the sweet dawn of liberty and truth."

Mr. F. J. T. Fischer, of Oberlin, O., pronounced an oration on "The Franco-Prussian War:—A Conflict of Principles, in a manner to interest the audience. The conflicting principles were Christianity and French atheism. Napoleon said he could by a single bulletin change his army into Mohammedans. The mind of the French people was blinded and corrupted by atheistic principles. Germany, immediately adjoining, was a Christian nation, and viewed with horror the position of France. Conflict was inevitable, nor can there be harmony until Christian principles prevail in both nations.

The Valedictory with an oration on the "Philosophy of Plant Life" was pronounced by Royal F. Morgan, of Aurora, Ill.. The subject was made interesting by a consideration of the place of vegetable life in the economy of nature, in providing such elements as supported animal life, and by a wise distribution gave rise to many-winged commerce and its multiform relations.

The Master's Oration by W. B. Lloyd, of St. Charles, Ill., on "The Dignity of Labor" was a worthy theme, well handled and appreciated. Rev. R. B. Howard, of Princeton, Ill., gave the address to the Literary Societies on "Manners." He deprecated thecoarseness and ribaldry of the press and of our legislative bodies, and related a conversation with Thaddeus Stevens on his death-bed. Mr. Stevens said to him (the speaker) "Pray for me!" "Why do you wish me to pray for you?" was asked. "That God may give me a new heart," he replied. The Catholics crowded around the dying man and performed their idle ceremonies and claimed the "Great Commoner"as their prey, but they could not change the honest purpose of his soul.

Pres. Blanchard conferred the usual degree, upon the graduating class, and also that of A. M. on W. B. Lloyd and E. H. Killmer of '71, also on Mrs. M. E. Cook, of Chicago, Mrs. Jennie Caldwell, of Shanahan, Ill., and Miss Read, Lady Principal, the degree of "Artium Magistra."

The music was of an excellent character. Several anthems were sung in an inspiring manner by the college choir led by Prof. Baker, and two violin solos by Mr. Lewis, of Chicago, were exquisitely performed.

An effort to secure funds for the College Building fund, seconded by a song by Geo. W. Clark, of Rochester, N. Y., resulted in subscriptions amounting to $850.

The customary social reunion of students and friends of the college was held in the college parlors in the evening and was an occasion enjoyed by all present. Mr. Clark and daughter added to the pleasure of the evening by their powers of song.

Correspondence.

friends in that town. Two years ago we formed an association opposed to secret societies in this place, but from what we could learn it was as good as dead.

We had hoped to bring it to life again, but Satan hindered. All that we did here was to sell a few books and speak to a few of the townsmen from the platform in front of the store and post-office, and sold a Morgan book to a Freemason. This circumstance, with an other fact, that he wished to have the reading of the "Broken Seal," if any one would bring one and lend it to him, that he will find his way out of the lodge, and as I understood, he came out quite bright in religion last winter. One thing is very evident, if he continues to cling to the lodge, he will make shipwreck of faith.

I am more and more convinced of the need of our publications being spread broad cast all over our land. Their tendency is remarkable in unstopping deaf ears, and opening of blind eyes, and thus paving the way for the lecturer. Like our holy Christianity, there must be "line upon line, here a little, and there a little,' and with the blessing of Him who said, "in secret have I said nothing," may expect to see this whole continent redeemed from under this reign of terror. We must admit one fact, that this curse entailed must be overcome or removed, or civil war is inevitable.

The church as well as the state, must be relieved from having any complicity with dramshops and secret fraternities, or both will go to ruin.

It has been said that every dog must have his day. I think that these two dogs have been allowed to run till both are rabid, and now for the safety of the country, let them both be killed buried in the same dishonored grave by the side of that other bad dog, that had to be dispatched more than ten years ago, and then let Heaven and earth rejoice.

Corner-Stone Letters.

CHICAGO, June 24th, 1874.

Eds. Cynosure:—The big jack-daws are here and with their sole stock of capital of brass and impudence have vanquished the citizens and learned them to keep down in their places when the most worshipful Masons are about, who own the mud sills and their Freemason Hessians, and who are entitled to a royal court circle and to rule the nations. They have supplanted the citizen, in what was his right and forced themselves upon the public, creating a stench in the nostrils of every honest citizen. The craft came well nigh being defeated by the bold discussion and opposition they met here, and were compelled to have resource to strategy, brazen impudence and unblushing falsehood. They chuckled much at their assertion that they would get a District Court Judge to do their job. The time having come Judge Blodgett proceded to execute the task assigned him—the Grand Worshipful Master Mason, in the most dictorial and usurping manner moved the Judge unceremoniously away. To conciliate the outraged public they appointed one of the outsiders. If they were appointed to do the work why did they make this dodge and concession. Our Republic must organize its scattered members opposed to secret societies and their dupes whom they plunder. Let them be styled Patriots or American Patriots, for upon them devolves to sustain this free government and common schools and Christianity. You have a prevaricating, wily foe to grapple with, but united effort will rend them as lightning rends the gnarled oak. Organize to give them no votes, no patronage and to give aid to obtain a fair trial by jury. Remember it is almost impossible to get a trial by jury in Chicago courts by one not belonging to a nest of secret societies—if the opponent is a Mason, a wink sends the case to the dogs, irrespective of merit. The Masons here who invited the old imbecile (Richardson) at Washington to invite them to lay the stone, must be informed that intelligence is too general here for importing the despotism of foreign countries.

WELLINGTON, Ill.,

Editor Cynosure:

We specially call your attention to the coolness and effrontery with which the lodge, through its representatives, replied to our protest from Syracuse to he President. Our protest should have been put in the corner stone together with as much more as we could have got in there including all our tracts, "Morgan's Illustrations" and a short statement of the murder of Morgan, and the "cheek" the fraternity exhibited after having murdered Morgan in offering to support Mrs. Morgan and her children! This same clan with their death penalties unchanged, with their "cut-throat" oaths and degrading initiations have, with all their modesty and disposition "not to appear in public," just been coaxed and induced to lay our corner-stone for a great building in the chief city of the north-west.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Reformed Episcopal church established by Bishop Cummins last winter, now numbers about twenty ministers and thirteen hundred members.

—In 1873 there were registered in England and Wales, the names of 2,317 Baptist ministers. The list for London and vicinity numbers 419 names.

—As an instance of the retrenchment in mission boards the Baptist Home Mission Board have dismissed its three secretaries and chosen one in their place, Dr. E. E. L. Taylor. This saves office expense to the amount of $5,400.

—The Congregational church of Henniker, N. H., which lately celebrated its 104th anniversary, has sent out from its little band eighteen ministers and missionaries, or one for every thirty of the whole number of its members since its foundation.

—The amount raised for foreign missions in the Presbyterian church the past year exceeded that of the previous year $5,000, making an aggregate of over $653,000. Of this amount, over $87,000 were raised by the Woman's Missionary Associations, and over $27, 000 by the children. There has been an ddition of about 1,400 members to the mission hurches, making an increase of about 25 per cent. on he previous membership, —The Episcopal Convention of the diocese of Virginia, at its late session, had a warm discussion on the subject of temperance. The report offered by the minority of the committee on that subject was adopted by a vote of 385 to 38. It provides as an amendment to the general rules, that any person making, buying, selling, or using as a beverage, intoxicating liquor, shall be, upon conviction, debarred from membership in the church.

—The New York Mail, in commenting on the late ecclesiastical trial of this city, says forcibly: "The clergy of any denomination are bound by its canons and doctrines. If any doctrine is too harshly expressed, or seems in the way of Christian growth, let its amendment or ejection be discussed and agitated until the written creed corresponds with the actual belief of communicants. But it is demoralizing for preachers who nominally assent to a creed to treat any part of it as obsolete and of no effect. If any one of them feels the bonds of this creed are too close or irksome, let him exercise the American right of bolting and select more congenial company."

—The work of Christianizing India has not been undertaken in vain. A late writer says of its prospects: "Statistical facts can in no way convey any adequate idea of the work done in any part of India. The effect is often enormous, where there has not been a single avowed conversion, and is manifested in very different ways, according to the nationality, the creed, and even the professions in life, and place of residence, urban or rural, of the native community." And another says: "A revolutionary change is in progress, and it seems not improbable that this generation will not pass away before the Christian churches of India will have gathered in many millions of the population to the one fold and the one Shepherd."

—With the close of March, the Secretary and General Agent of the Massschusetts Sabbath-school Society, Dr. Bullard, completed forty years of labor in that office. During this period, in his work as General Agent, he made 2,933 visits in nearly 800 different towns and parishes, preached or gave addresses 5,915 times, and travelled about 230,000 miles. He has probably addressed between a million and a half and two millions of persons, perhaps more than five hundred thousand different persons, and a large portion of them many times. For ten years, at the commencement of his labors, he edited "The Sabbath-school Visitor," and for three years assisted in editing "The Congregational Visitor," both monthly periodicals of the Society; and for the past thirty years he has edited "The Well-Spring," which is published weekly.

—Mrs. Ingalls, a Baptist missionary, in a recent letter giving an account of her visit to Upper Burmah, says that they have there one or two laws which Christians might do well to follow. The "first crime of drunkenness is punished by the offender being paraded through the streets by a procession of State ministers, under golden umbrellas, who strike a golden gong, and read the crime at the corner of all the streets, and lash him with thongs. He is then taken to the high court, where he has more severe blows, and then sent to his home. If he is found guilty the second time, he is taken out in the same way and then banished from the country. We saw such a procession with a man guilty for the first time. We were in the golden city six weeks, and this was the only drunken man we saw. They are forbidden to use opium or to gamble." And we presume they have no laws licensing a class of men to make drunkards, for a consideration. This is left for civilized communities.

—While a great revival has been and is still going on under the labors of brethren Moody and Sankey, in Scotland, a similar work has been undertaken in Russia by an English Lord Radstock. Several years ago, literally obeying the word of Jesus, he gave away his personal fortune and devoted his life to the work of an evangelist. His labors in St. Petersburg have been among the aristocratic classes, mainly with the women. A St. Petersburg journal, while with an effort to ridicule this revival, states several interesting facts. It says: "Balls are forgotten, and fine dresses discarded; the fair owners having taken to loving Christ and receiving instructions from a modern English apostle. Even the male portion of our fashionable society is beginning to be affected with a predilection for Protestantism." It also mentions remarks lately made by some of the noble ladies about Lord Radstock and his doctrines. Princess G—— exclaimed: "I only now know what the religion of Christ really is. It is Protestantism." Princess P—— declared: "Protestantism is the only religion I ever understood. It is based upon love; not upon rite and ceremony, as is ours." The religion of sacraments is the only religion these people have hitherto known. The religion of personal communion with a living Saviour, is a new revelation to them.

ODD FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

REGULATIONS FOR OPENING, CONDUCTING AND CLOSING A LODGE.

NOTE.—This illustrated exposition of Odd-fellowship will be published in book form before Sept, 1st, 1874. (See Advertisement.)

INVITATION ODE.

[The following words are sung in some lodges as the candidate goes to the chair of the Noble Grand.]

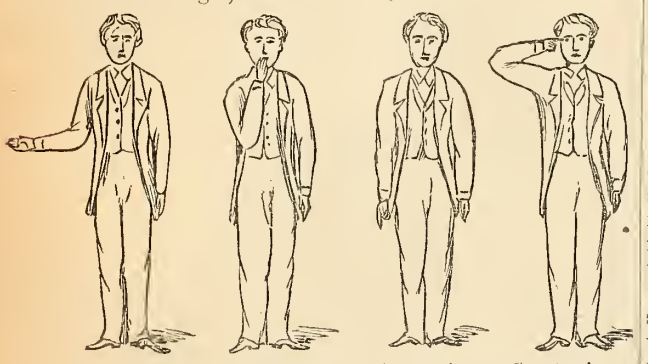
Stranger(s) amid a band of Brothers,
Here you stand,
Firm, tried and true;
Here Friendship's power is shown;
Here Love and Truth are known;
And here before the throne
We welcome you

Stranger(s), you've nought to fear,
For honor's court is here;
Love, Peace and Joy.
Here in good faith we meet;
Here friends and brother's greet;
And in communion sweet,
The hours employ.

(Arriving at the Noble Grand's chair, he will arise and give one rap with his gavel, when the members will be seated and lay off their disguise. In some lodges there is a curtain in front of the Noble Grand, which is drawn aside by the supporters, as they approach him.)

Conductor to Noble Grand. By direction of the Vice Grand, I present to you a stranger to be instructed in the mysteries of our order.

NOBLE GRAND'S CHARGE.



My friend: I welcome you among the fraternity of Odd Fellows, with whose customs I trust you will become better acquainted. Under our disguise, I have no doubt you took us for odd fellows indeed. Learn from this that men are not always to be taken for what they appear. Some may have a rough and unseemly exterior, but a good, true heart within, while others possessing a captivating person and manners, may be destitute of all genuine principles. I hope you will pardon us the innocent deception, and make a proper application of the moral it is designed to convey.

We will now proceed to instruct you in the signs peculiar to a Working Lodge of this order. There are four of them:

1. ENTERSIGN.—One rap on the Ante-Room or outside door—three raps on the Lodge Room door.

2. COUNTERSIGN.—Drop right arm obliquely by the side, extending the fingers in a straight line with the elbow, close thumb in palm of hand.

(In some lodges the three raps on the lodge room door are called the countersign.)

Countersign. 1st Position. Countersign. 2d Position. Countersign. 3d Position. Countersign. 4th Position

2D POSITION.—Raise the hand in front, keeping the fingers in same position, pass them over the mouth, elbow resting on stomach, or nearly so.

3D POSITION.–Immediately drop hand from mouth to side, while doing so close all except the fore finger over the thumb keeping fore finger extended.

4TH POSITION.—Raise hand again and bring end of fore finger to outer corner of right eye, nail in front, with the elbow extending horizontally therefrom. Then let the arm fall, opening the hand with the palm to the front.

(This is explained as follows: The fingers covering the lips indicate that we must keep secret all that transpires in the Lodge Room. The finger applied to the eye, reminds us that the all-seeing eye is ever upon us. The last motion shows that our hand is always open to the wants of a brother Odd Fellow.)

This sign is given to salute both of the principal officers immediately after entering the lodge, when the lodge is open for business. First to the Noble Grand; then to the Vice Grand.

3. PASS WORD Jonathan:—Which is given to the Ontside Guardian in a whisper, (after the entersign) who then admits to the ante-room

EXPLANATION, Odd Fellow, which is given at the Lodge Room door to the Inside Guardian, through a wicket or slide in the door.

QUARTERLY PASS WORD:—This with its explanation is given the candidate privately, during the evening, by the Noble Grand, who alone is authorized to give it, or cause it to be given to members.

This pass word is changed every three months. Should it be frater, the explanation is brother.

GRIP.—Two fore fingers in connection with thumb, advancing right foot at same time, with inside of knees together in form of knee lock.

Without these signs you cannot gain admittance into this or any other Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Be observant therefore, that you may acquire them, and be careful that you do not improperly reveal them. Remember also, that you have given us your pledge of honor—a pledge which is the most binding of any that can be given or received. We feel confident that you will keep it inviolate. You have been admitted by certain forms of initiation, in which there is deep significance. You were blindfolded, to represent the darkness and doubt through which man gropes his way to a knowledge of himself, his duty, and his destiny: a darkness not only of reason, but of the moral nature. And you were encompassed with chains, to illustrate that slavery of soul to sense—that subjection to things outward and perishable, into which man is brought by his own passions. You were then led to a scene where an emblem of mortality was exhibited, to represent to you the end of this servitude, to remind you of the insignificant and perishable nature of all these outward objects which so often excite men's passionate ambitions. After this representation, intended to reach your conscience and touch your heart you have been restored to light and liberty. One of these acts is emblematical of that liberty which the virtuous enjoy when conscious of being disenthralled from sensuality and passion; the other is emblematical of the light of that truth which reveals to us Love as the grand remedy for all social evils as it is indeed the foundation of all good towards God and man. In this light we trust you will ever walk; this liberty we hope you will ever maintain. It will be our duty, it is one of the great ends of our institution, to aid you in so doing. We claim the privilege, therefore, of watching over your conduct, not only in the lodge-room, but in your intercourse with the world at large.

Introduce our friend to the Past Grand.

PAST GRAND'S CHARGE.

My friend: You are now initiated into and made acquainted with the organization and works of a Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, and are recognized as a member. The institution of Odd-fellowship is progressive in its character. You have passed its threshold, and, after a reasonable probation, may advance, step by step, through all its gradations until you shall have fully obtained a knowledge of its intrinsic excellencies,—its adaptations for the promotion of good will among men, and its fitness as a minister to the trials and adversities which are inseparable from human life.

We have at this time a few general lessons to inculcate, which, in addition to those you have received in your progress to this chair, will serve to give you proper views as to the character and true objects of Odd-fellowship.

Odd-fellowship is founded upon that eternal principle which recognizes man as a constituent of one universal brotherhood—teaches him that as he came from the hands of a common parent, he is bound to cherish and protect his fellow men. It thus presents a broad platform upon which mankind may unite in offices of human benefaction. Under comprehensive influences, all the nations of the earth may concentrate their energies for the good of the common race. Based upon certain truths which are like axioms among all nations, tongues and creeds, its sacred tolerance presents a nucleus which, by its gentle influence, gathers within its orbit antagonistic natures; controls the elements of discord, stills the storm and soothes the spirit of passion, and directs in harmony man's united efforts to fraternize the world. This is the great first principle of our fellowship, which we denominate fraternity: a universal fraternity in the family of man. Our forefathers have wisely made this principle the corner-stone of Odd-fellowship. Upon its solid basis the whole superstructure has securely rested and, as we believe, is destined immovably to repose till time shall be no more.

From this principle we learn to regard the Great Author of our existence as our Father, "in whom alone we live and move and have our being,"—to recognize each other as alike the offspring of the same parent, as the master-piece of his handywork, and designed as such to reflect in our nature and relations the image of him after whose likeness man was formed. We are, therefore, brothers, and in all our intercourse we illustrate the truthfulness of this profession by reciprocal relief and kindly offices to one another in the day of trial. With the divisions and classifications of human society our order holds no fellowship. While it inculcates a veneration for religion and subordination to civil government and its laws, it studiously avoids affinity with systems of faith or sect, whether religious or political.

In becoming an Odd-fellow no sacrifice of your opinion—no change of your relations to the State—no loosening of the obligations which, as a good citizen, you owe to the laws and institutions under which you live, is required.

On the contrary, learn now and forever, that you cannot become an Odd-fellow, in spirit and in truth, unless you are grateful to your Creator, faithful to your country, and fraternal to your fellow man. Within the walls of a Lodge room we meet for mutual counsel, the relief of distress, and the elevation of human character. With pure hearts and clean hands must we come to such offices. Strife and discord, party and sect, which create heart-burnings and divisions among men, are banished by our laws without this counsel; and if, perchance, some thoughtless brother should so far wander from this injunction as to permit evil influences to control his actions, he must atone to the offended laws. We war against vice in all its forms. Friendship towards man prompts the contest—the gentle influences of Love supplies the weapons—Faith consecrates the effort and leads to victory.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must he a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no douht that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighhor in Batavia, N. Y.,. and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Ahdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What hecame of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

Publisher's Department.

Some friends are growing anxious, almost impatient, to see more accomplished in our work against secret societies. They desire to see the churches of Christ unitedly exposing the false Christ which professes to take men to heaven in some other way than by the merits of Jesus of Nazareth.

They desire to see our local, State and national governments withdrawing the charters from these schools (the lodges) which are educating the American people in dishonest trickery and servile obedience to a despotic power (Masonry,) which lives and fattens upon the generosity of free institutions while at the same time she is industriously undermining them.

We believe that a greater work will be done against these orders this year than during any of the years just gone. But to be practical, WHAT IS THE FIRST THING TO BE ATTENDED TO!

During the months of July and August the subscriptions of one-fourth of all our subscribers expire. Hear this again. During the next two months more than twelve hundred subscribers expire. This means that agents must be up and in the field for renewals and new subscribers. It means that friends must look at the labels on their papers and forward renewals. It means for many a sacrifice of personal ease this warm weather. But if you are true to the trust conferred to you it also means an advance on the enemy's line. Summer is the time to work if you expect a harvest in the fall and comfort through the winter.

From "OUR MAIL" you will see that the situation is understood by some. Let every man do his duty.

Nearly seven hundred subscriptions expire in August. Those whose time is out then, who wish to send in a good number of new subscribers with their renewals, had better begin to canvass now.

We would send extra copies of the Cynosure, or circulars and subscription papers free, to those who ask for them for canvassing purposes.

Please look at the label on your paper if you do not remember when your time is out.

The Minutes of the Syracuse Convention are now out in pamphlet form. They possess more than usual interest to the general reader. They contain the paper presented by Elder David Bernard, author of light on Masonry, concerning which Mr. Ellsworth of Connecticut writes: "I have just finished reading Elder Bernard's expose before the Syracuse Convention. Its enough to make one's blood boil! And my mind is that it should be put in tract form and scattered like autumn leaves from one end of the continent to the other. Let the cost be what it may." They also contain the speech of Charles W. Greene on the grange, showing its evils. These two papers alone are worth the whole cost of the Minutes, but they contain others which are very valuable, besides a full report of the Convention.

Send orders. Price, single copies, 25 cents; $2, 00 per doz., post paid. $12, 00 per hundred, expressage extra.

Topics of the Time.

FOUR DAYS DEAD ALREADY.—The political parties of the country have been four days dead already. The Democratic party is buried, but the Republican has been hitherto denied the rights of sepulture and yet lies on the surface offending the nostrils of both enemies and friends. Gen. Logan, in alluding to this state of things, lately asked, of what persons could a new party be composed if the old parties, including all the voters of the country, were so hopelessly corrupt. The answer is this: the word party does not at present denote the men who vote a certain ticket, but the office holders and office beggars who get it up. The vast mass of voters in this country are busy attending to their farms, stores and offices, and vote for candidates they may happen to prefer. There is no issue on which men vote at all. Slavery is gone and if it were here, nobody would vote for the author of the black laws of Illinois because he loved the slave. When we say that both parties are hopelessly rotten we mean that such men as Butler, Logan, Salsbury, Wood, Carpenter, Cameron, et id omne genus, are men who have only one care and that to retain their places. They go into power on a hard money platform and inflate the currency fifty-six millions of dollars. They promise civil service reform and make every appointment to accomplish a political end. They talk country, and mean self. This is the trouble with existing parties, i. e., with office holders and office beggars. Now the change desired is this: To send almost every present incumbent of high office to private life and then let the people bring to the front men like Charles Francis Adams, who have self respect enough to keep them from the low arts of demagoguery by which perhaps two-thirds the present Senate and House have attained their power. When once offices seek men, and men who seek office cease to obtain it, a vast gain will have been made.

AS RESPECTS COWS.—The papers of the country have lately been full of the Misses Smith's cows, that is, of remarks concerning them. The case stands thus: Some maiden ladies in Massachusetts believe that taxation without representation is tyranny. They hence refuse to pay taxes on their property until they are permitted to vote. The authorities believing it is right to tax women, whether they are represented or not, have sold the cows belonging to these ladies. Hence these cows are in all the papers. It is interesting to note, however, that a large majority of the editorial comments are simply funnyisms. No attempt is made to discuss the issue raised whether or not taxation without representation is unjust. A plea for personal liberty is dismissed with a joke about Massachusetts spinsters. It is useless to dismiss a real, vital question in this way. In Boston property worth more than fifty millions is taxed in the names of women. If a like amount belonging to men should be taxed and its owners be deprived of a vote in the distribution of the tax it would cause a rebellion. We have yet to see any rational objection to woman suffrage. Is it said than many women are physically incapable of exercising the right? So are many men. Is it asserted that large numbers of women do not want to vote, and would not if they were allowed to do so? So many men do not vote, and by reason of this fact we have seen New York under the rule of the ring; Pittsburgh locking up praying women; Cleveland knocking them down in the street and Chicago mob hissing them from the council chamber to the church. Is it said that women can't go to war? Hundreds of them did go to the front and do service that saved the lives of thousands of soldiers, while multitudes of blood-sucking officials were drinking, smoking and saving the country at home. It is about time to have a reason for selling the Misses Smith's cows. If it is just and right to tax women and then let men who do not pay taxes expend the money, all right; only let us have a definite understanding of the matter. A good solid reason we want and no coarse joke or silly moonshine talk about the bloom of the lily and blush of the peach. If men are the God-ordained rulers of women, all's well. If not, all's wrong. And wrongs cannot be perpetual. They contain in themselves the seeds of their own dissolution.

THE RAIL-ROAD WAR.—The late decision of a United States Circuit Court respecting the railroads of Wisconsin is attracting universal attention and various opinions. The state of the case is this. The legislature of Wisconsin passed a law reducing the passenger and freight tariffs of the railroads of the State. The companies refused to obey this law. Its agents were prosecuted for violating it, convicted and fined. Certain stockholders appealed to the United States court for an injunction to restrain the State courts from enforcing the law. The argument for the injunction was that the law, if enforced would prevent the railroads from paying interest on their bonds, i. e, was a law impairing the obligations of contracts. The argument against it was that by a clause in the constitution of the State the charters of the roads could be altered or repealed by the Legislature. The attorney-general said that the State could compel the roads to pay over their entire gross receipts as taxes, if it was so disposed. The decision was that the injunction could not issue, and that the State courts might enforce the law.

In this controversy, as in every other, there are two sides. The rail-roads have unquestionably been guilty of extortion and injustice in many cases. They have received aid from towns and then built up other stations so near by as to rival and destroy them. They have by brutal employees assaulted and injured passengers; refusing to make the wrong right until compelled by the courts to do so. On the other hand they have run risks themselves. They have aided in national defense and development. The movement against them arises primarily from the injustice which they have practiced. It is now engineered by political schemers who take advantage of a just popular indignation to preserve or procure political power. The roads should be compelled to respect the laws and in cases where they are guilty of extortion they should be punished. On the other hand the average legislator of Illinois, Iowa or Wisconsin is just about as well qualified to arrange a rail-road tariff as Matt. H. Carpenter or John A. Logan are to lecture on political morals. The whole question of rail-road management is a vast one, one that can only be comprehended after long study. To elect a parcel of men to regulate rail-roads, is to elect a parcel of demagogues. The State has the same right to confiscate farms that it has rail-roads It has a right to do neither, and if it is attempted only evil can result.

One Hundred Years Hence.

AS SUNG BY GEO. W. CLARK IN THE SYRACUSE CONVENTION.

One hundred years hence, what a change will be made
In morals, in Masonry, religion and trade—
In men who now falter and ride on the fence;
These things will be altered a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

Lying, cheating, and fraud will be laid on the shelf,
Men will neither sell "Rum," nor be wrapped up in self—
But all live together as neighbors and friends,
Just as good people ought to—a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

Instead of speech-making to justify wrong,
All will join in the chorus, swelling freedom's glad song;
The Maine law shall then be a temperance defence—
We'll keep time to that music a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

Our laws then will be just and equitous rules,
Our prisons converted to National schools;
The pleasures of sinning—'tis all a pretense,
And the people will find it so, a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

Then woman, man's equal, a voter shall stand,
While beauty and harmony govern the land;
To think for one's self shall not be an offense,
For the world will be thinking a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

The reign of the demon shall crush us no more.
Nor the foot of a slave leave its print on our shore;
To "Rush to the battle," be a needless expense,
For mankind will be BROTHERS, A HUNDRED YEARS HENCE,
A HUNDRED YEARS HENCE!

Rochester, N. Y.

Charles Sumner's Father.

The father of the great Senator, lately deceased, was a conspicuous Anti-mason during the struggle that took place from 1828 to 1832; not that he was especially active as a partizan; butbecause at an early date he publicly renounced his Masonic obligations, and withdrew from all connection with the institution. This was at that time a very brave act for Masonry was powerful in Massachusetts, and Mr. Sumner held the important office of Sheriff of Suffolk county; was a man of high standing, and had much to lose from persecution.

Nevertheless, he gave his views in a frank manner, and in such a spirit of candor and kindness, that his testimony had great weight.

This course on the part of Sheriff Sumner, drew upon him the hostility of the fraternity, but his character and position were such that he was able to stand firm, and passed safely through the storm.

We have not seen this fact alluded to in any of the eulogies that have been passed upon his illustrious son; but those who were well acquainted with the facts regard it as a striking evidence that the generous, self-sacrificing spirit that characterized the latter, had been manifested in a scarcely less striking manner, by his father.

Charles Sumner came honestly by his love of freedom and justice, and his hatred of all oppression and wrong. His mother was a noble woman, and Charles inherited many of her characteristics. In size, for she was a stately person, in features, he greatly resembled her; and it is gratifying to know that she lived to see her son the most conspicuous statesman in the nation.

Forty Miles in a "Smoking Car."

BY REV. N. CALLENDER.

A smoking car! And what is that? No one would guess it to be a place where men (not women, thank God!), but males of the human race, made in the likeness of God, "a little lower than the angels," congregate to suck the smoke of a deadly poison weed, right into their mouths! To an eye unaccustomed to the sight, what a strange scene! But to us, cigars, huge pipes, called by pet names, spittoons, smoking cars, and smoking caps and suits, are as common as yellow bugs and apple-tree worms in summer.

Let us then, dear reader, go into that smoking car, and while there reflect—if we can in such a place. Come we first, then to the two who smoked incessantly through the whole forty miles of our smoking-car experience. One of these we must call the little pale man—not pail though his pipe was in size a pail; not so very small, with a huge horizontal bail stuck in the side, the other end of which the pale man held in his teeth. Whether this man was so very small or pale, could not be so easily settled in a cloud of smoke, and in juxtaposition with a black pipe so large as to render things around, in appearance, small. This man, we take it, was the most devout and self-sacrificing worshipper of the tobacco god in the car, as he burned more incense, in a larger censer, than any other one and seemed himself to be gradually going into the incense of devotion to this tobacco god. The other one which smoked perpetually, was the engine; but for this there seemed to be an adequate reason.

We will next look at a genteel man two seats in front, with a short cigar, whose devotion was nearly ended, judging by the length of his ritual. He was so near us we longed to see him through, that we might catch a breath of pure air. Soon a halt is made, when out goes the man with the short ritual, and there comes another to the same seat with one of full length just lighted. When we saw that the number of worshippers was kept good, though continually changing, our hopes of a respite from the sickening fumes gave out and we left the car, feeling sad and nearly sick.

From the facts which struck our senses while in that smoking car, we took the following conclusions:

1. The average number of worshippers in the car through the forty miles, amounted to about ten. Ten men continually burning incense in every such car, to the tobacco god! What a host of these worshippers there must be! What a sacrifice of money and life, mental and moral!

2. These tobacco devotees are drawn from the widest range of social, moral, and religious standing and life. Men of high and classic brow, clad in finest of suits, mixed up with the most brutish of men, squinting far down toward a Darwinian ancestry. Men high in the churches, of lofty religious training and views, wearing titles too lofty for fallen man, "meeting on the level" of a smoking car with infidels and libertines in common devotion to the filthy tobacco deity, and, seeming at least, to "part on the square" of equal debauchery and degradation. Where, save in the smoking car and in the lodge, do men so wide apart in every social, intellectual, and religious quality, "meet on the level and part on the square?"

3. The uncleanly character of tobacco-using struck our senses. See that fine looking young man, with a very costly suit of broad-cloth, all new, with his arm on the window-sill. He spits through the window. Now a large mass of ashes falls from the cigar on the window-sill, into which he drops his arm with the fine coat. But what of that? Only soiling fine cloth. Look at the manhood,—soiled inside and all over!

4. What vile and idolatrous practices are fostered in Christendom—in so-called Christian churches! Men in their sacred offices, wearing high titles, talk of the coming millenium in words of eloquence almost seraphic, while in the pulpit, having just left their tobacco quid or cigar-stump in the basement of the church to be swept up by the poor sexton. Such was the case in a late anniversary of one of our missionary societies! Men high in the church, devising ways and means, by self-sacrificing efforts, to convert the poor heathen from sinful, sensual habits to a holy life!

Could we imagine the millenium, with the elect gathered from the east and the west, the north and the south, in grand convocation with "palms in their hands," crowns on their heads, and—and—tell it not in Zion—quids pipes and cigars in their mouths! This the millenium? Not yet. The day is postponed by consent of the church and the clergy. "The King of Glory would come in," but the gates are held down by tobacco, and the everlasting doors blockaded by the tobacco divines. Will not the temperate outside ones, and even the intemperate, say to these tobacco-smitten D. D's, "Physician, heal thyself?" Talk ye of the conversion of the world? Were the world converted to the level of the churches as they now stand out to human view, it would be less than half converted. "A pure Christianity is the world's only hope." Our churches have embraced only a weak dilution of the "glorious gospel of the blessed God."

Covetousness, secretism and intemperance, now constitute a triune devil, who has joined the church and now carries letters of commendation from thousands of church dignitaries. 'Lord, save, for the godly man ceaseth."

Origin and Design of the Grange.

Having been in the West for several years, we have seen almost every phase of the "farmers' movement," from the first organization of the "farmers' clubs," to the "Patrons of Husbandry" or grange.

We have tried since the organization of the grange, to find out, if possible, its real origin and design.

The deputies, who organized the granges in the West, held out the idea to the farmers that the grange was an investment that would yield them large returns for capital and labor expended; in securing to them 'cheap transportation of their products East;" "in buying supplies at wholesale prices; in advancing their knowledge of the science of agriculture, and in increasing their social enjoyment." These were some of the advantages that were claimed to be afforded by the grange.

If the first of these advantages has, to any considerable extent, been realized, we are not aware of it. If the second has been realized to any greater extent, we would ask any candid business man, whether the same could not have been accomplished without the grange? That it has been done in many parts of the country, is a fact that cannot be set aside. We claim that the farmers' clubs deserve the credit of "bringing down prices," about which the grangers prate so much and so loud. That the third advantage could be as well secured by any other organization as the grange, appears to us an indisputable fact; for what advantage can secrecy be to the advancement of agricultural knowledge? As to sociability, we think every one must admit that a secret organization of any kind cannot claim the advantages in this respect that could be afforded by an open society. And especially is this the case where the masses are to be reached with this sociability.

Having shown that the grange has not, and can not accomplish its pretended objects, we ask what then is the real object of Patrons of Husbandry? Like Herschel, who, after finding so many hypotheses false, at last discovered the truth, so we have thought of one which, so far as we have examined, promises to solve the problem and show the real origin and design; not only of the grange, but of many other secret societies.

The grange appears to have originated in the orders of the Freemasons and Odd-fellows, and to contribute directly and indirectly to their support and existence. It may be asked, "Why suppose this its origin? How does it support these orders; either directly or indirectly? How does the grange perpetuate Masonry or Odd-fellowship?" These questions we have presupposed, and purpose giving them a reasonable, and to us, a very satisfactory answer. It has been admitted by some of the learned members of the Masonic fraternity, that the only object of that order at present, is to perpetuate itself. We are also told by Masons, that the rights and ceremonies of the grange have been taken from the Masonic and Odd-fellow rituals. It is also held by Masons and Odd-fellows, that many will eventually join their orders through the influence thrown around them in the grange, and the curiosity excited by its ridiculous ceremonies. It is also a noticeable fact that those who have opposed the grange have been treated by Masons and Odd-fellows as their common enemies. It is upon these facts, and the observation of several years, that we have based our hypothesis, and founded the theory now under consideration. And here allow us to remark that our information has been gained through legitimate sources, and generally unsolicited by us.

THE ORIGIN OF THE GRANGE

is shown to be in Odd-fellwship and Masonry, from the fact that a large proportion of the lecturers, State and National deputies were either Masons or Odd-fellows; and from the fact that but few members of these orders belong to these subordinate granges. It is also noticeable that the political papers (and local) edited by Masons and Odd-fellows, have, from the first, used every measure in their reach, to render the grange popular with the farmers. The advantages of using are, that they are more easily understood by those of these orders who should join the grange, and consequently would be more likely to be elected to the highest offices of the grange, especially "masters." The way this is usually managed, is for some one (the deputy or some other Mason) to suggest that the ceremonies are somewhat like those of Masonry, and of course if an influential Mason is present, he is elected "master" of the grange.

There are (as stated above) usually but few Masons or Odd-fellows who are members of the subordinate granges, and these are members who are thought to exert the greatest influence with grangers who are not Masons or Odd-fellows. These manage to control the votes of the grange so that, in case of an election in the township or county, Masons are elected to the most important offices, purporting, of course, to be grangers. In case a Mason or Odd-fellow outside the grange is a candidate for office, then Masons in the grange raise the demagogue howl that "the grange is not a political institution, and we must elect the best men to office, regardless of party affiliation."

The "county council's" meet once a month or oftener, and are composod of "masters and past-masters" of the subordinate granges (Masons of course.) They plan the political campaign, and arrange with the "State Agent" (a Mason or Odd-fellow) to purchase supplies for the county and subordinate granges. The "State Grange" is composed of delegates from the subordinate granges, masters, past-masters (Masons usually), and their wives. These make laws for the subordinate granges, and elect officers for the "State Grange," and delegates to the "National Grange," from their own ranks; appoint the "State Agent," who arranges with Masonic and Odd-fellow firms to furnish supplies for the granges of his State. The officers of the National Grange, State granges, State and county agents, get large salaries, and these, together with "mileage and per diem paid delegates to State and National grange and other contingent expenses," absorb all the funds. So here is where that Iowa twenty-cent corn went to. Just behold that magnificent "Masonic Temple" in Philadelphia, that cost $1,500,000, and others in Boston and Chicago. This is what these Masons and Odd-fellows want with the money of Good Templars', granges, land leagues, Sovereigns of Industry, besides the uses of these orders cited above.

Farmers of the grange, do not be discouraged,—the Centennial celebration of these United States will be held in Philadelphia in 1876, and we want something that will interest those monarchial Europeans who cross the briny deep to get an idea of the political importance and state of civilization to which this "glorious Republic" has attained. The grange by introducing a secret society which pretends to meet the wants of the farmers, and thus breaks down the already strong sentiment against secrecy. At the same time it awakens in the youth of our land, a curiosity to go further into secret societies and tempts them to join the Odd-fellows or Masons, being told it is "much better than the grange."

It also prepares the way for other secret societies controlled by Masons and Odd-fellows, which contribute in the same way to the perpetuation and support of these societies. Some of these have already been introduced in the West; such as "Farmers Protective Associations" (land leagues), "Sovereigns of Industry," and many others. It is through this vast system of secret societies, that Masonry wields its political influence and accumulates vast sums of money, on which to carry on its work of darkness. The Odd-fellows are among its first emissaries. We have conversed with Odd-fellows, Good Templars and grangers, who have had ample opportunity of knowing persons who can be relied on, and such are their views. Our own observations and experience for several years, abundantly proves the same facts.

What then is to be done in order to stay this great maelstrom of corruption, and save the country from anarchy, and the church from infidelity and paganism? We know of but one course to pursue, and that is to raise the standard of the Cross against all secret societies, of whatever name or pretention; and to go forward in the strength of the Lord against the hosts of Satan, until his kingdom shall have been subdued and the kingdom of Christ shall have overcome all opposition, and He be acknowledged the only Lord and Master of earth, and the Supreme Ruler of the Universe. This then, is our only hope. "We must fight if we would reign," and our prayer should be,

"Increase our courage, Lord,
We'll bear the toil, endure the pain,
Supported by thy word."

An Unwilling Initiate.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Agreeably to your request, I forward a statement of an incident that transpired in the Masonic lodge in Strafford, Vermont, some sixty or seventy years ago, as they were related to me by some of the members of the lodge, who were then present, and witnessed the circumstances.

A certain wealthy farmer built a large dwelling house, and constructed a large hall in it, for the accommodation of the lodge of Freemasons in the town of Strafford, Vt. A certain young lady who worked as a house-maid in the family of the landlord, having occasion to sweep the hall, discovered a small hole in the plastering overhead, and, putting up her broom stick, made the apperture a little larger, and when the lodge met again she went up garret, and as there was no floor in the garret she crept over the hall on a wide collar-beam, and looked down through the hole to see them initiate a candidate. She saw on the altar three lighted candles, and saw the candidate led round the room with a rope round his neck, hoodwinked with a bandage over his eyes, "neither naked nor clad, bare-footed nor shod;" having one arm out of his shirt sleeve; his pants stripped above his knees; a shoe on one foot without any stocking, and a stocking on the other foot without any shoe. They then ordered him to kneel at the altar, and placed his hands on the square and compass lying on the Bible, to receive the oath of an Entered Apprentice Mason.

The Worshipful Master then administered the oath to him, and then called upon the brethren to reach forth a helping hand, and assist him in bringing this poor blind candidate from darkness to light. All the members of the lodge then stood in a circle around the candidate at the altar, and one stood behind him untieing the hoodwink. When the Master said, "Brethren, as I do, so do ye," then made two noiseless motions with his hands and foot, all the brethren imitating his motions; and at the third motion they all clapped their hands and stamped their feet on the floor, making such a loud noise that the poor girl was so frightened that she suddenly jumped off from the beam on to the lathing, which gave way, and down she fell among them; and instead of bringing the candidate from darkness to light, he and all the lodge were in total darkness; for the falling plaster had put out the candles on the altar, and screams of the girl, together with the dust of the plaster, frightened them all, and some choked, and others fainted, and before they could get light by opening the windows, they began to think that the old grand master of the fraternity had come for them, and the smoke of the bottomless pit filling the hall was suffocating them.

After they were all brought from Masonic darkness to the light of day, and those who had fainted were revived by being held with their heads out of the windows, and the free circulation of the air of heaven had relieved those who were choking, the Worshipful Master ordered them to seize the eves-dropping girl, and never to let her go out of the lodge alive! She screamed and begged them to spare her life, and at the intercession of her friends, who were present, he revoked his order, and proposed that she should take an oath to keep secret and never reveal anything she had seen or heard in the lodge-room, with which she complied, and kept the secret till she read Morgan's book, and then she concluded she was under no obligation to keep it any longer.

QUERY.—Can this be the circumstance on which the new degree was founded for the admission of women to Masonic lodges? Or was that degree instituted for the purpose of imposing upon the ladies by making them believe they know the secrets of Masonry, when they don't know a syllable of them? Wonder if Freemasons remember their oath never to be present in any lodge at the initiation of a woman?

Castes in Society.

Caste is a particular grade of society produced by hereditary distinctions, attainments, profession, or occupation. These castes are elevated or depressed according to popular opinion. In some communities, that which would produce nobility and honor, in another community would produce ignominy and disgrace. Human scales which profess to give us the relative value of the character of different classes of men vary, according to the rules by which those values are determined. The divine scales never vary, but give us exactly the same decision at all times and with all classes. It presents but two castes—the righteous and the wicked. Its decisions are not varied by hereditary distinctions, worldly attainments, profession, or occupation; but are governed entirely by the purity or impurity of the heart. The human standard of valuation of the castes never recognizes the spiritual status, but the worldly—the external.

The Gospel allows no distinctions or castes among its adherents. No one is allowed to say to his fellow, "master," or "father"; for they are all one—brethren or equals—in Christ Jesus. When any member of Christ's church allows himself to be elevated above his brethren by title, or in spirit, by consenting to receive honors of superiority, or coveting the applause of men, he is drinking in the spirit of the world, and will lose his first love. A church governed by such an influence will be divided into high and low castes, just like the world.

The advancement of true Christianity and real civilization in a community may be known by the equalization of society. The exalted will be brought down, and the abased will be elevated. But when society is by any means made more unequal in its advantages and enjoyments, it is receding from Christianity and drifting into heathenism. With God there is no partiality in the government of his creatures, therefore, the nearer men get to him, the less partiality there will be with them.

When a nation is drifting into a position of inequality among its citizens, as to profit, privileges and honor, it is going down in civilization, and tending to revolution and destruction. A government that will enact laws tending to elevate the higher and oppress the lower classes, is committing suicide. When a nation elevates as rulers scheming speculators and grasping misers, it is weaving its own shroud, and digging its own grave.

According to these principles—the truthfulness of which we think but few will dispute—the world to-day is rapidly drifting to the vortex of ruin. Why is there such a universal cry of oppression among the lower classes? Why such convulsive throes among the hundreds of millions for more equality? It is because the gulf between the higher and lower classes is becoming wider and more impassable every day. The higher caste have more than heart could wish, and their eyes stand out with fatness, while the lower grade are lean with hunger, and starving where there is fulness of bread. A few, comparatively, are hoarding up the bounties of Providence, which were given, not for the few, but for all.—Crisis.

A Hindrance to Temperance Reform.

The following testimonial is from an oration delivered in the chapel of the University of Rochester, N. Y., May, 1873, by E. G. Paine:

Another great reason of this apathy, is the inefficiency of existing temperance organizations. This inefficiency proceeds from two causes—one radical, the other adventitious. When Father Matthew came to this country, after reforming drunken Ireland, and found secret societies supplanting the Washingtonian movement, he said: "What do we want of secret temperance societies? We want all the world to know about temperance, and to have it." Gerrit Smith, in his appeal to the anti-dram-shop party, dates the decline of the temperance reform from the organization of such societies, and says that it was due principally to their influence. For purposes both of prevention and reform, the principle of secrecy is radically defective. It encourages a man to lean upon others, and thus weakens his self-control, which is his only hope. "If you want to reform a man," says Senator Pomeroy, "do not ask him out of sight of the world, but commit him before men. Put his arm in yours and walk with him before the world, and let him feel the honor and dignity of the new position."

A natural outgrowth of this principle is the idolatrous feeling manifested by members of these orders, which leads them to sacrifice the interest of the cause to the prosperity of their society. This feeling is evinced by their political wire-pulling, and by their opposition to the formation of open societies, and indeed, to every form of temperance work which does not expend its money and energies under the direction of the lodge.

In proof that they are not working for the temperance cause, but against it, let me cite a comparison of votes and voters instituted by a Good Templar. According to his showing, there are 75,000 Good Templars in the State of New York, and the temperance candidate for governor in the last election received, in all, only 1,489 votes. He admitted, also, that these could not all have been cast by Good Templars. Allowing them one thousand of those votes, and that two-thirds of those seventy-five thousand members were not voters, still, only one out of twenty-five thought enough of the cause to vote for it.

"Nothing is more clearly inculcated in the Scriptures than that if we are not advancing we are retrograding. 'From him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath,' figuratively expresses that what we do not use for advantage shall be to us a loss. If a man has attended to religious observances, without having become stronger in faith, and more ready for self-sacrifice in the performance of duty, he has, in fact, been growing Pharisaic, and under an exterior of piety, will become selfish and callous; but this change may be so gradual as to be unobserved by himself. He may be self-deceived—perhaps will rest in the belief that the external form has intrinsic merit, perhaps be satisfied with the estimate in which others hold him, which estimate is based on his exterior life—but, by the judgment of God, as predetermined in the Scriptures, he will be pronounced a hypocrite."—Dana.

Reform News.

—Workers in New York will notice that Elder J. L. Barlow has changed his residence to better accomodate himself to his field. His address is now 48 Chestnut St., Syracuse, N. Y. Let him have plenty of work and encouragement.

—Friend A. M. Durfee, of Sherman, N. Y., wishes Bro. Stoddard to know that his lectures at Findley's Lake, N. Y., had the right effect. The lodge, like Bunyan's giant, Pope, gnashes her teeth, but the brethren who oppose are clad in truth's panoply, and fear not. Bro. Durfee says he will give the Masons tracts, etc., till they have enough, if it takes $100.

—Elder Dempsey lectured June 19th at Altay, N. Y. A brief report says it was well appreciated by those who liked its doctrine. Probably lodge men had some appreciation also, though of an unwilling kind.

—A convention was appointed to meet in the court-house in Marion, Grant Co., Ind., on the last Wednesday in June (24th), to consider political action and nominate county officers. Friends outside Grant Co. want to know what has been done. Any report, brethren?

—Bro. L. N. Stratton spoke in Tiskilwa last week, and has an appointment in Wheaton on Friday evening.

Masonic Cowardice—From the Ohio Agent.

BRO. KELLOGG:—I returned last night from Sandusky county, where I lectured and preached eight times from Sabbath morning until Thursday evening; three times on Sabbath, twice on Monday, once on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday each. My labors were somewhat scattered, so that I spoke at five different points in the time; three times at South Riley, twice at North Riley, once at East Riley, and twice in Townsend. My last lecture on Thursday night was at North Riley, where it seems the Masons or their "Jacks" were determined to wreak vengeance upon me; but not having courage sufficient to inaugurate a contest openly, in which I could act a part in the drama, they made use of their characteristic expedient, and preferred darkness and secrecy, "because (of course) their deeds were evil." So while I was lecturing they had the magnanimity (?) to employ some one of their serfs sworn to obey every sign, summons, nod, or beck that their masters might communicate, to turn my horse loose.

Well, finding my horse gone, and it being a borrowed one, and I being some six or seven miles from the depot where I intended to take the train next morning, of course my cogitations were anything but the most pleasant, and I was not sparing in my denunciations of the man who was either the originator or the perpetrator of so base and cowardly an act. However, a good young brother soon had a horse and conveyance ready and took me to Mr. Miller's, from whom I had borrowed the horse. After some search the horse was found on the premises about midnight, minus the saddle-blanket and the bridle. Well, upon the whole, our friends are hopeful, and feel sanguine that the leaven is working, and that our cause is progressing and destined to ultimate success, in despite of the rage of the open enemies, and the under-tone croaking of sycophants. I promised to give another series of lectures in other parts of the county after the busy time of harvest is past, when I hope we shall be able to organize the county, and get it in a position to do more aggressive and efficient work. The Rev's C. Hepler and S. H. Ridebaugh, were with us, and they are both wide-awake, active co-workers with us in the cause of truth and righteousness, in opposition to the works of darkness.

The only draw-back, is the difficulty in getting our friends to see that the cause can only be prosecuted to a successful issue by all giving it a hearty financial endorsement. There certainly is no class of men any where to be found, who are making greater sacrifices, and brooking more formidable opposition, and unrelenting hate, from unprincipled demagogues, and their allied slaves, than those men who have thrown themselves into the yawning chasm, that threatens the demolition both of church and state. But for this rather dark feature in the work, I could say that it is most pleasureable to me to be thought worthy to take a part in this most magnanimous and commendable work in conjunction with my worthy co-laborers. May Heaven interpose to so overrule, as to avert this ominous cloud, and let gleams of light and sure presage of immediate relief in this, as well as in all other departments of our reform, dawn upon us.

Yours uncompromisingly,
D. S. CALDWELL.

Shut out of Church.—From the Illinois Agent.

FARM RIDGE, Ill., July 8, 1874.

DEAR BRO. K:—I do not know that any village in Illinois has grown so rapidly, and considering its age, is a place of so much importance as Streator, La Salle Co. As might be expected the secret orders are numerous and powerful, the Masons holding the first rank. There is, however, quite a strong Anti-masonic sentiment and it is growing. The United Brethren, the Evangelical Association (Albrechts) are each building a house of worship, and the Free Methodists are, I learn, preparing to build. Through the assistance of Rev. Wm. Bridgeman I had obtained the consent of three out of five of the trustees of the Park Presbyterian church to lecture in their house on the evening of July 2d. The lecture was announced by the paster, and bills were posted. I went to fulfill my appointment and found the house locked against me. It seems that one of the trustees —who is a Mason—was absent when the consent was given, and on his return protested against it. Without giving us any notice, and too late to get another place the order of the trustees was revoked. I lectured on the steps to a fair audience, who did not fail to see that the despotism of this lodge respects no one's rights, and that if Masonry is tolerated in any church it will rule or ruin. Since then I have lectured twice in the vicinity, and obtained some fourteen subscribers for the Cynosure, which is pretty well for this sultry weather.

Yours for Christ,
H. H. HINMAN.

Opposition to the Grange in Kansas.

CLIFTON, Washington Co., Kas.

I will give you a brief account of my labors and experience in the cause of reform on secrecy. I am traveling on the north-west district of the Kansas Conference of the United Brethren in Christ, and in view the strenuous efforts of lecturers and deputies of the grange, to extend their order, without regard to the feeling or interests of members, or the division of churches, I have felt it my duty as a "watchman on the walls of Zion," to give warning to the people. Hence I have spoken or lectured on the subject of secrecy, chiefly on the principles of the "Patrons of Husbandry," twenty-one times since our Conference last fall; besides assisting Rev. J. Dodds, of Winchester, in the discussion of the secrecy question, with two Masons of Leavenworth, last January, a brief notice of which was published in the Cynosure.

At some points where I spoke on the subject, before the grange secured an organization, though many of the people were intending to join, the influence has turned against them, and they have utterly failed to secure an organization. In other places where they had granges, it has silenced the boastings of the order; stopped their increase; and caused some to openly renounce them. I verily believe that a fair expose of their organization and constitution in each neighborhood, before they organized, would have effectually hindered them from getting more than one-half the number of organizations which they have.

I find that a large majority of the members are almost utterly ignorant of their constitution, i. e., of the National Grange; although they are sworn to conform to, and abide by it. Many have said they had not seen a constitution, except the one the deputy had when he organized their grange. A circumstance or two, illustrating this, may not be uninteresting to the readers of the Cynosure.

Last winter, after preaching one Monday night at Cedarville, in Smith county, a number requested I should talk to them a while on the principles of the grange. The question being submitted to the audience whether they wished to hear, all voted for me to proceed, except the chaplain of the grange. I then proceeded to speak on the subject, and gave opportunity for any one to make remarks, or to ask for explanations. One man rose and said he had been much interested in hearing the remarks; but he liked fair play, and would like to hear from the grange side, and therefore he called on Mr. Clark (the chaplain.) Mr. Clark arose and remarked (I believe the words following are those he said): "I differ with the gentleman, and think his arguments can easily be overthrown; and, if the people will come out," (naming a night) "next week, I will knock them higher than a kite;" and he sat down. His closing remark caused a smile. I arose and remarked that if the gentleman succeeded in overthrowing my arguments, or knocking them higher than a kite, he would have to buy or borrow a constitution; for he told me yesterday he had never seen one; but he expected they would get one in the grange soon. This brought the audience down on him with stamping and laughter; and he had no more to say.

Another circumstance, showing that they are afraid to have their constitution investigated; although it is not claimed to be required to be kept secret. Last spring, in consequence of a snow-storm, I failed to get to a quarterly appointment, and in company with a Bro. Bowers, stopped for the night with a master of a grange. He was in great glee over the order, having had a county council meeting in their school-house the fore part of the week. After listening to his boastings for some time, I ventured to quote a little from the constitution; not being prepared to defend it, he said he thought I had not got that correct. I told him I had read it, and from my observation they did not circulate the constitution so that the people might know what their principles were. He remarked, "O, yes, everybody could have it—it was not secret; he had four or five laying around loose." In the course of conversation, I quoted again, and he said I was mistaken; that the one I quoted from was not genuine. I then drew the constitution from my pocket and asked him to get one of his and compare them. He withdrew and looked this way and that, and finally said he had given them all away. So I could not get a comparison. Thus we see, the spirit of dissimulation is fostered by secret obligations.

Permit me to give another, and a lamentable evidence of the corrupting influence of the secret obligations. At the close of my remarks at the Ballard school-house, in Washington Co., an officer of a grange in Marshall Co., who came to speak for the grange, after talking quite confusedly for some time, and meeting none of the objections I had presented, finally said the constitution from which I read was not genuine, but gotten up for the purpose for which I was using it. Immediately his backers commenced a heavy stamping in confirmation of what he had said. I arose and remarked that I understood such argument as the stamping of their feet, and I proposed to settle that question by comparing my constitution with theirs; but they would not do it. It was the first the people in that community had heard against the grange, and persons in and out of the church were shocked at the combined manifestation of falsehood by the grange. The language of inspiration came forcibly to my mind, and I felt as I suppose Jeremiah did when he said, "Oh! that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears." Some of them were professors of religion.

At another place, the Ontario schoolhouse, Nemeha Co., having traced the ancestry of the grange through Masonry, the secret order of the middle or dark ages, and the Eleuysinian and Dyonisian mysteries, back to the mysteries of Isis and Osiris in Egypt; and shown some of the doings of Masonry in the last century, as quoted from "Robinson's Proofs of a Conspiracy," in "Levington's Key to Masonry," some Masons being present became very angry, and one rose and asked if I intended to insult Masonry. I answered that I did not think that any person could reasonably consider it an insult to read from well authenticated history, facts set forth therein. He said that Masonry and Odd-fellowship were above suspicion, and did not need defense. I spoke of the Masonic authorities which I had. He said they never wrote anything they wished kept secret.

When the meeting was closed a strange lady, who with her husband had moved into the neighborhood, remarked to sister Wilson that she would like to relate a circumstance to me. Sister Wilson introduced me to her, and she related the following: When she was about fifteen years old, she worked awhile in the family of an Odd-fellow. At one time he left one of his books out. She got the book and read it. As soon as he found she had read it, he sent for four of his brethren and they compelled her to take a terrible oath with the penalty of death, if she ever revealed anything that was in the book. Before the congregation went out I called their attention, and told the circumstance without giving her name. It seemed to make impression.

Last week I loaned the grange ritual, for subordinate granges, containing the form and arrangement of a lodge or grange; the initiatory ceremonies and oaths in the four degrees; installation of officers, and burial services; also their toast song, harvest dance, etc. I copied it entire.

I did not intend to write so much when I began; but permit me to add a part of "the Patron's toast" at the "harvest feast:"

"Here's to the grange! O brothers true,
And sisters fair and sweet;
Fill up, and pledge yourselves anew
As round the board we meet.
We've Flora crowned with fragrant flowers,
To Ceres brought the corn;
Pomona's fruits from garden-bowers,
Our table's to adorn.

"Here's to the grange, the dearest place,
For us, save Heaven and home;
We greet with joy each well-known face,
And friends we all become;
We link our hands the altar round,
With emblematic chain,
The solemn oath by which we're bound,
Was taken not in vain."

Meetings at Howell, Mich.

Bro. L. N. Stratton writes to the Wesleyan of the meetings at this place as follows:

"We found found Howell over-run with a circus. The meeting for the evening had been insufficiently advertised, as, for the last two weeks, including this, the notice had been omitted from the village papers. The posters had not been seen by even half the friends, and a part of the one hundred they had were thrown loosely into the wagons of farmers. Numbers of friends did not know, or had forgotten there was to be a meeting. But by the kindness and assistance of the brethren, we went around the streets and announced a meeting for Wednesday afternoon and evening, and Thursday afternoon and evening. We had good meetings, though not large.

On Thursday we were gladdened by the coming of Rev. J. H. Canfield, whom though not having see we loved. On one evening of our meeting as advertised, was the circus continued; on the second a well advertised strawberry festival. On the last evening the large Union School held an exhibition. We had all these to contend against. But the battle of life is always fought up hill, and to know defeat is not within the power of God's truth, nor should be of his servants. This is a locality where Bro. John Levington's influence is very much felt, as his last charge before he became "insane" (!) is the next station below. The brethren of the M. E. church here in Howell and down at Brighton, are daily praying that more of the ministers may become crazy in the same way. And their prayers are being answered. Rev. Mr. Springstein, an able and useful pastor has renounced Masonry, is being persecuted, and is on the high road to increased usefulness and heaven. Another minister of the same kind whose name is forgotten, adds one more to the list. The brethren here at Howell have their private prayer-meetings refusing to favor Masonry any farther in the M. E. church. They are very anxious to be organized into a Wesleyan or Free Methodist church if they can get a pastor. We understood that they preferred the Wesleyans on the whole. Certainly some one should seek to save them, as there is a large company that soon will scatter as sheep having no shepherd. They are sighing for Bro. Rathbun still, who lectured and preached here, and whom they had strongly hoped would come. Brother Canfield, who organized at Brighton and Pleasant Valley, has now a charge of near one hundred members, has built with the brethren a church at Pleasant Valley, which will be dedicated soon. Another at Brighton is contemplated this autumn."

Correspondence.

From Southern Kansas.

Coffeyville, Kans., June 18, '74.

Editor Cynosure:

While the Masons of southern Kansas—and I presume nearly everywhere else in the United States—are preparing a big advertisement for themselves on the 24th of this month, and the grange and the lesser orders of darkness are preparing for a grand display, their doings being puffed gratis by nearly every paper, and endorsed by nearly all the ministers,—I say while all this is being done, the agitation against secret orders is steadily going on, and there is no power on earth that can stop it.

The South Kansian, published at Independence, reports among other outrages at that place that an old man, named Perkins, was knocked down for saying that a Mason was no better than a horse-thief. If friend Perkins had said that a good Mason was no better than a horse thief he would have been about right, for it takes a very bad man to make a good Mason. I learn from a man just from Independence, that Mr. Perkins went to Justice Scott of that place, and tried to get out a warrant for the arrest of the man who knocked him down; that Scott told him that he was a Mason and that he must mind how he talks hereafter, and then told him that he must go somewhere else for a warrant. That is Masonic justice.

A stranger, a little intoxicated on the street a few days ago, said that he would not believe a Mason on oath where another Mason was interested, and said that Masons commit nearly all the crimes and all get clear. Another man that I had heretofore thought a Mason said, "When I make up my mind to be a rascal and a thief then I will fortify myself so as to be successful by joining the Masons, Odd-fellows, grangers and the M. E. church; then they can never get a jury to convict me."*

We have a little lodge of Masons in this city, organized last fall. They have been busy ever since roping in "green horns;" so this little flock of goats have not had any chance to advertise themselves and make a display of regalia until the recent death of one of their members, Esq. Hazard. This occurrence allowed them for the first time to my knowledge to show off; and a very poor show it was. The most sensible of the Masons did not turn out. The procession was composed of old men that looked as if they ought to have better sense, a few simpletons, and a few nice young men who might have made brilliant men had they not enslaved their souls to the dictate of a secret order. The ceremonies at the grave were about equally divided between the pagans and Christians, only the pagans got the Rev. Hedges, an Odd-fellow, Masonic M. E. minister to conduct the Christian part and seemed to make the two religions harmonize by leaving out Christ in the hymn and prayer. They went through with the usual amount of blasphemy by calling God a Grand Master and heaven a Grand Lodge. Rev. Hedges tells me that he is a Mason and an Odd-fellow, and that he never has seen anything wrong in either. I pity him, as being very dishonest, or very ignorant; and fear he is both.

The Masons are to have a grand time at Independence (in this county) on the 24th inst. (St. John's day so-called). Invitations are sent to all the lodges near here. In view of so much grand display I sent a short article to the South Kansas Tribune last week, calling on the Masons to turn out in mass; that I wanted to see them all and to hear their speaker tell which St. John was a Mason and how he could be a Mason when Masonry is only 157 years old. I also called on the grange to turn out and try and learn something from its parent, Masonry, and requested "Anties" to turn out and see the heathens, and closed with the following lines:

"Don't get frightened nor surprised,
At pagans dressed to advertise;
For its only Satan's brigade
Going out on dress parade."

OUR MAIL.

J. Lautz, Burlington, Mich., writes:

"I will try and raise some subscribers for the Cynosure, hoping you may soon have the required number. May God add his blessing to your labors of love."

Philip Bacon, Wheatogue, Conn., writes:

"Since I have been reading the Cynosure (three months) I have become very much interested in the subject, and feel a strong desire to be more enlightened in regard to Masonry, as I am satisfied that it is the cause of much that is evil in our community. There has not been within my remembrance any public opposition to the craft, and they have had it much their own way both in church and state. I became acquainted with Mr. J. A. Conant, of Willmantic, last winter, and through him my attention has been called to the subject. There are none in this section who interest themselves in your work except Mr. Reid and myself; . . . but we mean to do all that we can. When we have read the papers we give them a circulation, and hope that an interest may be aroused and that many more will become subscribers. . . We hope to be able soon to send you a list of twenty-five cent members."

He also sends for extra papers and tracts.

Dustin Reed, Seneca Castle, N. Y., writes:

"I have fought the enemy almost forty-eight years. I can last but a little longer. I was born in June, 1789. I can do but little, but I'll keep trying. I think I shall get some more subscribers in the course of this season."

Seward Robson, Italy Hollow, N. Y., writes:

"I have uses enough for my money but cannot do without your paper. Prof. Blanchard made music for the secretists at Hamilton when he lectured there."

Aaron Phipps, Eagle Harbor, N. Y., writes of a conversation he had with an old sick man at Lawton who said he had been a Mason forty years, and that living up to the first three degrees of Masonry will carry any man to heaven.

W. Banks, Phœnixville, Pa., writes:

The Christian Cynosure has a great work before it. . . I had become afraid to distribute tracts till last Sunday afternoon, I went out and found I gathered strength as I proceeded, thanks be unto God."

Wm. A. Bartlett, El Paso, Ill., writes:

"I want you to continue the paper until notified to stop it."

He says that he has been working for this reform for over forty years as a seceding Mason.

Edward Brown, Medford, Minn., writes:

"I do not agree with you on the Constitutional Amendment question; but I am with you heart and hand on the anti-secret order question, in all its forms."

A subscriber at La Grange, O., asks:

"How is it that Elder Bernard should become a Royal Arch Mason and be but twice in the lodge-room;" and also, "does tract number seven give the Master Mason's oath which is now used by Freemasons?"

By referring to the Cynosure of June 11th, page 12, he will see that it is stated that it was old Mr. Rollns from Vermont, not Elder Bernard, that was in a lodge-room but twice. He says the first time he was in, he took the first three degrees; and the second time, he took the Chapter degrees and was made a Royal Arch Mason. Tract number seven (Satan's Cable Tow) gives the Master Mason's oath as it is now administered in Masonic lodges. Masons now make (we have heard) some verbal alterations in it, but it is in substance the same thing.

Rev. A. W. Paul, Summer Hill, N. Y., writes:

"The Cynosure is always welcome, and since its enlargement is is more welcome, if possible, than ever. Ever since I have been a subscriber I have made it a rule to not allow it to be used as waste paper, but scatter them as tracts among the people with whom I labor. When I am riding to my different appointments I hand out the papers to the people I meet with on the road, and sometimes send one to a friend through the mail, when I think of one who has never read a copy. Sometimes I have the satisfaction afterwards of seeing their names in the letter list."

I. W. Lowman, Auburn, Ind., writes:

"I expect to do more for the paper. I love it and the cause it advocates. It meets with many sympathizing friends and will do great good."

David J. Ellsworth, Windsor, Conn., writes:

"I have been in receipt of your paper, the Cynosure, the past three months, and have got much interested in the work and object. I will remit the subscription price ($2.) for a year. I have kept clear of secret societies, but wish to aid in enlightening others and warning them against this foul and loathsome carcass, "Freemasonry." I have just finished reading Elder Bernard's expose before the Syracuse Convention. Its enough to make one's blood boil! And my mind is, that it should be put in tract form, and scattered like autumn leaves from one end of the continent to the other, let the cost be what it may. The Cynosure is my style. I am a free man in Christ, and will not be brought under the power of any. Am decided and outspoken, and love the truth. I feel like enlisting in this warfare, to fight while life shall last, not fearing what man may say or do unto me. There are two important items Elder Bernard does not mention in his paper, viz: the time, and money, worse than thrown away. My next neighbor is a Mason, and he declared to me the other day that Masonry had never been revealed; that no true Mason had ever uttered any of its secrets to the world, etc., etc. There is a lodge in this town; and three ministers (?) in it."

Bennet Chalfant, Mt. Vernon, Iowa, writes:

"I prize this paper so that I cannot afford to miss one number. You may count on me for a life subscriber."

T. F. Hallowell, Haldane, Ill., writes:

"I like your paper well, too well to do without it."

P. W. Taintor, writes from Chapin, Ill:

"I think that you soon will get some more subscribers from about Springfield. It is a stronghold of Freemasonry. Many men about there are strongly opposed to it, but are not well enough posted on the disclosures to feel independent enough to take a decided stand."

Jas. Springer, Springerton, Ill., writes:

"We intend to make a stir against secretism in this corner. We are not organized, however, and hence cannot work as effectually as we could wish. Yet we mean business just now."

Dr. L. C. Cook, Albion, Ind., writes:

"Please call the attention of Rev. J. P. Stoddard to Mr. C. W. Reeves, Plymouth, Ind., who may be a valuable accession as a political help in our cause. He is a lawyer, and shocked the fraternity here on the Fourth by hitting them hard in the face on the secrecy question in a public speech."

As we all wish to know our friends we quote this here. There are no Cynosures taken at Plymouth. Cannot some one commence a club there with Mr. Reeves name?

J. Fink, Mt. Vernon, Iowa, writes:

"Please put me down as a life member. I will do all I can for you."

H. H. Lingo, Bealsville, O., writes:

"When I wrote you a month ago, sending you three new subscribers, I was hurried, and did not tell you about the petitions you sent me. A delay in the mail caused them to be late reaching me. I only had one day to operate in, but I got on my horse and started out in the morning, and at night I had sixty-seven names to the petition, three subscribers for the Cynosure which I sent you. Yesterday I rode all day to see our three month's men whose time is out and to get new subscribers, but had bad luck; the times are so hard here money is almost out of the question; we have had no rain here to amount to anything since the first week in May. Consequently, our grass and oat crop is a failure. The farmers cannot sell their cattle, from the fact that the pastures are so burned out they cannot get them fat, and you can't give thin stock away here now. J. M. renews for three months more. He is an Odd-fellow and says you do know something about secret societies, but he won't tell what it is."

We are glad you have called on the three month's subscribers. During these months while hundreds of such subscriptions are expiring, we hope so far as convenient, those who sent them in, will obtain, if possible, renewals, if not new subscriptions to take their places. This is a good time also for those who have not commenced to work to begin.

Forty Years Ago.

The Influence of a Paper.

In an open letter published in August, 1828 from Henry Jones, pastor in Cabot, Vt, is the following paragraph:

"Considering Masonry as I have for several years, it has been my endeavor to occupy the position of neutrality respecting it, not encouraging its celebrations, funeral formalities, etc., until perhaps the fore part of April last; when, receiving something of an Anti-masonic lecture from a Christian friend, not a member of our religious society, I soon consented to take up, as I called in at a neighbors, the North Star, which represented the Masonic institution to be immoral and corrupt; and on being told that one of the editors, who had formerly been a Mason, had now renounced it, and declared its secrets to be out, on obtaining satisfaction with regard to the credibility of the man, my mind was at once attracted to see what reasons he had assigned for such a course. From this time, being out of the society of the fraternity and alone, as it were. I continued to borrow and read that paper, and examined that subject until I became satisfied that the time had come when it was my duty, at least, to withdraw my connection from the lodge."

He accordingly sent a letter to that effect to the lodge with which he had been connected, which published in the Vermont papers, that King Hiram Lodge of Waitsfield had "voted unanimously that Henry Jones, now residing in Cabot, a Master Mason, and a member of said lodge, be expelled therefrom for unworthy and unmasonic conduct. Printers in the United States, friends to the cause of Masonry, are requested to insert this in their papers."

No man is answerable for having in years past, been a Freemason. But the time has arrived that has produced a new era in the affairs of the institution. The people are determined to put it down and they will never desist till the object is accomplished. Yet Masons who conscientiously and honestly renounce their idol, are everywhere joyfully received by the good and the virtuous with open arms.—Seneca Farmer.

LESSON XXX.—JULY 26, 1874.—THE PUBLICAN CALLED.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK ii. 13-17. Commit 13-17; Primary Verse 17.

13 And he went forth again by the sea side; and all the multitude resorted unto him, and he taught them.

14 And as he passed by, he saw Levi the son of Alpheus sitting at the receipt of custom, and said, Follow me. And he arose and followed him.

15 And it came to pass, that, as Jesus sat at meat in his house, many publicans and sinners sat also together with Jesus and his disciples; for there were many, and they followed him.

16 And when the scribes and Pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and sinners!

17 When Jesus heard it, he said unto them, They that are whole have no need of the physician, but they that are sick: I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

The Great Physician,	verse	17.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

At the beginning of this chapter, Jesus has returned from his first preaching tour of Galilee. If you have a map, by drawing a line around the outer towns and cities you can tell nearly where he went. As he came back, many scribes and Pharisees came to hear and see. We have next "the healing of the sick of the palsy." Find out who the helpers and who the hinderers were, who was the healer, and who was healed. Are you helpless or healed, a helper or hinderer?

What is the first topic? What sea was this? Who followed him? Why? (Mark iii. 8.) Did all that follow him believe on him? Will following save if we do not believe? Really, we cannot follow if we do not believe!

What is the second topic? What name is given him in Luke v. 27? What in Matthew ix. 9? The publicans were tax-gatherers for the Romans, and were very much disliked by the Jews. They often oppressed the people, and extorted money from them. What did Jesus say to him? What does Luke say, chapter v. 28? Did he wait, or bargain, or ask questions? Does Jesus call individuals now? Did he ever call you?

What is the third topic? Probably this was some little time after the call. What happened? Whose house was the feast in? Who were called? The publicans and sinners were old friends of Matthew. Why do you think he invited them to eat with Jesus? Is that a good way to bring sinners? Who do you think were pleased? Was Jesus pleased? Who were displeased? Did they wish to go to the feast? (I think not.) Did they wish others to go? No. Do you think Jesus ever eats with people now? Does your papa or mamma ask "a blessing?" Ask them to invite Jesus. Do you think he boarded with the widow in 1 Kings xvii. 9-16? Has he made any feasts? Will you be there?

What is the fourth topic? Who heard what the grumblers said? Does he always hear? (Do you ever find fault?) Did he answer? Repeat his answer. Who is the physician for? Who is the sick man for? Who is Jesus for? Are you for Jesus? We find Jesus when we believe that we are sinners.

LESSONS. Christ calling sinners by name. The way to follow. The feast a sinner made for Jesus. Asking other sinners to meet him. The people who found fault. The feast Jesus spreads for sinners. —National Sunday-School Teacher.

The Social Nature of the Sabbath-School.

The Sunday-school can be a success, only where all elements of strength are duly worked. Its social spirit must be warm and cheerful, yet thoughtful and reverent.

It is not the awfully good people, who win the young to Christ, nor the light, trivial people, but the true, genuine, earnest people.

The Sabbath-school should be like a home. We do not enjoy visiting, where a frozen respectability stiffens every moment, nor where a course, rollicking familiarity disgusts us, but where an easy refinement makes a genial atmosphere of kindness. The Sabbath-school ought not to be conducted like a state funeral. Neither ought it to be kept in a perpetual titter; —the Superintendent telling stories with far more fun than piety in them, and all the exercises carried on upon the "high pressure" principle of excitement and hilarity.

There is an atmosphere of home-like cheerfulness in the school where the social element is properly used; officers and teachers greet each other, and the scholars, warmly, cordially, heartily. Differences of social standing that, elsewhere, keep the poor reminded of the shabbiness of their clothing, and the coarseness of their manners, are entirely ignored here.

In the model Sabbath school, everybody is kind to everybody, because everybody loves everybody, for Jesus' sake, who cares for us all with such an infinite tenderness. Everybody's face reflects the beaming of his kindness, in a way that is altogether good and pleasant; "like the dew of Heaven, when the Lord commanded his blessing, even life forever more."

Children are specially susceptable to these influences. They attract them as certainly as do pretty clothes, dainty food, bright flowers, or sweet music. They know intuitively whether your cordiality is sincere, or whether you are condescending and kind, from a sense of duty. Only the plenitude of the love of Jesus, can make Sabbath-shool workers genuinely social.—Natl. S. S. Teacher.

Now prayer is always appropriate, but it is not the only thing to be thought of. We may cry to God till our voices fail. He will not do for us, what we ought to do for ourselves. Such efforts remind one of a priest who was walking over the fields of his peasant parishoners, blessing them, and praying for good crops. "No use in praying here," he said, when he came to the land of an indolent farmer; "This ground must be worked better."

A Sabbath-school scholar who does not study, goes to school at a great disadvantage. There are many children who think the lesson paper is so easy and so handy, that it needs no study. All they want to do is to look over it for five minutes, and then run away to school, thinking they know something about it. If these children would catch their teachers at this sort of work, they would raise a great commotion about it. If it is the duty of the teacher to know the lesson when he comes to the class, it is as much so of the child. A studious child makes a studious teacher; for if the child knows something about the lesson he compels the teacher to keep up at least even with him. If there are four or five children in the house, it is pleasant to study the lesson together; and if father and mother will help them, and do it pleasantly, it will be all the better.

Home and Health Hints.

A Timely Topic.

What is true with regard to the necessity of adapting one's regimen to a change of country has its application also to variations in the weather at home. The diet of summer should vary from that of winter, and the instincts of many persons direct them rightly. They are careful to modify their food as well as their clothing when warm weather comes on. Others, however are no so careful and sensible. The substances that develop carbon, such as fat meat, are eaten as largely in June as in December, and the fruits, which are in a double sense seasonable, are neglected. Hence many of the cases of diseases of the digestive organs, so common in summer are produced, while persons of more than ordinary strong constitutions are far more warm and feverish than they need be.

It is not our purpose to dilate on facts which may be found in any popular work on sanitary science.

We have merely glanced at a few points as a reminder of the truth that people can so adapt themselves to extreme heat as to be measurably comfortable with the mercury at above ninety in the shade. It is scarcely necessary to add that exposure to the sun and excessive muscular exertion are to be avoided. Drinking profusely of iced beverages by persons in a heated state, the danger has been so plainly shown by repeated instances of sudden death, that no warning ought to be required. Yet it is only a few days since a St. Louis barkeeper sought to check his perspiration and cool his blood by getting into a large ice-chest. He succeeded in effecting his object, but the artificial chill thus superinduced was soon followed by the coldness of death. To wind up, we would advise all sufferers from the "heated term" to keep cool, if they can, and, at all events, to be careful not to fall into such mistakes in diet, drink, or exposure as to help the weather in making them uncomfortable.—Cincinnati Gazette.

If your child is naturally feverish and restless at night, let its diet through the day be principally oat-meal. This affects the kidneys most decidedly, and will be far better than a dose of nitre that physicians so frequently prescribe for this trouble. If this feverish state be from worms, which you can soon find out by observing if the upper lip is swollen or blue, the nose pinched or white, if the child rubs the nose, especially at about sun down; the child getting more irritable at that time, freakish at the table and perhaps vomiting its food, with or without a pendulous stomach, some or all of these characteristics being present, a glass of sweetened milk will seem to quiet the worms and allow a restful night for the little one. If you are sure it may be from this parasite, drinking freely three or four times of summer savory tea, if the child will take it, or the same quantity of the herb, dried, stirred into syrup, may be received by the child satisfactorily. If this is not effectual, santonin, six powders in one-eighth grain doses, four hours apart, should be sufficient for any child between ten months and four years of age.

For the Sydenham Scarlet Fever.—This, in its incipiency, generally requires nothing but a nice pack in tepid water, or a bath is better, if the child will take it. Putting several compresses upon the back, changing as frequently as they get heated, plenty of gruel, corn meal is best, without milk, well salted. If the child should be delirious, as is usual at night, one or two drop doses of belladonna may be given, if you give the attenuations give them in water as they will give a more satisfactory result. If the child is of a restless, irritable habit and will not keep still from habit as well as from this trouble, rub the spine well with lard or bacon oil.

For inflamed eyelids, pulverize starch finely, put into a little thin muslin sack and place over the lids at night. this has been useful when cerates and lotions have irritated.

Farm and Garden.

Under-Drainng.

Abstract of the address of Dr. Geo. C. Heckman, President of Hanover College, to the Farmers' Club of Hanover Township:

UNDER-DRAINING, THE POOR FARMER'S MINE.

All lands do not need artificial draining to produce fair crops; but there is very little land that would not be improved by under-draining. All high lands that contain too much water at any season require drainage, if the water injures the particular crop, or prevents the ground being prepared in time for the crop. Such land may be used permanently for grass, with top dressing, and occasional plowing and seeding, but even for this use it would pay to under-drain. Careful attention to the color of crops will show where draining is especially needed. Their yellow spots and slow growths are nature's prayer for tiles; they do not show bad soil as often as watered soil.

DOES UNDER-DRAINING PAY?

"How much its cost per acre" depends on circumstances, and will vary therefore according to locality and the amount of labor that could be done by permanent hands on the farm. The elements of the estimate are these:

The cost of engineering and superintendence, and excavation, depending on price of labor, nature of soil, and depth of drains; cost of tiles, determined by size and frieght; and the laying and filling. If laid in stone it is easy to determine the comparitive cost. Stone only to be preferred when on the ground, and tile too expensive on account of distance.

Where the work is well done, it is a permanent work, there being reason for thinking it may last a hundred years. Will it pay? So far as I know, I never knew of a case wherein it did not? The increase of one-sixth average productiveness has been the lowest report I have heard. In many cases twenty-five per cent. on the investment, is reported. In a heavy clay soil one reports from six to ten bushels of wheat extra. A farmer near Indianapolis tells me all his farm has been under-drained but what was naturally the best, and now that is the least productive.

There are other valuable ways in which it pays. It makes farming more regular as to seasons because less dependent on weather. It makes farming easier, because it gives more time, from four to six weeks annually, for work. The soil is dryer, more friable and therefore, more easily worked. There are no spots to work around, or to be worked over without return, but the plow has a straight stretch. Any practical farmer can take the above facts and cipher out for himself how —not only are there far larger returns for the labor and expense of working the farm—but how the labor and expense are visibly reduced.

CLAY SOILS,

especially, invite under-draining. They need it more; it can be done cheaper than in any other soils—the drains are far more permanent—and the land generally provides the kind of clay needed for tile making.

To sum up—other things being equal, a well under-drained farm may be regarded as the poor farmer's mine, and the rich farmer's bank.

Fattening Cattle.—The editor of the Cultivator and Country Gentleman says: Bousingalt estimates that an ox weighing 748 pounds, fed on 40 pounds per diem, will increase in weight about 2 pounds daily. According to Mr. Low, an ox weighing 770 pounds and consuming 2, 223 pounds of turnips per week, if he thrives, will gain in the same time nearly a stone, 14 pounds in weight. Allowing 100 pounds of hay to be worth 676 pounds of turnips, the increase is still about 2 pounds a day. Mr Dubois says the quantity of green fodder consumed by an ox during the eight months when he is fattening is equivalent to 6,600 pounds of dry hay. The average ration of green forage per diem he calculates, therefore, as equivalent to about twenty-seven pounds of hay. But this average is evidently too small, particularly for cold weather, which was proven in the valley of Auge in Normandy. Mr. Stephenson estimates that 57 per cent. of the whole animal will be butcher's meat; 8 per cent. tallow; 6 per cent. hide; and 29 per cent. entrails. This of course depends upon the condition of the beef—a fat one will yield a greater per cent. than a lean one. Others give the per cent. of meat at 53 to 62 per cent.

Grain for Poultry.—There is no other grain that is relished so well by fowls as Indian corn. It must always continue to be, as now, the American poulterer's main reliance, for, although for fattening to use in certain cases, it possesses more nutriment for the price than any other grain, and is always to be obtained. Corn can be given ground and unground, raw and cooked. Oats we prefer ground fine, as otherwise the hulls are too harsh and bulky. With wheat-bran and middlings, wheat in the kernel, barley and buckwheat, there need be no difficulty in avoiding monotony. Rye, though the poorest grain of all, may be given occasionally, and brewers' grain if convenient.—The Poultry World.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, July 16, 1874.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

PRINCETON, Ill., July 8, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:

Freemasonry is struggling for the control of this country by controlling its centers of influence: town, county and State. Every minister, and especially every Congregational minister, who will not bow the knee to its idolatries in the lodge, or make himself an outside supporter of it, is marked and quietly slandered down; his congregation is thinned by an invisible hand; his excellence ignored; his faults and frailties magnified, and himself put at a discount.

Since I left home I stopped with a minister, who has given little attention to and taken no part in the lodge-discussion, but who is an honest man. An old college comrade called on him, who is a Knight Templar. He was rejoiced to see him; told him he "had not been in a lodge for three years," and the minister thought his friend cared little for Masonry. I asked him if he had not been in a "commandery" within three years? He blushed and stammered out, "I have been in a commandery once in three years." But mark, he did not say he had not been in more than once,—he has probably been a constant attendant. Thus this old college friend was deceiving the man whose bread he was eating, and whose hospitality he enjoyed!

The moment a young man sets his face to seek success in life by secret advantages, he is a dishonest man entering on the pathway of dishonesty.

I learned from this Knight Templar that Mr. Powell, of Aurora, nominated as State Superintendant of our schools, is also a Knight Templar. Of course he has drunk the fifth libation from a human skull, invoked a double damnation on his soul, if he violates any one of the seventy-two oaths which he has taken, which oaths bind him in confederacy with the worst of mankind. Are the schools of the State of Illinois to be guided, and our boys influenced by such an example as this? If our schools and youth are to be corrupted by such examples, we are certain to follow the lost nations.

I hope measures will be taken to question Mr. Powell, and unless he will leave so wicked and corrupt a combination, he should be opposed as vigorously as we opposed the desecration of the Chicago Custom-House. The school lost, all's lost. As I write, word has come by the paper that the savage pursuit of Gen. O. O. Howard still continues. President Grant has given him, however, the important department of Oregon. Yours truly, J. B.

THE UNITED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

The lodge is a confederacy; not a brotherhood. By no explanation, physical or moral, can that name be anything but an assumed one. Sworn allies, offensive and defensive, the supreme principles of love and law have no recognition in their union. The oath makes the bond, and pride, fear and selfishness rivet it. The cunning and deceit of the devil in giving the name "brother" to the dupes of the lodge had its purpose—to carry out the false and soul-destroying system in every particular. Christ applied the word to his followers in the new and glorious relation perfected by the Cross and the Resurrection; but the race in general are "neighbors" by his uniform use of the word. What then must complete the lodge system, after a substitution for the death, burial and resurrection of Jesus, the new birth, the allegiance of the soul to God as the highest authority, and his Word as supreme law, but to steal and misuse that name, which, aside from the limited natural relation, belongs solely to the family of saints.

So, as the conscience of the churches is awakened to the dark system, and Christians become separate from it by disfellowship, must we expect the true idea of brotherhood to prevail? The soul struggles that go before such separation from sinful fellowship; prepare the way for that which is true and holy. The churches and denominations which have reached this ground, must feel a union with each other, a mutual reliance, which the progress of our cause will develop and strengthen; in denominations that foster independence, individual churches, as they put away the lodge will be drawn to each other, spite of doctrinal lines, and in the more centralized systems churches will become independent, or take themselves by independent action from the tainted pastures of one denomination to the pure fields of another. And in proportion as the lodge system is seen to be the darkest and most opposed to the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, will the fellowship of those churches and Christians who thus recognize and oppose it, be confirmed and blessed of God. The brethren who lately dedicated a house to the unmixed worship of Jehovah in Marengo, those whom Bro. Travis assisted in a like joyful occasion in Ohio, the praying bands Bro. Stratton found in Michigan, all feel a quickening of their love toward those who by God's help, will not countenance this conspiracy of Satan.

And this brotherly affection should be cherished and strengthened. It should be felt year by year more strongly in our annual meetings. For its growth and perfection let us pray and work until all who are in Christ, "called to be saints" and brethren of our Lord Jesus Christ, see eye to eye on this question.

THE FIRST ILLINOIS DISTRICT.—This district is composed of seven wards in Chicago, fourteen towns in Cook county and the county of Du Page. Its present representative in Congress is a gentleman by the name of Rice. He has thus far attained to fame in but a single instance. A post-master in his district, a maimed man, was turned out and a Freemason put in his place. For this courageous, high-toned act he will doubtless expect to receive the votes of the inferior class of Freemasons in Du Page county. The better members of the fraternity, however, will despise the author of such a meanness as others will, and if a decent man is nominated a heavy vote can be polled against him; enough at least to throw the election into the hands of another candidate. The question is not whether it was a manly thing to do, not whether Freemasons are proper persons to hold office, but whether Mr. Rice owns the post-offices in Du Page county and can use them for his own individual aggrandizement or not. The detestable doctrine, that men whom we elect to serve us are to be our "Right Worshipful Masters" and distribute offices around among those who will work to re-elect them, has gone about far enough. There are a hundred men in Du Page county who are superior to Mr. Rice in ability and incapable of the mean act by which he has gained the only laurels he wears—turning out a man who uses a crutch to put in a personal retainer, against the will of the people of the town. Let every American citizen in the first district who loves fair play look around for some fair man to fill this Congressman's place.

TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS.—A paragraph has been going the rounds, stating that the congregation of Prof. Swing had lately raised twenty thousand dollars to discharge a debt resting on the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Chicago. The impression created was that the money was given under the inference to be drawn was as any one pleased. If a man chose to say, "What a great man Prof. Swing is!" no one would probably object. It seems, however, that the money was not given. A set of ten per cent bonds were issued and these bonds were sold on the Sabbath. In other words the church became for the moment a Chamber of Commerce, and the congregation a Board of Trade. "How long, O Lord, how long!" Is this the Christianity of to-day. God in his great mercy give us humility for our sin and grant his spirit to lead us nearer to himself!

NOTES.

—The Masons of Philadelphia are more modest than their allies of Chicago. The latter, after securing an invitation from the government authorities to lay the Custom-House corner-stone some months ago, put off their ceremony to June 24th, their fabled saint's day, thus to inspire the gaping crowds more fully with their supreme dignity, and fix in their minds the anniversary of their order. In Philadelphia the corner-stone of the public buildings of the city were to be laid. It was an event of public interest and a public day, July 4th, was chosen; but the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania were at length called in to parade their rites, so loathsome to every American heart. The "order," as usual, faced out their assumption of superiority in the procession and exercises. But it must have sounded strangely on a freeman's ears to hear, after the Masons were through, the words of the Declaration of Independence recited, and the orator of the day say: "One hundred and eighty years ago, when this city and this province was a wilderness, William Penn, then the proprietor, dedicated this very spot of ground as the suitable site for the Public Buildings of his projected city." That was before the birth of Masonry, but had the revered Quaker surmised the desecration of the time and place he would no doubt have made his gift a provisional one, and the transactions of Independence day would have been the forfeit.

—On corner-stones, a correspondent in Kansas City, Mo., writes: "We have just had another Chicago ease of corner-stone laying here. The State is building an orphanage, and the Masons were called upon to perform their ungodly ceremonies on the occasion of laying the corner-stone, one of our leading ministers performing the high office of orator. There were on the platform to my own knowledge, preachers of all denominations (for all the preachers in this city I believe are Masons) infidels, Mormons, Jews, and a goodly array of saloon keepers."

—A very remarked feature of the Chicago procession was the contrast in the physical and intellectual appearance of the various bodies. The more dignity, the more titles, degrees, badges, plumes, crosses and lodge fustian, the lower seemed the individual in the moral scale. Deacon T. T. Gurney, 33d deg., who marshalled the "Oriental Consistory" (32d and 33d deg. Masons) might not unjustly have been charged with disgracing his 'order" by putting at their head those whose countenances and persons showed most beastiality. The Odd fellows were much better looking men than the Masons, and the Knights of Pythias excelled either.

—Bro. Travis reports to the Free Methodist the dedication of a new house of worship in Summerfield, O., by the brethren who refusing to fellowship the lodge formed a Free Methodist church in that place a year ago. The church was dedicated June 21st. It is of convenient size, tasteful in appearance and well constructed. Bro. J. M. Rownds acted as building Committee and pushed forward the work to a completion in two months. Of the dedication Bro. Travis writes:

We preached on the occasion from Psalms xciii., final clause of 5th verse,—"Holiness becometh thy house, O Lord, forever." God, who by his blessed Spirit had visited us in the love-feast, owned the word; but it was at the sacramental board, after the 4 o'clock preaching, that the richer anointing was given;

"When heaven came down our souls to greet,
And glory crowned the mercy seat."

The prayer of our people is earnestly requested for the dear brethren and sisters in that locality, who in their isolation from any other society, and without knowing us except as set forth in our Discipline—not having met any of our preachers, except the writer—have from principle, and with desire to glorify God, thus come out to be a separate people; and this in the face of bitter opposition, in the very midst of tobacco-raising portion of the State.

—We call attention to the letter from the wife of a respected Baptist minister of New York and co-laborer in the reform on Rev. E. M. Spencer. The conversation related by Elder Bernard will be recollected. If the lodge can exercise such stultifying power over such men how must it doubly harden the heart untouched with the love of God!

—The late annual meeting of the German Baptists, commonly known as Dunkards, held in this State, discussed at some length one of their customs regarding the private examination of those seeking admission to their denomination. Many argued that it should be public to prevent the accusations of secretists that they were a secret society. On every hand, during the discussion, the principles of the body in opposition to the lodge were shown.

—S. A. Hurlbut, of Belvidere, Ill., a prominent defender of Masonry in the Ellen Slade murder case, is now working up a convention in the fourth congressional district of this State for a renomination to Congress. Honest men of that district will be recreant to duty if he is allowed to return to Congress.

National Christian Association.—Some good friends of our cause in remitting the fee for annual membership, enclose it in business letters to the editor or publisher of the Cynosure. Will not all remember that such letters should be addressed to C. A. Blanchard, 11 Wabash Ave., Chicago. It saves trouble to have such letters go to the place at once. Let every Cynosure subscriber collect twenty-five cents from all the Anti-masons in his neighborhood. Let fathers and mothers send the fee for their children. Then put the amount raised into a draft, postal order, or registered letter. Write down the name, age and address of each person, and send to the Corresponding Secretary, C. A. Blanchard, as above stated. Don't wait for cool weather to begin. Now is always the best time to do good. Two life memberships came in last month, and a large number of annuals, while nearly five thousand members tickets are now in the hands of devoted laborers in this cause. Send in the names and fees at once; we cannot afford to delay.

The Vail Removed is the title of a new book by a classmate of H. W. Beecher, being a review of the council which sat not long since in Brooklyn, and of the public utterances and writings of Mr. Beecher. Though not written in connected style, on nearly every page it brings Bible truth to bear in an impressive way upon the doctrines and known practices of the Brooklyn pastor. No one can read it without feeling conscience quickened and spiritual life deepened. Thousands of such volumes should be circulated to stay the churches from lapsing into liberalism and infidelity. Single copies 50 cts.; per dozen, $5.00. Address D. F. Newton, 303 West 20th St., New York.

ANOTHER GREAT CHICAGO FIRE.

OVER FOUR MILLION DOLLARS LOSS!

The "Cynosure" Office Safe.

Chicago, Wednesday, July 15th.

Just as the Cynosure was being prepared for the press (a little before 5 P. M.) last night, a fire broke out among a lot of wooden buildings near Twelfth street, and soon assumed the magnitude of a great fire, but few who laughed at the calamity to "Niger-dom," as that part of the town was familiarly called, had any idea that those flames would devour the great buildings on Clark, State street, Wabash and Michigan avenues, with one of the finest churches in the city, and the post-office building, and terrify the whole town.

By eight o'clock horror filled every breast as the fire swept on in the majestic, incontrollable avalanche of flame which marked the 9th of October, 1871. Wagons, omnibuses, hacks, even, were chartered by the merchants to take their goods to a place of safety, and millions of dollars' worth of property was soon "on wheels." All around the Cynosure office merchants were removing their goods, and our faithful horse, Idaho, took away three loads of our most valuable stock to a place of safety.

On swept the flames with unabated fury, sweeping away some of the finest blocks on this continent. About midnight the wind turned from south-west to west, blowing the fire into the lake, and hoped dawned on the terrible scene. An hour more, and all began to feel that God had graciously interposed to save the remainder of the city. Glory be to his holy name!

Religious Intelligence.

—The Presbyterian church raised $618,000 for foreign missions last year, being the largest sum ever raised for in one year for this purpose by any single denomination.

—Rev. E. P. Hammond, the revivalist, after conducting a series of meetings in Macomb, Ill., in which 300 persons were converted, has returned to his home in Vernon, Conn.

—The stated circulation of all the Methodist Episcopal weeklies, official and unofficial, is 219,700; of which the Christian Advocate, of New York, has the largest share of any, being 42,000.

—It is said that an effort is being made to have the evangelists, Moody and Sankey, return from their work in Scotland and begin a series of meetings in Chicago, for the evangelization of the city.

—The Presbyterian church at Lambertsville, N. J., (the Rev. P. A. Studdford, pastor) has been blessed with a copious outpouring of the Holy Spirit during the past few months. One hundred and seventy-three have united with the church since January.

—It was stated in a recent meeting of the German Lutheran churches of New York, that the number of German Lutheran churches in the United States is 4,450, the number of communicants, 550,000, and the number of ministers 6,000.

—The Moravians must be considered the leading missionary denomination in the world. One out of every fifty of its members is engaged in the mission service, and there are three members in the mission fields to one at home.

—The Inter-national convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations, lately met in Dayton, O.; though not so full as usual, the meeting was a good one. Richmond, Va., is selected for the next place of meeting, and after 1875 the conventions will be held only once in two years.

—On the decline of doctrine in England, the Congregationalist says there is a good deal of drifting among Congregationalists of England, and hints that many of the most prominent teachers of its theology are leaning strongly towards universal salvation. Some affirm that there is but an inconsiderable percentage of the London Congregational pastors who would be willing to preach anything resembling the old theology on that subject.

—The statistics of the United Presbyterian church for the year ending May, 1874, are thus reported: Synods, 8; presbyteries, 56; ministers, 595; licentiates, 53; congregations, 776; members, 74,833; Sabbath-schools, 625; scholars, 49,086; total contributions, $863,293; contributions per member, $11.40; five theological seminaries with 86 students, two colleges with 521 students; and property in seminaries, colleges, churches and parsonages, valued at $5,675,000.

—A Methodist missionary in Lucknow, India, writes as follows of some of the difficulties yet to be overcome in that country: "In Lucknow there are no less than seventeen printing establishments. One boasts of selling twenty thousand Korans in a year. All are engaged throwing out abominable trash, antagonistic to the Christian religion and good morals. Amid this work of death we must act our part well, and throw off our sheets of life faster than we have done in the past. The demand is large, and as we have the opportunity we must meet it. The government is not neutral, as it professes to be, but in the use of text-books and employment of teachers, lends its influence to Mohammedans and Hindus.

—A new style of free sittings has been introduced by the Harvard Congregational church of Brooklyn, Mass. It is substantially this: All who had previously purchased pews have relinquished them to the society, which now owns the whole without incumbrance; but these original pew owners are to have the right to lease them as long as they or any of their descendants continue to worship with the society, and pay such assessments as are necessary to meet any deficiency in the current expenses, for defraying which a collection is to be taken up on the fourth Sunday of every month. Three ushers are to be annually appointed, who must keep a record of all pews and sittings not leased, and shall direct to them persons desiring seats. It would appear that the leases are not to be paid for, but that they simply secure permanent seats to those wishing them; so that the church substantially adopts the free seats plan without giving up the reserved seat system.

News of the Week.

The City.

—A number of the prominent business men of Chicago are taking measures to provide picnic excursions for the poor children of the city.

—The communists of this city, who attempted to secure a fitting, under the title of the Workingman's Party of Illinois, in the Independent Political Convention held at Springfield last month, met on Sunday last and ungratefully resolved to abandon the farmers to political destruction.

The Capitol

—Under the new press-gag law, the notorious ex-Gov. Shepherd has brought two suits for libel against the New York Sun.

—The new government is making a clean sweep in the badly-managed affairs of the district, in reduction of laboring force, horses, carriages, rents, etc.

The Country.

—The city of Bloomington, Ill., is enforcing its ordinances against liquor-selling, with success.

—There is no longer any doubt that the Indians are on the war-path in considerable bodies. News from Ft. Sill, in the western part of Indian Territory, and from points in south-western Kansas and Wyoming Territory, tells of depradations and the slaughter of detached parties of whites. The settlers are preparing to defend themselves in towns, or are fleeing to the rail-road stations. Gov. Osborn and Gen. Pope are active in meeting the emergency and protecting the settlements. No doubt the occasion of the uprising may be found in depredations from the whites.

Country.

—Ground was broken for the Centennial buildings in Philadelphia, on July 4th. Mayor Stokley formally inaugurated the work by throwing three shovelsful of dirt into a cart.

—The Scientific American estimates the annual losses from fire in New York city, including the cost of maintaining the fire department, at $6,000,000.

—Several of the largest printing houses in New York have discharged all their compositors belonging to the secret union, and have employed non-union men.

—The country was surprised to learn last Saturday that Mr. H. W. Beecher had addressed a letter to the Examinating Committee of his church, asking for an investigation, and enclosing another letter dated June 27th (the day on which Tilton's charges appeared in the Golden Age.) The latter was addressed to six gentlemen in his church and society, whom he named as an investigating committee. These are persons of standing in New York and Brooklyn, and were immediately authorized to act by the Examining Committee. A careful and fair statement of the whole case is promised. On Monday Mr. Tilton published a letter promising to present the matter from his standpoint in full, supported by affidavits.

—On Sunday afternoon two more rotten dams gave way in Massachusetts, twenty-five miles west of Springfield. No lives were lost this time, owing to the slower motion of the flood and due alarm given, but about $350,000 worth of property is destroyed, of which the Boston and Albany railroad loses $175,000 by destruction of bridges and road.

—The prospect of abundant crops throughout the northwest is generally very good. Heavy rains last week turned the apprehensions of the drought. The wheat harvests of Michigan are reported as hardly excelled, and from Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa, comes a generally favorable report. South-western Minnesota is being severely ravaged by grasshoppers and crops destroyed. Gov. Davis is using every effort to supply the people, many of whom are in great destitution.

Foreign.

—In London on the 9th, Minister Schenck laid the corner-stone of Lincoln Tower, which is to be erected in commemoration of the emancipation of the negro slaves in the United States. Speeches and friendly interchange of sentiment in the presence of a large gathering, were features of the occasion. The structure will stand in a prominent position in South London.

—The affairs of the French government remain in a very unsettled condition. MacMahon has sent a message to the Assembly, in which he announces his intention to retain his office for the full term of seven years by all the powers conferred on him by the laws.

The Home Circle.

One by One.

One by one the sands are flowing,
One by one the moments fall;
Some are coming, some are going;
Do not strive to grasp them all.

One by one thy duties wait thee,
Let thy whole strength go to each;
Let no future dreams elate thee,
Learn thou first what these can teach.

One by one (bright gifts from heaven)
Joys are sent thee here below;
Take them readily when given,
Ready, too, to let them go.

One by one thy griefs shall meet thee;
Do not fear an armed band;
One will fade as others greet thee;
Shadows passing through the land.

Do not look at life's long sorrow;
See how small each moment's pain;
God will help thee for to-morrow,
So each day begin again.

Every hour that flects so slowly
Has its task to do or bear:
Luminous the crown, and holy,
When each gem is set with care.

Do not linger with regretting,
Or for passing hours despond;
Nor, the daily toil forgetting,
Look too eagerly beyond.

Hours are golden links, God's token,
Reaching heaven; but one by one
Take them, lest the chain be broken
Ere the pilgrimage be done.

A. A. Proctor.

Elijah Hedding.

In a sermon preached at Sea Cliff, Dr. Armitage of N. Y., related the following touching story:

One of the most lovely beings on earth, a man enthroned in my memory as no other is—there is no man, living or dead, that has done so much for me, except my old father—was a poor Methodist bishop. As I see him now, O how beautiful his face! how beautiful his life! I mean the venerable Elijah Hedding. What marvelous power he exerted over the young men who were entering the ministry.

I want to tell you one incident. When I was a young man I was attending the Conference at Schenectady, and Bishop Hedding presided; he stayed with a friend of mine, next door to the church. It was very hot weather in summer, and a brother was preaching who spoke quite loud. The Bishop could not go out, but remained in his room. After meeting we went to his room to see if he wanted anything, and we found him sitting by the open window, where he had been listening to the sermon. And, as one of our number said to him,

"Can we do anything for you?"

He replied with a tremulous voice, "Nothing, my son."

"Are you sick?"

"No, dear child, no, no."

"Can we do anything for you?" Tears were falling, and his breast was heaving and shaking, and he seemed bowed down with agitation. We were alarmed, and anxiously inquired:

"What is amiss, Bishop?"

"O," said he, "I will tell you. I have been sitting here listening to that brother while he was preaching. I could hear every word, and I have been examining my poor old heart to see whether I loved the Lord Jesus as much now as I did I was of your age, my boys."

As he spoke, his lips quivered, and tears ran. I said,—

"And what, Bishop, is the result of the hour's investigation?"

"O, my child, the result is written in the word; I can, with Peter, say, 'Thou knowest that I love thee!'"

I had rather have such wealth as that than all the wealth of the world. —Selected.

Sit Down for Jesus.

"Stand up for Jesus" has often been quoted by the professed followers of the Lamb, both in the ministry and in the membership of the Church of Christ, and we have the brief and pungent words freighted as they are with so much of feeling and meaning. They have proved a rallying cry to the Christian host in past ages; so may they continue.

But may not a thought be submitted here conversely? Does not evil arise from too much standing—from standing up too long and too frequently? Not long since we listened to a long drawn-out pulpit effort, in which there was much beating of the air and the Bible, but with no indications of milk for babes or of strong meat for men—and with but little appearance of thought, save of a failure on the part of the speaker. We secretly wished some one of his church or deacons would whisper in his ear, "Sit down for Jesus"; and I have no doubt but the Saviour would have been more efficiently and acceptably served at that time, than by his standing up in the pulpit any longer. I must say, if I was not edified it was instructive to me to be on my guard, when called to stand up for Jesus before the people, not to "beat the air, or the Bible," for the want of matured thoughts on the words of God. For more than forty years I have tried to stand up for Jesus and his word, and now I have more sense than to think that noise, and stamping, whirling, and violent demonstrations, are sure evidences of grace; or when seeing and hearing such discordant sights and sounds, I would say, Brother (or sister), sit down for Jesus. Or, when in prayer meeting a brother prays, "standing up," for the space of twenty minutes, bewailing his "coldness, and indifference, and ingratitude, and want of faith, and doubts of his acceptance, and informing God what a great sinner he is, and that he cannot speak one word or think one good thought," I would say, Sit down (or get down) for Jesus. Another repeats for the hundredth time his or her experience—that even the children have gotten by heart. Let such an one sit down in the closet and commune with the Father, through Jesus Christ, till he shall recieve some fresh and rich gems of Christian experience. Then may we expect God will be glorified in us and we in him.

Once more, when we sing, we may "Stand up for Jesus," by singing in the Spirit and understanding also. But when a brother or sister "breaks forth singing" the longest hymn, and in a tone unknown to all, or nearly so, the thought will come and struggle for utterance, Sit down for Jesus.

It is a difficult point to know just how long one should stand up for Jesus, but as a general rule, we think the gate should be shut, when the tide is out—in which case it is safe to "Sit down for Jesus."—Free Methodist.

"Is That the Way You Pray?"

The worst man in the village was Jack Ranney. He has a comfortable home, but it was not a happy one. As soon as the big gate opened, his two children, Nilly and Bob, ran into the house, exclaiming, "Father has come," and into the corner they crouched, and there they stayed until ordered to bed. There was no clapping of hands, no ruby lips turned up to receive father's evening kiss in Jack's home. No, his children stood in terror of him, for often after his day's work was done did he go home drunk, and then he was cross and would strike the first one who came in his way.

One day Jack was driving his cart and the harness broke, and his cart was backed into a ditch. Jack sprang from his seat and began to beat his horses most unmercifully with his whip handle, while oath after oath rolled from his tongue, calling on God "to damn his soul." A little boy had been rolling his heop up and down the pavement; but, when he heard the awful words, he caught his hoop in his hand, and stopped, saying, in a trembling voice,

"Is that the way you pray, Mr. Ranney?"

Jack turned in perfect astonishment, but said nothing.

The words of the boy set him to thinking and so troubled his conscience that in a little while he became a changed man. No swearing is heard now from his lips, and his home is no longer a home of drunkenness. Who will doubt that in his own way God will reward that littleboy for his brave yet gentle and considerate words?—Maryland Republican.

Judge Not.

Beware, says John Wesley, of forming a hasty judgment concerning the fortunes of others. There may be secrets in the situation of a person, which few but God are acquainted with. Some years since I told a gentleman, "Sir, I am afraid you are covetous." He asked me, "What is the reason of your fears?" I answered, "A year ago, when I made a collection for the expense of repairing the Foundry, you subscribed five guineas. At the subscription made this year you subscribed only half a guinea."

He made no reply, but after a time asked, "Pray, sir, answer me a question: Why do you live upon potatoes?" (I did so between three and four years.) I replied, "It has much conduced to my health." He answered, "I believe it has." "But did you not do it likewise to save money?" I said I did, "for what I save from my own meat, will feed another, that else would have none." "But, sir," said he, "if this be your motive, you may save more. I know a man who goes to market at the beginning of every week; there he buys a pennyworth of parsnips, which he boils in a large quantity of water. The parsnips serve him for food, and the water for drink, during the ensuing week, so that his meat and drink together cost him only a penny a week. This he constantly did, though he had two hundred pounds a year, to pay the debts he had contracted before he knew God!" And this is he whom I set down to be a covetous man!

Keep up Family Attachments.

One of the saddest things about a large family who have lived happily together for years under the old roof-tree, is the scattering to distant homes, which takes place as they grow up, one by one, to years of maturity. It is often the case that, in the cares and bustle of business, letters grow more and more infrequent, and finally brothers and sisters will sometimes entirely lose sight of each other.

These kindred ties are much too sacred to be thus lightly severed. It takes such a little while to write a letter, and the expense is so trifling, that there can hardly be an excuse for the neglect.

A loving family circle, thus widely severed, adopted a curious but beautiful plan for keeping informed of each other's welfare. The two most remote, on the first of each month, write a part of a page on a large sheet containing the principal news of the month, and this is sealed and forwarded to the family next in order. Some member of the household adds a little contribution, and sends it on to the next, and so on till the circle is complete. Thus the family letter goes its rounds twelve times a year, and each one is kept well informed of the joys, sorrows, plans and pursuits of the others. Family gatherings are frequent in such households, and the old ome attachments never grow cold.

Sons in particular, away from home, are apt to grow neglectful of letter-writing. O if they knew how many heart-aches such neglect often causes to the loving breast that pillowed their tired heads in childhood, they would not be so thoughtless. If they knew the joy that a letter brought, and could see how its lightest words were dwelt over, and talked over by the fireside, they would not be so sparing of those messages.

Are not some of us sadly in arrears in this particular?—Star in the West.

Aversion to Manual Labor.

The practice of educating boys for the professions, which are already overstocked, or for the mercantile business, in which statistics show that ninety-five in a hundred fail of success, is fearfully on the increase in this country. Americans are annually becoming more and more averse to manual labor; and to get a living by one's wits, even at the cost of independence and self-respect, and a fearful wear and tear of conscience, is the ambition of a large proportion of our young men. The result is that the mechanical professions are becoming a monopoly of foreigners, and the ownership of the finest farms, even in New England, is passing from Americans to Irishmen and Germans. Fifty years ago a father was not ashamed to put his children to the plow or to a mechanical trade; but now they are "too feeble" for bodily labor; one has a pain in his side, another, a slight cough, another "a very delicate constitution," another is nervous; and so poor Bobby or Billy or Tommy is sent off to the city to measure tape, weigh coffee or draw molasses.

It seems never to occur to their foolish parents that moderate manual labor in the pure and bracing air of the country is just what these puny, wasp-waisted lads need, and that to send them to the crowded and unhealthy city is to send them to their graves. Let them follow the plow, swing the sledge, or shove the foreplane, and their pinched chests will be expanded, their sunken cheeks plumped out, and their lungs, now "cabined, cribbed, and confined," will have room to play. Their nerves will be invigorated with their muscles; and when they shall have cast off their jackets, instead of being thin, pale, vapid coxcombs, they shall have spread out to the size and configuration of men. A lawyer's office, a counting room, or a grocery is about the last place to which a sickly youth should be sent. The ruin of health is as sure there as in the mines of England. Even of those men in the city who have constitutions of iron, only five per cent succeed, and they only by "living like hermits, and working like horses"; the rest, after years of toil and anxiety, become bankrupt or retire: and having meanwhile acquired a thorough disgust and unfitness for manual labor, bitterly bemoan the day when they forsook the peaceful pursuits of the country for the excitement, care, and sharp competition of city life.

Games of Chance.

The "passion for play" is fatal. Yet there is no end to the number of games that are nothing without dice. But the antidote is not always found in indiscriminate and wholesale condemnation. When Talleyrand wished to bring the Cross of the Legion of Honor into contempt he had it conferred right and left on whoever did any act in the least degree meritorious. The consequence was that this badge, once so highly prized, speedily sunk into contempt.

Cards are the resource of soldiers whose time hangs heavy on their hands, of sailors becalmed in mid-ocean, of frivolous girls, who have no ideas in their heads, of heterogeneous social gatherings. For an intelligent, rational being to waste time in throwing dice, shuffling cards, oh, it makes life seem such a farce. Is there nothing nobler to occupy this immortal being?"

An occasional like dose of moralizing always administered with wisdom and discretion, will take the undue fascination out of these games, if in connection with this another course is pursued. Boys and girls must have amusement, and that parent who is part and parcel of the jolly circle of which his children form a segment, will control the hearts of those children as by enchantment. We all remember the story of that lame Athenian poet who was chosen to lead the army of the Spartans to victory, and did it by the inspiration of the songs he composed for them to sing as they marched against the enemy.

In administering moral antidotes we need constantly to remember the parable of the tares and the wheat, and take care that in rooting out the tares we do not uproot the wheat also. | Ex.

A Good Reputation.

John Quincy Adams was noted for his habit of punctuality. Every duty was performed promptly, at its proper time, and his vast knowledge, and his success in many and various offices, was due largely to this habit. His reputation at Washington was so well established that, if he failed to be in his seat at the proper hour, it was at once supposed he must be unwell or out of the city. On one occasion when the Representatives were assembling in the capitol, the clock struck twelve, the hour for business.

One of the members said to the Speaker, "It is time to call this house to order."

"No," said the Speaker, "Mr. Adams is not yet in his seat."

The next moment Mr. Adams entered, and the house was called to order. Mr. Adams was a better regulator than the clock, for the latter proved to be three minutes too fast.

MEN have an idea that a clever woman must be disputable and dictatorial, not considering that it is only pretenders who are either, and that this applies as much to one sex as the other.

Children's Corner.

The Life of a Factory Boy.

A STORY FOR THE CHILDREN.

It was about the year 1823, that a little boy was asked if he would not like to go to work, and learn the way to earn his own living.

"Yes," said the boy; for he was always ready for anything, and he was especially fond of work. And yet, even at that time, it seemed as if he had quite enough to do. Boys are not very big at ten years old, and he had to grow. Neither are they wise, so he had to study. Neither do they know how to guide themselves, so he had to obey. Boys, too, are fond of playing, walking, and climbing, and there were plenty of beautiful hills not far from his home. But though he was so much engaged, he was quite ready to go to work. In the place where he lived there were large cotton factories.

"You can go as a piecer, David."

"Yes, I should like to do that."

So every morning when the sun was up, and sometimes perhaps before it was light, this little boy went to his work, and tried to do it as well as the bigger boys did, so that his master was quite satisfied, and his parents pleased.

But because he had some new work to do he did not mean to neglect the old work. If he had to be a factory boy, he was not obliged to remain an ignorant one. He had to leave the day-school, but he could go to a night-school, and so he did.

Was he not tired?

Yes; but he worked all the same.

How could he do both things?

Well, boys and girls, I am not surprised that you should ask this question, for no doubt you feel that you could not work hard all day in a factory, and then work hard all the evening at school. But this boy did so, and you will see that he must have loved work.

He learnt Latin and Greek, so he passed far beyond many children who have nothing to do but learn through all the year.

He grew up as boys will, and every year added to his knowledge. But he did not want to be in a cotton factory all his life; and often while he was at work, or when he had time for a walk on the banks of the beautiful river Clyde, his thoughts were busy about the future life which he hoped to live, and the good work which he hoped to do.

But he was not yet satisfied with his knowledge. He wanted to know something about medicine and many other things. So he made up his mind to go to college.

"College!" do you say? "How could a poor factory lad go to college?"

Well, many factory lads have done so, and some of them became, as this one did, very clever and industrious men.

He went to college, though his going was no expense to his parents; and there is a simple rule which will enable almost any one to get to college if he wishes it. Shall I tell you the rule? "Earn as much money and spend as little as possible." David knew how to go without many things which he wanted, and the knowledge was of great service to him in after life.

You see that he was industrious, self-denying and persevering, but he was something more—he was a Christian. He loved the Lord Jesus Christ, and he wanted other people to love him too. "I will be a missionary." So when he left college he said "good-bye" to Blantyre, the place where he lived, and Scotland, which he never ceased to love, and he went to the London Missionary Society.

"I would like to be a medical missionary," he said. "I have learned how to cure people's bodies, and I want to go and tell those who have never heard of the Saviour, of One who can cure their souls."

So the London Missionary Society said they were glad to have the young man, and he should go away to work for Jesus in Africa.

So away he went, and nobody knew, not even himself, of the good, great work which he was going to perform; but I will tell you what you will notice as you grow older. When a person is very willing and glad to work, when he does the little tasks as well as they can possibly be done, then God trusts him to do great things.

David Livingstone—for it is of him I am telling you—went away to Africa with an earnest face and resolute heart. He asked God to bless him and make him a blessing, to teach him the best ways of winning the love and confidence of the poor negroes among whom he was going to live, and to give him the joy of doing his work well and successfully.

He was very happy in Africa. He married the daughter of Dr. Moffit, the venerable missionary, and he lived on terms of great intimacy with the black people, for he wanted them to feel that he was their friend and brother as well as their teacher. For sixteen years he worked as a missionary, and during this time he made some very important geographical discoveries. In 1856 he came back to England, to tell what he had done. He was able to teach his country more than they had ever known before about South Africa, and he wrote a book which is invaluable. He went back again, and became even yet more famous as an explorer and discoverer. Then, when years had passed, he paid another visit to England, and again returned to Africa. He went up the country, finding out about fresh places, endeavoring to civilize the people, teaching them to love his Saviour by his own gentleness and kindness, and longing to see all the slaves set free. There are no roads or post-offices where he was, and we heard nothing about him for many years, until Mr. Stanley went over and sought and found him. He was the last white man who saw him alive. Livingstone would not return with him, for he had not done all the work that he hoped to do, and stayed to finish it. But God took him away from his labors and travels to rest in heaven with him.

He was, as you know, brought over to England, though it could not be accomplished until a year after his death, and was buried in Westminister Abbey on April 18th.

And then it was proved how much he, who had been a poor factory boy, was beloved. For many thousands of miles his remains were brought safely through Africa. Then they were met at Southampton by many great and learned men, while the mayor and town people showed in many ways how they esteemed the memory of him who had lived so nobly, and died so bravely among the people of Africa. And when the day of his funeral came, Westminister Abbey was filled with crowds of those who mourned his death, and admired and loved him for what he had done.

Oh, boys, do not some of you wish to be like Dr. Livingstone? Surely you would be glad to live as grandly, and accomplish as much good? Do you know the way? It is to love God, and for his sake to love work, and to pity and long to bless the down-trodden and oppressed.—London Christian World.

Correspondence.

The editor refused to publish this article and I ordered him to stop my paper at once. I have now made the same rule with newspapers that I did with Masonic ministers. I take a half dozen papers and intend to give each an opportunity to publish a communication against secret societies, and as fast as they refuse to publish they shall be stopped. As to ministers I will not give a nickel to one that belongs to a secret order, nor go to hear such preach. When a new preacher comes around, I go and hear him and I ask him if he is a member of any secret order. If he says yes, I do not go any more to hear him. So it is seldom now that I attend church.

Yours truly,

Civilization among the Indians.

OSAGE AGENCY, Indian Territory, 7th Mo. 5th, 1874.

Editor of the Cynosure: I am still a reader of the Cynosure and feel an earnest interest in the cause, although situated where I cannot do much for its advancement. There are not many adhering Masons in the employ of the Agency, but there are a great many freighters and Texas cattle drovers who wear a Masonic badge and generally accompanied by one or more revolvers and bowie-knives; and as a general thing it would be like casting "pearls before swine" to attempt to reform them, if it did not prove to be dangerous, for I fear their vengeance much more than I do the Indians. I am located about sixteen miles south of the Agency as manager of one of the out-posts to teach the Indians farming and other work, which I think they are making as much progress in as could be expected under the circumstances. There are about 3,500 of the Osages scattered over their Reservation, which contains about 2,500 square miles. There are 400 or 500 in the band that I have charge of, and most of them are trying to have a little breaking done so they can raise something to live on without depending on the hunt. I have been here about fourteen months and they have just commenced breaking, and now there are over thirty small fields within three miles of me varying from three to sixteen acres each; some of them fenced with good rails, making an aggregate of over 21,000 rails made and laid up in fence since I came here. There are three other posts besides the main Agency which are doing a much larger business than we have here, as they commenced from one to two years sooner. We started a school at the Agency last winter about New Year's which is doing a good business with about fifty scholars. The Catholics have done their best to break it up so they can get full possession, but the reappointment of the present agent, Isaac T. Gibson for the next four years has cooled their zeal so I think they will be more quiet in future.

I did not commence this with a view of its publication but wanted to let you see that the peace policy (which I know you advocate) is not a failure when accompanied by practical work; and if a majority of the press who are condemning that policy as a failure would take as much pains to publish the good results of the labors of peace news as they do to herald the news of the taking of a white man's scalp, who perhaps deserved to be in the penitentiary for stealing horses or some other crime, (not that I doubt that there have been a great many innocent white people murdered, for the guilty and innocent are all alike to the savage when once on the war path), there would be a very different public sentiment. Yours truly,

MOSES VARNEY.

The Fearful Power of the Lodge—Rev. E. M. Spencer.

Editor of the Cynosure:

In looking over the columns of a late issue of the Cynosure, I notice in "Reminiscences of the Morgan Times," mention is made of Rev. E. M. Spencer, a prominent Baptist minister of those days. This E. M. Spencer was a near relative of mine—my mother's brother, a dear uncle. I do not doubt what Elder Bernard says of him, but it seems to me the more startling because I knew him to be a man who was not only kind-hearted, but tender-hearted.

I never knew him personally, till the summer of 1841, many years after the Morgan excitement. He had then recently recovered from an attack of insanity of six years duration. His wife, to whom he was tenderly attached, had just died, and as he was in no condition to take the pastorial charge of a church, he came to board in my father's family, so that I knew him intimately. He seemed to be a man of fervent piety, and so amiable in his deportment—always treating everybody, no matter what their age or condition, or standing in life, with the most perfect civility—that he was beloved by all who knew him. He very strictly and conscientiously adhered to the precept, "Speak evil of no man," never allowing himself to utter a syllable against any individual, whatever his character. I knew him once to administer reproof to my mother, than whom very few could be found who were more careful of the reputation of their fellow-men under all circumstances, because she in conversation alluded to some well-known fact (I think it was) that reflected dishonor upon the individual of whom she was speaking.*

Now that such a man could, under the blinding, infatuating influence of Masonry, become a murderer and not know it; be conscientious in it; even go so far as to suppose that God himself would interfere in the interests of the system by screening the murderers, is one of the most astonishing and revolting things that can be conceived of! That a Christian minister of his standing and reputed piety and knowledge of divine things could under this terrible influence, come to suppose that wretched, fallen man could concoct a system so supremely excellent that it could invest those who are connected with it with the moral right to nullify God's laws at pleasure, in order to sustain it, is perfectly astounding! The laws of Masonry are then paramount in importance and obligation to the laws of God.

In the light of such facts we can scarcely conceive of anything more fearfully demoralizing in its tendency, not even in Mormonism. It seems to so debauch, and benumb, and stultify the conscience, so to blunt the moral perceptions and pervert the understanding, that the individual seems incompetent to judge of the moral quality of actions, if they in any way effect the interests of Masonry. "Wo unto them that call evil good and good evil, that put darkness for light, and light for darkness." (Isa. 5. 20.)

Is it any wonder that men who have their understanding darkened this way, can declare that they have been all through Masonry and see nothing wrong in it?" Alas! that our spiritual guides should become blind leaders of the blind, and thus contribute to the ruin of immortal souls!

WESTFIELD, Ind., 6th month, 24th, 1874.

I was in hopes to have seen our political platform come out all right and square from the Syracuse Convention. As our county convention is to be held on the 22d of next month, we want to be able to tell our citizens what kind of platform we expected them to stand on. I will give in brief the body of a platform which we of Hamilton county, Ind., desire to vote for.

3. For settling all national difficulties by arbitration, or High Court of Nations.
4. Opposition to all monopolies by which the laboring classes are oppressed.

PETER RICH.

DENVER, Col.

I think your platform contains two fatal errors. You propose to give us no opportunity to vote against secrecy unless we indorse free trade and female suffrage. Now every man in the United States might wish to oppose secrecy, and still vote down your platform, simply because they will not swallow the free trade and female suffrage pill, however thickly coated with sugar.

I am certain that more than one half of the enemies of secretism are quite as hostile to free trade and female suffrage, and will always oppose them no matter in what company they are found.

Unless those planks are dropped the cause will fail. Respectfully yours,

EDWARD A. WASHBURN.

[In a subsequent note Bro. M. says that he mistook the platform printed with ours for ours.—ED.]

WESTFIELD COLLEGE, Westfield, Ill., has been attended the past year by 206 students in the classical, scientific and preparatory departments. This is the centennial year of the denomination and an effort is being made to increase the endowment of the institution. Fall term opens August 26th.

WHEATON COLLEGE, located pleasantly twenty-five miles west of Chicago has enjoyed a good degree of prosperity during the year. There were 288 students in attendance; the new buildings are completed for the accommodation of a large number of female students. An earnest effort is being made to remove the indebtedness of the institution and increase the number of students, of whom four to five hundred are hoped next year. Fall term opens Sep. 10th.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more enrious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a hold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;' "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

ODD FELLOWSHIP ILLUSTRATED.

REGULATIONS FOR OPENING, CONDUCTING AND CLOSING A LODGE.

NOTE.—This illustrated exposition of Odd-fellowship will be published in book form before Sept. 1st, 1871. (See Advertisement.)

INVITATION ODE.

Such, my friend, are among the first principles of Odd-fellowship; its objects you will more clearly understand as you advance in the order. If you have become initiated into this institution from the influence of a too common error, namely, that Odd-fellowship is a mere beneficial society, having for its single purpose the relief of its members in the struggle incident to human life—if you have united yourself with the great brotherhood from the promptings of idle curiosity, be at once undeceived. Mutual relief, it is true, is a leading office in our affiliations. To visit the sick, relieve the distressed, to bury the dead and educate the orphan, is the command of our laws, and an imperative duty which Odd-fellowship enjoins. But these, although its frequent and almost daily ministrations, are but a tithe of the intrinsic virtues of our beloved order. We seek to improve and elevate the character of man—to imbue him with conceptions of his capabilities for good; to enlighten his mind—to enlarge the sphere of his affections—in a word, our aim is to lead man to the cultivation of the true fraternal relations, designed by the Great Author of his being. Brother, for by that endearing name you are now privileged to be hailed, I greet you as an Odd-fellow of the Independent Order, and welcome you as a member of ——— Lodge No. —, under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of ———. May you ever be animated by the pure principles of Odd-fellowship, and may your life and conduct afford no reproach to the new character which you have this night voluntarily assumed.

Conduct the candidate to the Secretary.

After attending on the Secretary the candidate is conducted to Ante-Room, clothed with an apron, and told to work his way into the Lodge, which is done by giving the entersign, countersign, pass-word and grip, in which he has just been instructed. Arriving in the Lodge room he is greeted as a brother by the Noble Grand, who proceeds to instruct him in the general hailing or sea sign, after which he is introduced to the brethren in the room.

GENERAL HAILING OR SEA SIGN.—Raise right hand above head and drop it three times upon the head.—This is used as a signal at a distance. ANSWER.—Raise both hands up to the head. 2D POSITION. Let hands fall to the side.

G. H. or Sea Sign. Answer. Hands falling to side.

(The regalia of the Initiatory degree is a white apron only.)

The candidate is now an Initiatory member of the mystic brotherhood, and having received the quarterly pass-word of the Noble Grand in a whisper during the evening, is supposed to be happy in his newly acquired privileges and knowledge.

Thousands go no further in the order.

CLOSING.

After the business of the evening has been transacted the Lodge is closed with the following ceremonies:

Noble Grand to the Lodge: Officers and Brothers, I will thank you to rise and assist me in closing this Lodge.

CLOSING ODE.

[Other odes are in common use.]

AIR "Good night, and joy be wi' ye a'."

"Depart in peace!" ye favor'd few,
For night now calls us to repose:
In pleasant dreams may you renew
The joys that have our evening closed
May Friendship's visions round you press,
And Love's, more tender, warm each heart,
To make refreshing, sweet, your rest
"Depart in peace!" dear friends, depart!

"Depart in peace!" for knowledge here
Has shed abroad her radiant light,
The heart to warm the mind to cheer,
Through slumbers of the peaceful night.
And when to-morrow's sun shall rise,
Oh, be that Truth to practice given,
Till life shall end then hear the voice,
"Depart in peace, from earth to heaven!"

CLOSING PRAYER.

[The following or a similar prayer is sometimes used if the chaplain is present.]

Almighty Father! dismiss us, we implore thee, with thy blessing. Let all we have done upon this occasion meet accept-anee and favor in thy sight; and may we still continue, through thy aid and assistance, to increase the usefulness of our institution to ourselves and to all mankind. Amen.

Noble Grand to Vice Grand: Vice Grand, I will thank you to perform the last duty of your station.

Vice Grand to the Lodge: Brethren, we thank you for your attendance this evening, and invite the company of as many of you as can make it convenient to attend at any future meeting.

Noble Grand to Warden; Warden, what is the last duty of your station?

Ans. To collect the regalia and deposit it in its proper place.

Noble Grand to Guardian: Guardian, what is the last duty of your station?

Ans. To open the door and let the brothers depart in peace.

Noble Grand: I will thank you to do that duty as soon as the Lodge is closed.

Guardian: I will.

Noble Grand to Right Supporter: Right Supporter, I will thank you to perform the last duty of your station.

Right Supporter: By the direction of our Noble Grand, I proclaim this Lodge closed until next Lodge night at — o'clock, when it will be reopened for the transaction of such business as may be lawfully brought before the Lodge, and for the diffusion of the principles of Benevolence and Charity.

Noble Grand: I therefore declare this Lodge closed [One rap with gavel repeated by Vice Grand.]

FIRST OR WHITE DEGREE.

[The candidate is received in the ante-room by the Conductor, taken to the Noble Grand's chair and introduced to him.]

Noble Grand to candidate: Brother (s), in presenting yourself for advancement in our order, it becomes my duty to remind you of the importance of the step you propose to take, and to caution you against making engagements that you may be unwilling to fulfill, or for the gratification of idle curiosity, taking upon yourself obligations which may hereafter prove burthensome.

It will be necessary, previous to instructing you in this, or any other degree of Odd-fellowship, for you to take a solemn obligation, pledging yourself not to disclose any of the mysteries to persons whom you do not know to be lawfully in possession of them, and binding yourself to the performance of the duties prescribed in the degrees, so far as it is in your power to perform them. Have you duly considered the subject, and are you now prepared to advance? (If the candidate replies in the affirmative, the Noble Grand continues.) Then place yourself in the attitude in which you were initiated into this order, and repeat after me:

OBLIGATION.

I, ———————, of my own free will and accord, do in the presence of the members of the White Degree of this order now assembled, most solemnly promise, declare and say, that the signs, secrets and mysteries of Odd-fellowship which have been or are about to be entrusted to my keeping, I will conceal and will never reveal them, or any of them, to any person or persons under the high canopy of heaven, unless it be to a just and lawful brother, or in a lawful Lodge of brothers, that I shall find on due trial and examination properly instructed therein, or legally authorized to receive them. I further promise that I will not write, indite, print, stamp or engrave them, or any of them, upon anything movable or immovable, so that the least character or letter may be unlawfully obtained. All this I promise with a fixed determination to perform, and without any hesitation, mental reservation or self evasion of mind in me whatever, under no less a penalty than being held throughout the globe by every good Odd-fellow as a man void of the principles of honor, to the true and faithful peformance of all which I pledge my most sacred honor.

Sign White Degree

PASS WORD.—Fi-des, given at door of Lodge Room after entersign, which is one rap on the lodge room door when the Lodge is opened on this degree.

SIGN.—Take hold of chin with right hand, thumb under and fingers over the chin.

GRIP.—Same as Initiate Grip.

Noble Grand to candidate: Brother, before entering into an exposition of the principles of the White Degree, a few general remarks in explanation of the objects of Odd-fellowship may not be inappropriate.

We know, in whatever circumstances men may be placed, that there are none so destitute of friends as not sometimes to have their tenderest sympathies called into active exertion in ministering to a limited circle, by merely natural affections; but unhappily in the rugged journey of life it too often occurs that those kindlier sensibilities either become blunted by time, causing the heart to contract as friend after friend is snatched away, or else that selfish pursuits absorb the mind, which, in the mistaken hope of finding solid happiness in them, forget the sufferings, the interests, and sometimes even the rights of others. These things, which are the inevitable lot of human existence, no institution, however admirable its contrivance, can hope to banish from society at large; for the noblest institutions can exert but a circumscribed influence in comparison with the society amidst which it acts; still by habits of closer association in objects of an enlarged and animated philanthropy, much may be done without risk of injury to individual fortunes, to make men more useful to their kind—more helpful to the distressed—more regularly thoughtful of the happiness of those around them. Such is the aim of Odd-fellowship; and hence by enforcing an observance of social and human duties, we strive to reanimate those purely benevolent faculties which it has pleased an All Wise Providence to confer upon man, and the practice of which contributes so eminently to the elevation and happiness of all.

We now invite your attention to the LECTURE OF THE FIRST OR WHITE DEGREE.

Question.—What do the laws of Odd-fellowship teach us?

Answer.—they teach us to unite in the bonds of Brotherly Love.

Q.—How are we to show this duty of our Order?

A.—By meeting together as Brothers, and in case of affliction or distress, relieving the wants of each other, and administering all the consolation we can to the afflicted.

Q.—What are our duties as Brothers?

A.—To meet together frequently in our Lodges, as members of one great family, and thus cultivate the principles of friendship and love.

Q.—What do our Lodge rules require of us?

A.—To pay all due respect to our officers—to obey their reasonable injunctions—to receive their instructions, and, to the utmost of our power, assist them with our advice and support.

Q.—What do the duties of Odd-fellowship prescribe?

A.—They enjoin a strict observance to temperance, sobriety and chastity.

Q.—In what light do our laws consider drunkenness.

A.—As the vilest and most pernicious of all vices. The drunkard, deprived of the reason given him by God, lowers himself to the condition of brutes. He contracts ruinous engagements, neglects his business, squanders his property, abuses his health, fills his house with trouble, and, if not cut off by a premature death, is doomed to an old age, comfortless and diseased.

Q.—What are the chief attributes of our institution?

A.—Benevolence, brotherly love and charity.

Q.—What are we to understand by benevolence?

A.—Benevolence is the source of all good actions. The man of benevolence feels for the woes of all mankind; his heart is open, tender, sympathetic; he heals the wounds of the afflicted by his kindness, fortifies the minds of the weak by his example and advice, and cheerfully administers the balm of charity to those whose distresses call for assistance.

Q.—How may we promote brotherly love?

A.—By frequently meeting together in friendly association, the members of our fraternity become mutually interested in the welfare of each other. A kindlier sentiment is thus enkindled in the breasts of all, which, expanding into a generous sympathy, is ever ready to relieve a brother when oppressed by affliction. Bound together by the ties of honor and morality as well as humanity, we encourage no secrecy as a cloak for evil, nor do we keep any thing hidden except what is necessary to give efficacy to our works and permanency to our Order by preserving its unity and guarding it against imposition. The moral precepts which govern us, and according to which we would have all regulate their conduct, are the laws of God; these we would solemnly impress upon the minds of all; keeping in view especially that great and universal law, that whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so to them. Acting upon this principle, we cannot be far in error; and experience has demonstrated that a great earthly good, and one among the first objects of our institution, may be thus attained in strengthening the bonds of friendship and laying broad and deep the foundation of brotherly love.

Q.—Whence flows charity, and what are its attributes?

A.—Charity springs from the heart, softens the affections and incites to good actions, It is a generous virtue whose deeds inspire the utmost pleasure. It affords real gratification to its possessor, and delights to dispense its bounties in aid of the needy and distressed. By its acts meritorious men, and sometimes whole families are raised from impending misery and restored to peace, happiness and contentment. True it is, that charity may often be bestowed on undeserving objects, but the worthy should not be confounded with the unworthy, for this would render hopeless indeed the fate of many a poor sufferer.

To derive pleasure from conferring good on our fellow creatures is an exalted attribute of humanity, which can only be manifested in deeds of charity; and in the practice of this moral excellence the charitable man lays up for himself an abundant store of substantial happiness. The objects which have received his assistance, stand as monuments of his goodness, and God blesses him with that peace which the selfish and unfeeling can never enjoy. He lives in the hearts of those who have shared his bounty, and his own conscience assures him that he has discharged the duties of a man. He is respected by all ranks; his humane acts secure him the esteem of the rich, while his charities calls forth the blessings of the poor; his home is the mansion of peace, and his household the subjects of content. He is a tender husband, an affectionate parent, a kind master, a considerate neighbor, living in peace with all mankind and possessing their confidence and regard; his grey hairs are crowned with honor, and he sinks into the grave obedient to the will of God, attended by the prayers of all who knew him under the full hopes of a blessed immortality.

Noble Grand to candidate(s): Brother(s), thus ends the first degree; and, in the name of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, I declare you duly admitted a member thereof, the emblematic color of which is white.

The regalia of the first degree is a white collar trimmed with white fringe or ribbon. A white rosette may be worn at the point or joining of the collar in front. (Aprons are abolished in this and subsequent degrees (and offices) of Odd-fellowship).

SECOND OR COVENANT DEGREE.

[The candidate having been received in the ante-room, is conducted to the chair of the Noble Grand.]

Noble Grand to candidate(s): What is your errand here?

A.—To obtain the mysteries of the Covenant Degree.

Noble Grand to candidate(s): Previous to receiving that degree, are you willing to enter into a solemn obligation with us?

A.—I am willing to take any obligation within my power to perform.

Noble Grand to candidate(s): Then repeat after me:

OBLIGATION.

I, [name] in the presence of the members of the Covenant Degree of this Order assembled, most solemnly promise, declare and say, that I will never divulge the secrets of the degree about to be entrusted to my keeping, I will not write them, or cause them to be written, printed or engraved in any manner or form whatever; and pledge my sacred honor that I will, to the best of my knowledge and full extent of my power, perform all the duties I am therein instructed to do.

Noble Grand to candidate(s): Brother(s), in the first degree we had the pleasure to discourse of charity; it now becomes our duty in furtherance of the great cause of humanity, to treat of mutual relief, or, in other words, of mutual assistance in times of distress, danger or difficulty. In fulfillment of this purpose, we resume our instructions by reciting from Holy Writ, as aptly illustrative of our present subject, the beautiful story descriptive of the love of Jonathan and David, to which we invite your serious consideration.

THE NARRATIVE.

And the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David and Jonathan loved him as his own soul. Then Jonathan and David made a Covenant, because he loved him as his own soul. And Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword and to his bow and to his girdle. And Saul spake to Jonathan, his son, and to his servants, that they should kill David; but Jonathan, Saul's son, delighted much in David, and Jonathan told David: Saul, my father, seeketh to kill thee: now, therefore, I pray thee take heed to thyself until the morning and abide in a secret place and hide thyself, and I will go and stand beside my father in the field where thou art, and I will commune with my father of thee, and what I see that will I tell thee. And Jonathan spake good of David unto Saul, his father, and said unto him, Let not the King sin against his servant, against David, because he hath not sinned against thee, and because his works have been to theeward very good; for he did put his life in his hand and slew the Philistine, and the Lord wrought a great salvation for all Israel. Thou sawest it and did rejoice, wherefore then wilt thou sin against innocent blood, to slay David without a cause. And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan, and Saul sware, as the Lord liveth, he shall not be slain. And Jonathan called David, and Jonathan shewed him all these things, and Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he was in his presence as in times past. And David fled from Naioth, in Ramah, and said before Jonathan, What have I done? what is my iniquity? and what is my sin before thy father, that he seeketh my life? And Jonathan said unto him, God forbid, thou shalt not die; behold my father will do nothing either great or small but that he will show it me; and why should my father hide this thing from me? It is not so. And David sware moreover and said, Thy father certainly knoweth that I have found grace in thine eyes, and he saith, Let not Jonathan know this, lest he be grieved; but truly, as the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death. Then said Jonathan unto David, Whatsoever thy soul desireth, I will even do it for thee. And David answered: Thou shalt deal kindly with thy servant, for thou hast brought thy servant into a Covenant of the Lord with thee; notwithstanding, if there be iniquity in me, slay me thyself, for why shouldst thou bring me to thy father? And Jonathan, said, Far be it from thee; for if I knew certainly that evil were determined by my father to come upon thee, then would not I tell it thee? Then said David to Jonathan, Who shall tell me, or what if thy father answer thee roughly? And Jonathan said unto David, Come and let us go into the field. And Jonathan said unto David, O, Lord, God of Israel, when I have sounded my father about to-morrow any time, or the third day, and behold if there be good towards David, and I then send not unto thee and show it thee, the Lord do so and much more to Jonathan; but if it please my father to do thee evil, then I will shew it thee and send thee away, that thou mayest go in peace; and the Lord be with thee as he has been with my father; and thou shalt not only while I live show me the kindness of the Lord, that I die not, but thou shalt not cut off thy kindness from my house forever; no, not when the Lord hath cut off the enemies of David, every one from the face of the earth. So Jonathan made a Covenant with the house of David, saying, let the Lord ever require it at the hands of David's enemies; and Jonathan caused David to swear again, because he loved him, for he loved him as he loved his own soul. Then Jonathan said to David, To-morrow is the new moon, and thou shalt be missed because thy seat will be empty. And when thou hast stayed three days, then thou shalt go down quickly and come to the place where thou didst hide thyself when the business was in hand, and shall remain by the stone Ezel, and I will shoot three arrows on the side thereof, as though I shot at a mark. And behold I will send a lad, saying, Go find out the arrows; if I say expressly unto the lad, Behold the arrows are on this side of thee, take them; then come thou, for there is peace to thee and no hurt, as the Lord liveth. But if I

OUR SUBSCRIPTION LIST.

The success of our warfare against Secret societies is so well understood to depend primarily on the general circulation of the Cynosure, that we believe our agents and friends who thoroughly understand the situation consider a good report of the mail list one of the most encouraging features in our work. That the paper is worthy of a large circulation is testified to by many of our readers. That it is considered a wide awake, honest, practical paper neither trashy or stupid nor superficial can be readily seen by those who read the extracts from letters in "our mail." We occasionally receive a friendly criticism which is by no means disregarded and our constant aim is to make the paper more nearly perfect. Our readers by sending in new subscribers promote this same object, besides putting information of vital importance to the holiness to the church and the purity of the government into the hands of the people.

The desire of our friends to know how subscriptions are coming in we suppose to be more than usual since they know that TWELVE HUNDRED SUBSCRIPTIONS expire during July and August.

The promptness with which renewals have come during the last week has been very gratifying and encouraging. Often the renewals are accompanied with one or more recruits to fill up the vacant places which unrenewed subscriptions make.

The promises which come in the letters such as "I will do all I can to increase the circulation," "I think I can send more subscribers soon,' lead us to think that a great enlargement of the mail list may be expected Canvassing for the paper although self denying and laborious (like all work) when vigorously done, yet affords a peculiar satisfaction to those who engage in it. An agent in Indiana who has sent in more subscriptions this year than any one else, perhaps, writes, when he forwards the last five names, that these almost complete the first hundred, and then he says "for another hundred." The wholesouled good will and earnest desire for the overthrow of secret societies is a marked feature in a large proportion of our letters. Some on account of sickness or extreme age cannot do as much as others; yet old people have had a remarkable degree of success in canvassing. One man about eighty-two years old sent in eight dollars from Washington Territory last week and said if he had more strength he might do much more.

We hope those who sent in three months subscriptions will remember them and if possible send in their renewals. We hope that those whose time ends in July will have it in writen to us will do so promptly; and that the six hundred and seventy whose subscriptions end in August at all risings whatever time that they can get, without neglecting other duties, in canvassing their localities for new subscriptions to forward with their renewals next month. We send circulars, subscription papers and copies of the Cynosure free, for canvassing purposes

About the middle of September, you know, the exact size of the subscription list is again is be reported so that we can tell what our summer's work amounted to.

With the blessing of God on your persevering efforts you can make that report very encouraging. Then

"Work, for the night is coming;
Work through the sunny noon;
Fill brightest hours with labor;
Rest comes sure and soon.
Give every flying minute
Something to keep in store;
Work, for the night is coming,
When man works no more.

"Work, for the night is coming,
Under the sunset skies;
While their bright tints are glowing,
Work, for daylight flies.
Work, till the last beam fadeth,
Fadeth to shine no more;
Work, while the night is darkening,
When man's work is o'er."

MINUTES OF THE SYRACUSE CONVENTION.

This is a pamphlet of 150 pages, containing matter of very great interest to all friends of the cause. Besides the report of the proceedings with the resolutions and Constitution of the Association, there are the addresses of half a score of our most earnest lecturers, which makes the book of very great value as a campaign document. The address of Elder Bernard is alone worth the price of the book. We have been persuaded to publish this wonderful document of Elder Bernard's in a pamphlet of about 30 pages. It will be ready soon. The minutes of the Syracuse Convention which contain this address cost but $12,00 per 100, by express, $2,00 per doz and 25 cts, each, by mail.

THE FOURTH OF JULY.

We have received one report of work done on the Fourth of July, some subscribers obtained, books ordered and a movement started for obtaining lectures and organizing an auxiliary association opposed to secret societies. Are others yet to come? We also heard of a speech delivered on that day by Mr. Reeves of Plymouth, Indiana, in which secret societies were considered our nation's enemies.

Mr. Eastman in a speech at Elgin, on that day advocated bolting party nominations for a good reason; and showed that slavery to party nominations was a danger that we must fear and avoid. The Chicago Tribune justly commended that feature of his address.

CYNOSURE TRACTS.

The demand for Cynosure Tracts for gratuitous distribution increases much more rapidly than do the contributions to the Tract Fund, although a friend has pledged a dollar for every other dollar donated. There is now a demand from earnest laborers in the cause for fully One Hundred thousand pages of tracts per month and to satisfy this demand we need in new subscriptions, fifty dollars per month. In many instances a single Anti-masonic tract has saved a young man from the soul slavery of the lodge. It is sad not to be able to supply the demand for these leaflets for want of funds.

Readers has not God blessed you with the ability and desire to contribute something to the cause?

Topics of the Time.

THE FAWN-SKIN POUCH.—Every good granger has a fawn-skin pouch, and every good granger knows what it is used for. Other parties, however, may be ignorant in this respect, and among those thus deficient we are compelled to reckon Gov. Davis, of Minnesota. The way it came out, was this: The grasshoppers went to work in one corner of the State and devoured almost every green thing. Crops of course were gone and the farmers were in want. Gov. Davis then published an appeal for aid to these starving families, and among the rest asked the grangers to help. He probably supposed that the patrons used their fawn-skin pouches to take up collections for starving farmers. The grange in Hennepin county set him right, told him that he had the State money and ought to help them himself; at all events that helping starving men and women was not their business. The fawn-skin pouches were to carry a pencil, book, and knife in, not to take up collections. Besides that what money grangers can raise is needed to support O. H. Kelly and the other self sacrificing laborious Freemasons and Odd-fellows who manage the Patrons for the glory of Pomona and Flora and the benefit of their pockets. There is one comfort about this grange business. It is a lying fraud, but not so much of a lying fraud as Masonry and Odd-fellowship. The difference is this: The grange admits selfishness as its motive power. It does not profess the selfishness of its managers. There is where lying and fraud come in. The ordinary granger says directly, We run the the grange to get pecuniary benefit. While these wet nurses of the grange profess universal benevolence, and then shut out every unfortunate creature on the face of earth. The grange is bad enough, but the lambskin (?) linen apron is worse. Long live the fawn-skin pouch!

BISMARCK'S BULLET.—On the fourteenth of the present month a second attempt was made to assassinate Prince Bismarck. A Catholic enthusiast, who has often been in close consultation with his priest, fired at him from a crowd at Kissengen and wounded him in the wrist. As the act of a religious lunatic, this act has no significance; as the consistent continuation of religious assassination, and as the logical result of religious teaching, it has an importance far reaching as the influence of the Catholic church. By some means or other, it has happened that the Roman church has freely used fire and sword to enlarge her dominions. Kings and nations have been tolerated only when they submit cheerfully to the power of the pope. The Inquisition, called in horrible irony, "The Holy Office," St. Bartholomew's day, and the eighteen attempts on the life of Henry Quatre, have made this so plain that he may run that readeth. In attempting to kill Bismarck, this young man at Kissengen well understood that he was acting in accord with the history and spirit of his church, and that if he perished, having accomplished his object, masses would be said for the repose of his soul all over the papal world. This consideration alone would prove the necessity and justice of the stand Prussia has taken against the Roman anti-Christ. A church having a single earthly head, believed by the unintelligent majority to be infallible, to whom without exception the membership swear allegiance, is a standing menace to any government, free or despotic, on the face of earth. The attempt is made at first to control by the rulers. Thus for hundreds of years all Europe was under the heel of kings, and all kings were under the heel of the pope. Then was there such a carnival of ignorance, lust and blood as the world had seldom seen. Now that the kings are freed from fear of those curses which an innocent old man chatters in Italy, the people will be free too unless the church can excite the people to resist the monarch. This is the attempt that Rome is now making in Europe. The only thing on which Bismarck insists is that the priests obey the laws, and admit the supremacy of the State in things secular. This they refuse to do, and hence they endeavor to assassinate the representative of a law that they are determined to trample under foot.

IN EVERY CLIME A HOME.—Masons are accustomed to boast of the universal extent of their order, as if that fact proved the good character of the institution was established forever. A slight inspection of the work performed by the secret orders in other lands will perhaps make Masons in the country a little more circumspect in their boastings. An Italian letter, lately printed, contains an account of five robberies and nine murders, and the following sentence: "The secret societies seem again at work, and men have to fear the dagger if they offend against the mysterious sect." We challenge the world to produce a single case where a secret society has been productive of any permanent good. In Egypt they had their mysteries where immoralities not to be named were practiced. So also in India and Greece. The Jesuits, calling themselves "The Society of Jesus," by murders and assassinations proved themselves children of the devil. The Friends of the People, with Freemasons, organized the French Revolution, which was simply a carnival of lust and blood. The Masons, Jesuits, trades unions and other orders of this country are as fast as possible extinguishing the very ideas of manhood and independence. They are training men to delight in aprons, collars, rosettes, little hammers, tin hats, feathered chapeau, rituals, silly enough to make a half-starved dog split with laughter, and prayers impious enough to call down lightning from heaven. Let them work here as long as they have in Italy and any man who offends them will have to fear the dagger. Reader, the fight we wage against these lodges is a fight for national existence. It seems very harmless, the procession of a few men in linen aprons through a village street, and the meeting of these few men over a blacksmith shop, or a grocery store, to kill Hiram Abiff, and sing "Hail Masonry Divine." But when these men can send one of their members, and, without the knowledge or consent of the people, turn out one postmaster and put in another; when they can clear Jurupertz in Chicago and Vanderpool in Michigan by signs unknown to half the people in the court room; when they can tamper with mails and use the machinery of government for the advantage of a clan, your life, property and reputation are in danger. The age of bandits and assassins is coming. It is cheaper and better to wake up than to sleep. How can we overcome these orders? Only by the dissemination of information concerning them. They live in darkness and ignorance. They die in intelligence and light. Circulate the papers opposed to these associations of darkness. Let the young men be warned and they can be saved.

THE DISTANCE TO ROME.—While Austria and Prussia are leaving the porter's lodge of the Catholic church, expelling the Jesuits and setting up for themselves, America is journeying to Rome; has already reached the Three Taverns and will soon be delivered up to the captain of the guard, unless a change of direction is made. While just at this point, it will not be uninteresting to find out who live in these Three Taverns. In one abides Mr. Infidel-school; in the second, Mr. God-hating-nation; and in the third, Mr. Formal-church. Mr. Infidel-school invites us to rest in his lofty temples and dilates on the beauties of a secular education. Leave the Bible, he says, to the church and the women and children at home. You will ruin the common instruction of the masses if you insist on having Scripture and prayer in the class-room. Let the teacher insist upon having the child instructed respecting the fossils that lie deep down between the rocky foundations of the earth. Let the children count the joints in the lobster's tail. Let them learn of vertebrates and invertebrates. Teach them of rhizodonts and rhizopods. Let them read the follies of De Natura Deorum. Give them the philosophies of Aristotle and Socrates. Teach them about their minds and their bodies. But don't for the world say anything about their souls. It will be proper for them to understand the major and minor premise and the conclusion so that they may detect a fallacy, but teachers should let their pupils find out about lying some where else. Mr. God-hating-nation cordially endorses all Infidel-school has said and continues that we shall only reach the place we should occupy when religion and government are entirely divorced. Away with this praying in Congress. Kick out the chaplains. Down with your Sabbath laws. Welcome the millenium of secularization, when this God shall no longer interfere with the affairs of men. Mr. Formal-church comes up dressed in irreproachable bread-cloth and kids, rubs the whitest of hands and says: "Gentlemen, I of course cannot assent to all you say, but in the main, no doubt you are right. The fact is religion rests on reason and love, not on law. God of course had to give some laws to the ignorant barbarians of eighteen hundred years ago. At present, however, we need only to appeal to the nobler manhood and say pleasant things to people to make them as good as they need be.

As a nation we are listening to this sort of talk and while we listen Rome laughs. The Jesuits who lay deep down in the ground the foundations of their prisons, know that if our schools are without the Bible, our nation without God, and our Protestantism without the Holy Ghost, we are certain to fall bodily into the arms of the man of sin. Even to-day the pious Pius says that he is really pope nowhere save in the United States. Catholic schools, like that at Notre Dame, where a priest presides over every boating club and ball play, are increasing. More than 350,000 girls are in such schools to-day in this country, and the number grows larger constantly. What is to be done? Something, or we will soon witness the decay of our common schools, the conversion of our churches into priest's houses, the subversion of our government and the celebration of the Auto da fe.

The Vision.

BY A. THOMPSON.

The bright stars blossomed in the blue,
The moon was sailing high,
And like a silver ship slid through
The fleecy cloudlets of the sky;
As in the border of a wood,
In rumination deep I stood.

The zephyrs with their drowsy wing
The opening leaflets gently fanned,
And many a queer and humming thing
Flew past me upon either hand,
And I was thinking of the fate
In store for our dear Ship of State.

Within the wood I heard a sound;
And coming from the leafy screen,
With Freedom's gleaming banner wound,
I saw, who might have been a queen,
A maid of more majestic port
Ne'er crowned the splendors of a court.

I looked, and in the flickering light
Her noble features shone severe,
As close she drew her mantle bright,
And mutely motioned me to hear;
Then through the gloom, her order flew—
Attend, 'tis Freedom speaks with you.

Here by the great Almighty's will
His truth I published free and broad,
Its echoes spread to every hill
And hamlet that the Pilgrims trod;
Till every soul was as a fort
Where freedom held her royal court.

Here firm and true the fathers stood
Against oppression's stormy rage,
And in their manly hardihood,
Feared not the tyrant to engage;
Till through the battle's blood and toil
They saw fair Freedom's cheering smile.

But now Corruption, foul and dark;
The plunging Ship of State commands,
And honest Honor crushed and stark
Lies murdered by his slimy hands;
And there is scarce a man to draw
The bow of right and shaft of law.

And would you blame the buzzard crew,
Who hold the place of power to-day?
'Tis you, the people, only you,
And none but you whom they obey;
'Tis with the people Freedom lies,
And with them ever lives or dies.

Who send the villians to the front?
Who keep in power the scum of men,
The base, unblushing knaves who flaunt
In open view their stolen gain?
Who, but the people, by whose will
A Butler rules the nation still.

I know your mind, but deeper far
Than you have thought the evil lies;
'Tis general wrong that is at war
With Freedom's holy harmonics,
And men must teach, and live the right
If they would bask in Freedom's light.

Else in the time that is to come
When down the starry flag is torn
When wild Confusion beats her drum,
Or blows for blood her battle horn;
Away I'll fly, and bare with me
The blessed boon of liberty.

Beware of dogs that scoff at God;
Beware of knaves that prey or steal;
Beware of treason's dark abode,
Where rites deceive and grips conceal;
Beware, or all that blood has cost
Shall be in blood and tumult lost.

Thus spoke the maid and o'er her face
A smile of angel sweetness played,
And all her grave, majestic grace
Was brightly in the beams displayed.
Not all is lost, while some are true,
She smiling said, and then withdrew.

Masonic Vengeance—Experience of Rev. J.

BY REV. J. K. ALWOOD.

I recently obtained several scraps of the experience of Rev. J., a once able and successful revivalist, but now feeble with the weight of years and much affliction. When health is sufficient, he still loves to tell the story of the Cross, and the people of his community love as well to hear him.

The experience which I give below is from his own lips. He would write you himself over his own signature, but fears the consequence in view of his peculiar situation and feeble health. While I was taking items from his lips, he several times exclaimed, "O! brother Alwood, if I had health as you have, I would go out and lecture against secretism." And his deep-blue eye would flash with the fire of an intelligent and once vigorous manhood. He seemed like an eagle accustomed to lofty flights on powerful wing, but caught and cooped in a narrow cage. He is quietly awaiting the crumbling of the cage, and an opportunity for the redeemed and unfettered spirit to take a loftier flight to a fairer clime than mortal man or eagle's eye hath ever seen. He was weary and gave the following in scraps:

He joined the order called Freemasons, about the year A. D., 1834, in a city in the western part of Pennsylvania. (He gave me the name of the city, but wishes me to withhold it, from fear that the sleepless enemy might track him up.) He was then a young man and a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was induced to take the awful step by the persuasions of Christian friends, especially a preacher in whom he had great confidence. He was much displeased and dissatisfied, and troubled with remorse at first. But his frinds (?) quieted his conscience with the assurance that all would be satisfactory in the end. They said, "You have not yet learned the nature and character of the institution. It is ancient, honorable and benevolent. It harmonizes beautifully with the Gospel. You will find it so when you come to understand it more fully." Thus he went on until he had taken six degress. But Bro. J. is too conscientious for durable Masonic material. Conscience would awake at the sight and thought of so many young men, the flower of the land, taken by this snare of the enemy of all righteousness. His remorse over what he had done; his grief over the destructive influence and effects of the institution; his love of truth and desire to do good, resulted in a scathing Anti-masonic sermon. This was the signal for Masonic vengeance.

Soon after this, as he was returning from a meeting to Plymouth, Ohio, over a muddy road, he saw a man against the fence by the wayside. He had scarcely passed when the man fired a pistol at him. Said J., "You have missed your aim this time," and putting spurs to his horse he hastened away. Next day it was ascertained that this man was a Freemason. And a Mr. S., a member of the German Reform Church, said to brother J., "I offered twenty dollars last night to have you mobbed on your way home; but they were all too big cowards. But you will catch it yet." "Catch what?" said J. "You know what your broken vow demands," said S.

Brother J. was in Mansfield, Ohio, hearing the trial of Bowland, charged with the murder of Barker, his brother-in-law. Barker had said of Bowland's wife, "If she is received into church, I shall go out." This was his only offense. But Bowland was a Mason. While Barker was standing on the side-walk talking with several gentlemen, Bowland came along and gave him the fatal stab. He was arrested, tried, convicted of murder, imprisoned, and set at liberty in less than twelve months. While in Mansfield, hearing said trial, Bro. J. had a very impressive dream. He dreamt that he received a severe blow on his left arm. He awoke with a sensation of numbness in that arm, which continued all day. Went home that day. That night, while sitting alone in his room, a shot was fired through the window, passed through his clothes, grazing his stomach and wounded his left arm just at the spot where he had dreamt of being struck. (I saw the scar on his arm and the flattened bullet which he carefully preserves.) The villain ran diagonally across the field from the window where he had been standing, and there took his horse, which he had tied by the fence, and rode rapidly away. The nearest neighbor, who was a shoemaker, went with J., and saw the track of the murderous man across the field; saw where he had tied his horse; declared he knew the man, for he had made the boots that made those tracks in the snow. Another neighbor had seen the peculiarly roan-rumped horse, owned by the same man, rapidly pass his door late at night, and queried why the neighbor was out so late, and why he rode so swiftly. This man was a well-known Mason; and doubtless had attempted to fulfill the prophecy uttered by Mr. S., "You'll catch it yet."

Here brother J. paused and said pitifully, "O! brother Alwood, it is a fearful thing, a fearful thing to get into. And if anything tries a man's soul, it is to know how to get out of it. I have been driven from place to place ever since that sermon. They are sworn to follow a man. O! I get so discouraged sometimes. They are sworn to take vengeance. If I should come out, I do not suppose my life would be safe one week—situated as I am—they would have such a good chance."

Reader, I would that you could see as I saw, and as in memory I still can see, that pitiful look of weary despair—weary with suspense, long-lingering, painful suspense, as it lingered on the face of this good man, who, for conscience' sake has suffered frequent losses. As pants the hart for the cooling stream, or the wounded deer before the braying hounds, so pants the soul of this good man for a place of safe repose.

Having returned from the far Northwest several years ago, brother J. found that a box of his most valuable goods had been opened, and goods stolen to a considerable amount. The very Masonic rogue who doubtless took them, came into his room one day and proposed to track up the goods or obtain remuneration from the railroad company. Requested to see the way, bill, snatched it and left the room regardless of repeated and most positive remonstrances on the part of Rev. J. He was arrested for grand larceny, proven guilty and bound over. A brother of the cable-tow bailed him, and he runs at large without a trial at court, although repeated efforts have been made to have his case brought up. Six years have elapsed, and there is no prospect of his case being tried until it comes up before the judgment seat of Christ.

Recently brother J. was called on to officiate at a Masonic burial. He declined, and has since been the object of bitter persecution, slandered and threatened. One of the sworn revengers declares he has already injured him in his business to the extent of a hundred and fifty dollars, and will do as much more. Bro. J. thinks the design in calling on him to officiate at the burial, was simply to induce him to renew his obligations. For it must be remembered that his name does not stand recorded on any lodge roll; the lodge where he joined having burned in a fire which consumed a considerable portion of the city in which it was located. They know not certainly, in his present locality, that he has been a Mason; but, he says, they declare the fact is obvious from his walk and motions.

Surely this and other similar cases which are frequently coming to light, ought to warn young men against leaping before they know certainly where they are agoing to alight.

Just recently the cable-towed gentry have found it expedient to "shove" the thief above referred to, for his frequent interference with goods on transit. He gave them too much trouble.

In the town of B——n, several years since, brother J. became so aroused by the sophistry and falsehoods of some twenty Masons, uttered in support of their wicked conspiracy, that he could not refrain from telling them the truth to their teeth, declaring that he knew more about their craft than any of them. This caused several to lose their jewels and equanimity together. And it is probable that brother J. would have lost his life on the spot, had not good brother D., who heard the row, rushed in and forced brother J. from the room. He had become reckless with indignation, and was giving them their change in good style. He says, "I was bound to tell them the truth, if they had killed me." One of them said, "I could see the heart cut out of a man who would reveal Masonry." How "benevolent and honorable!"

The Question for Churches.

SYRACUSE CONVENTION CORRESPONDENCE.

Dear Friends of the National Association of Christians opposed to Secret Societies:—In behalf of the Association of Lowndes county, Miss., I send you greeting in the Lord. We wish to say that we regret not to be able to send a delegate to your meeting, but conclude that we are not able to undertake so much. We have distributed tracts and kept up our testimony in the Christian Republic, and in our church, and have the consolation to know that some have been kept out of the lodge by our means.

The question for churches to answer, seems to be, Shall we fellowship the members of secret societies? Shall we admit them to membership in our churches? The practice of our church (Congregational) has been to refuse membership to all members of secret orders. We take the position that secretism is inconsistent with the genius of Christianity; that he that doeth truth cometh to the light; and that it is only the wicked who 'love darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil." For "what fellowship hath light with darkness," "or he that believeth with an infidel." Even if it were a temperance society, or a church as spotless as a secret church could be, it would be rebellion against the Saviour's command, "Let your light so shine that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

Let us not give place to them at all, but take a decided stand. What if the secretists should cast out our names as evil. It matters not if we are only doing right. The churches testify against gaming and dancing, but the arguments by which they are condemned (though sound) are not half so clear in our estimation as the arguments that separate the church from secretism.

I would be patient with those who were blinded. I would give them time and space for repentance, but I would also be firm. One who swears or pledges allegiance to a secret clan can never, while that oath or pledge is honored, be properly a voter or a communicant in the church of Christ. Let me digress and say neither can one holding to such obligation be trusted with a vote or office in the State, without doing violence to the mutual confidence implied in republican government. S. C. Feemster.

What We Expect to Do.

BY REV. B. T. ROBERTS.

What do you propose to do in your opposition to secret societies, is a question that has been asked us many times since the Syracuse Convention. The question is a proper one. We answer, we propose to rid the land of a great curse which is crippling individual energy, deranging business, perverting our courts of justice, demoralizing the people and corrupting the Christianity of the age. At the bar of public opinion we indict the various secret societies as guilty of these atrocious offences against the public welfare. The indictment is a grave one, but if permitted the space we hold ourself responsible to make it good.

SECRET SOCIETIES CRIPPLE INDIVIDUAL ENERGY.

For men to do their best, they need to be stimulated by the hope of seeing their toil and pains rewarded. If the skillful fare no better than the careless, then few will be at the pains to become skillful. The trades unions demand that all their members receive the same wages. The ambition is to get into the unions and then, as a rule, the effort of the artisan to perfect himself in his trade ceases. Why should he study to improve? Any further improvement will be no benefit to him. Regard for the union supplants the ambition to excel in his calling. Henceforth the study is how to get the largest wages for the least work. The evenings are spent—not in the family—but in the club-room, discussing the all-absorbing question how to bring employers to their terms. A steady pressure is employed to increase wages and diminish work, until the limit of endurance is reached and a collapse takes place. Hence

SECRET SOCIETIES DERANGE THE BUSINESS OF THE COUNTRY.

If the demands of the union are not complied with strike is proclaimed, and work ceases. Men who are disposed to work, dare not work at the risk of their lives. Their families may be starving. Then they must beg or starve. The husband and father must not work for anything less than the lodge has said he might, even to save from starvation those most dear to him. This is a tyrany of the most execrable kind. Let it be exercised by the government, and a rebellion would speedily follow.

Shall secret conclaves be permitted to put chains upon us, which we would not wear for an hour if forged by the authority of the State?

The national anti-secret society association holds that every man has the inalienable right to work where he pleases, for whom he pleases, and for what wages he pleases. In this right he should be protected by the law of the land. Every combination to control the price of labor, or transportation, or produce, or merchandise, should be declared to be a conspiracy against the public welfare, and should be punished by fine and imprisonment.

Of all trades unions Freemasonry is the parent. It was originally nothing more than a trade union, but the organization, being a strong one, was soon employed for other purposes. Manufacturers copied after it to make a monopoly of their goods and extort for them the largest possible price. The workmen soon followed. But whatever Freemasonry is now, more than a trade union, is a sham and a farce. Why call men "Masons" when not one in a thousand can lay a wall or build a chimney or plaster a house? Why call preachers and rum-sellers, and merchants, and lawyers, and black-legs Masons? Then why, after they are bound by the most horrid oaths—bound as no slave was ever bound—do you call them "free?"

Civil Rights Bill and West Point Academy.

LETTER FROM GERRIT SMITH TO FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

Peterboro, June 27th, 1874.

Hon. Frederick Douglass, Washington, D. C:

My Old and Much Esteemed Friend:—So Congress has again adjourned without passing the bill on which our hearts had so long been set!

Much prejudice was wrought up against the bill by persistently declaring it to be a bill for social rights. None of its friends regarded it in this light. All they sought in it was the equality of civil rights. Social rights they left to take care of themselves—wisely judging that these do not fall within the scope of legislation.

This prejudice, however, was not the only nor the worst form of opposition to the bill. As is usual in cases where the protection of fundamental human rights is the object, this bill had to encounter the constitution scare-crow. On the surface of the constitution, simple birth in this nation makes a citizen of the nation. But, in the New Orleans Slaughter case, the Supreme Court dug down below the surface and taxed its ingenuity to discover two kinds of citizens—a State kind as well as a national kind. This mischievous discovery, though made by but five of the nine judges, has, in the present instance, furnished the enemies of equal rights with their most effective weapon. But this dual citizenship is fanciful—fanciful, if only because impracticable. I would argue its impracticableness somewhat as I argued it in my letter to Mr. Downing.

Of all the instances in which the court asserts the paramount right of national citizeship, there is not one where this right could not be defeated in a State which is guilty of discriminating between its people. One of these instances is the coming to the seat of government to transact business with it. But how could cultured and self-respecting colored gentlemen and refined colored ladies cross such a State as Georgia on their way to transact business in Washington? Denied its vehicles, save on terms too degrading for them to submit to, instead of riding they must walk: and denied its hotels, save on similarly degrading terms, they must depend upon the bread and cheese in their pockets, and find what sleep they can by the roadside. Is it said that they must be supplied with proofs that they are, at such times, in the capacity of national citizens? But the expense of giving effect to such proofs, they might not be able to bear. Moreover, however conclusive the proofs, and however humiliating to exhibit them, there would, probably, be but few persons to give an open eye or a listening ear to them. In spite of these proofs they would find themselves helpless in an enemy's country. Alas, how many a colored brother and colored sister have felt their hearts die within them, whilst traveling, or attempting to travel, through this still caste-cursed and still Satan-swayed land!

My soul is sick of this running to constitutions for authority to outrage man. That one is a man proves that he is entitled to all the rights of a man, whatever constitutions or aught else may say to the contrary. Our courts and Congress have not yet risen up out of the world's atheism. They still war against God by still refusing to accept and protect man as he presents him. Their highest crime was in tolerating the turning of God's man into man's slave: and now, they follow up this crime by still tolerating his partial enslavement. We are to welcome every man because every man comes from God, and, whatever his race or complexion, is the child of his and our Father. Human laws are needed to regulate many of the external relations and interests of men;—but the men themselves we are to accept as they are given to us, and to hold their high being with all its essential rights, to be sacred and unassailable. Come quickly the day when throughout our country and throughout the world, the citing of a law to justify the invasion of fundamental human rights shall be instantly arrested and sternly rebuked as treason against man and contempt of the law of his being and the law of his God!

There are two concessions to our insulted colored countrymen which admit of no delay. One of these is the passage of the Civil Rights Bill, and the other is the breaking up of the Academy at West Point. The great Father in Heaven—the equal Father of his white and colored children—cannot be at peace with our guilty nation, until the abominations against which this bill is aimed, and the kindred abominations which exist at that Academy, are blotted out. To this end the school itself must be blotted out. It cannot be reformed. The pro-slavery spirit, which, in subservience to the wishes and interests of the slave-power, has, for more than fifty years, been fostered and rampant there, will die only with the death of the school. Government is, always, more or less, complained of for its money matters. But these, in their worst aspect, sink out of sight in comparison with its wrongs against man. Money in comparison with man is of no account. Nothing meaner nor more wicked has government ever been guilty of than suffering the numerous white cadets to league themselves for insulting, at every turn and corner and in every possible way, the handful of colored cadets. It is because the government stands back of this league, and suffers it, if indeed it does not positively encourage it, that not one member has had the manliness to break out from it and deal justly with his colored brothers. Surely, a school, pervaded so thoroughly by this mean and cruel spirit, is not the place for training up patriots and Christians. This school, which the whole American people are compelled to support, wars frightfully upon all true sense of justice and fair-dealing. It is an insult to the nation—an insult to the grand old hills which surround it and frown upon it. These sublime highlands, which rank so high amongst the glories of nature, can have no affinity for a thing so violative of nature and so steeped in meanness as the Academy at West Point.

My complaint of the state of things at West Point may, to some minds, appear inconsistent with what I have hitherto and repeatedly said against legislating for social rights. But the insults and abuses at West Point are much more, much worse, than the mere denial of social rights. Moreover, there are no rights, either civil or social, that government should be allowed to trample under foot. A government school must be opened to all—for it represents all, and is supported by all. If Irishmen or Germans are, as such, systematically insulted and outraged in it, then it cannot be said to be open to them. Nor can it be said to be open to persons of African blood unless they can be in it on self respecting terms.

This refusal to pass the Civil Rights Bill and this reigning of the diabolical caste-spirit at West Point are but a poor atonement for our ages of crime against the poor black man, and but a poor recompense for his magnanimous services to our country in the late war. . . .

With great regard, cordially yours,

Gerrit Smith.

Ohio State meeting, at Darby Chapel, Union Co., O., Tuesday, August 4th, 1874. (See notice below.)

Annual Meeting N. E. Pa. Association, Nov. 3d, in Free Methodist Hall, Wilkesbarre, Pa.,

Secretaries of auxiliary associations, and other friends arranging for meetings, will do well to send notices two or three weeks before hand. Notices received up to Monday night will be inserted in the next paper.

Niagara County, N. Y.

The second quarterly meeting of the Niagara County Association opposed to secret societies, will be held Aug. 4th and 5th, at Royalton Center, in the M. E. church, commencing Tuesday evening. Bro. Rathbun is to address us on the occasion. T. Corliss, Sec.

Ohio State Meeting.

The Ohio State Anti-secret Convention for the organization of the State will convene at Darby Chapel, Union Co., Ohio, on the evening of Tuesday August 4th, 1874, and continue until Thursday evening. Friends of the cause every where are invited. Come one; come all.

Those coming from the north and west will come by the way of Urbana, Champaign Co, O. Thence east on Broadguage railroad, to North Lewisburg. Those from the east by Maryon on same road to Potter's Station. There will be conveyances at those points on the afternoon of the 4th.

Yours in haste,
James Wilkinson.

Mr. Editor:—Please say to the friends of our reform that the convention held at Flat Rock, May 19, 1874, preliminary to a meeting for permanent organization of the State, adjourned to meet at Darby Chapel, Union Co., O., on Tuesday evening, the 4th of Aug., 1874, and continue until Thursday evening, the 6th. At this meeting a constitution will be submitted to the convention for adoption, from the committee appointed at the previous meeting to draft said instrument, and it is hoped the officers necessary to such an organization will then and there be duly elected, and all other business necessary to place the State in an agressive position against all dark and secret conclaves will be properly provided for. In the meantime, as committees have been previously appointed to prepare what business may be necessary to be submitted and ratified by the convention, this will give us sufficient time for one lecture the first evening and three each on Wednesday and Thursday, making in all seven regular lectures. We expect to be favored with the presence and labors of our old and experienced lecturers. I have just received a promise to that effect from the National Agent, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, also from Bishop Weaver. if it is at all practicable for him to be present. Other particulars will be given over the signature of Rev. J. Wilkison, who will describe the place and line of travel to reach the same. As this is somewhat central, let us have a general rally and a full attendance of all in sympathy with this movement.

State Agent and Lecturer.

Reform News.

Rev. L. N. Stratton at Tiskilwa.

L. N. Stratton, of Syracuse, N. Y., has just delivered two lectures in this place against Freemasonry, and some notice respecting them may be of interest to the readers of the Cynosure and a benefit to the cause.

We will first give a brief history of the movement as it pertains to this place. During the summer of 1872, two young men, W. I. Phillips and J. L. Stratton, were employed by the National Association Opposed to Secret Societies to work for the State platform and ticket, to canvass for the Cynosure and distribute tracts. They alternated with each other, mostly in the towns which they visited along the railroads over which they were directed to pass. Tiskilwa was visited by Phillips, while Stratton went on to Peru. It was with difficulty at first that Phillips was able to find an Anti-mason in Tiskilwa but at last he was directed to Rev. Almon Baker, where he found warm friends and ready assistance. Brethren Fosdick and Pierson were then called upon and with them he also met a hearty welcome.

During the two years past a steady growth in the cause has been manifest, and the hearts of the few faithful ones have been strengthened, and the light has began to dawn over the hills which proteets the beautifully situated town of Tiskilwa. Although the night has been long and dark, yet God has been with his people, and his enemies have felt the strength of his arm.

Some time since, word was sent from here by the M. E. church to conference that they did not wish a minister who was a Mason. Notwithstanding their request, a Mason was sent; and although he tried "to keep it dark," yet "his sin found him out;" and we learn that they afterwards announced him in their posters as one of the managers of a Masonic ball. He found it convenient to leave town for that night.

When it was announced that Rev. L. N. Stratton, editor of the American Wesleyan, would speak, this same M. E. minister reported through town that he had known Stratton in school, and that if he could lecture, or edit a paper he must have improved wonderfully, as he never was considered very bright.

He attended the lecture and took notes, and asserted on the last evening that the speaker had not quoted the Master Mason's oath, that it never was written, that it had no such penalty attached. A half hour later he said to Mr. Stratton that the death penalty was attached to civil laws and divine, and that perjury or lying was punished by death in divine law—for "all liars shall have their part in the lake which burns with fire and brimstone,"—and the Masonic obligation was no worse than that. That Masonic law must have a penalty in order to insure obedience to the fraternity; thus admitting that the Master Mason's oath has a death penalty attached to it.

The speaker quoted Masonic oaths as sworn to by Masons, and as recorded in Wendell's Supreme Court Reports, Vol., xii., pages 9 to 26. These reports are authorized by the Legislature of the State of New York and it is not profitable for any man to attempt to gainsay them.

The lecturer spoke on the first evening concerning Masonry as a Christless religion. Proving this from Masonic works. On the second, showing that Masonry is antagonistic to the principles of our free government.

These lectures were delivered Monday and Tuesday evenings of July 13th, and 14th. They were well liked and attentively listened to by the majority of those present. Some came from five to seven miles to attend, although the nights were dark and the weather very warm.

There are now eleven copies of the Christian Cynosure taken in Tiskilwa, and God's people are hearing the martial drum beat of the assembling battalions of reform, and lifting their hearts to Christ, and their feet in the march, the enemy are fearing the "tramp, tramp," of the coming army, which is sure to conquer, since truth and righteousness must prevail. An Observer.

Tiskilwa, Ill., July, 1875.

At Wheaton.

Bro. Stratton, on his return from Tiskilwa stopped by invitation at Wheaton and spoke on Friday evening last in the College Chapel in his usual instructive and interesting style. Rev. I. A. Hart led in prayer and introduced the speaker, who said it should be the duty of public speakers in this reform to prepare addresses for those already converted to its principles and co-operating with its workers, to encourage their faith, quicken their zeal and guide their endeavors. The following, among other suggestions for successful work against the lodge, were given and illustrated by the fresh and rich experience of the speaker. 1st. It is often best in our work to put arguments first, and the proposition last, lest otherwise we startle and put in a defensive attitude the mind of the hearers. 2d. We must work when we have an opportunity, whether with few or many. The beginning of the work in Syracuse, N. Y., was mentioned; when Shakespeare Hall was rented, Rev. W. Post, then of Rochester, engaged to speak and notice given far and near, and only about twenty were present. But the lecture was given and though the efforts of one gentleman who came in, not knowing before as a person in the city was opposed to the lodge, copies of the address were circulated all over the city and an association organized.

The many encouraging features of our work were placed in goodly array, and any down-hearted friends would make a good investment to send for Bro. Stratton.

J. T. Kiggins in Iowa.—Organization in Bremer County.

Waverly, Iowa, July 19, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:—Our lecturer, Bro. Kiggins, came on a few days sooner than we expected, for the reason that he did not visit another county which he intended to do before he came here. This found us with no preparations made, no hall, and no advertisements posted. But we immediately set to work; got some hand-bills struck and soon had the satisfaction of seeing people look, read, laugh and talk about "Masonry Exposed," etc. The Lord seemed to so arrange affairs that it was well advertised, many people being in town, as there always are on "circus day." We procured the largest hall in the city and at an early hour on Friday evening, June 12th, two days after the speaker arrived, the hall was filled to overflowing. During the day it had been rumored that the lodge would turn out en mass; and indeed nearly all the front seats were occupied by the craft, laughing and joking over their expected treat.

When the speaker arrived they immediately began stamping and cheering very Masonically. However, the calm, manly manner of Bro. Kiggins as he took his position at the stand seemed to change things at once. After singing and prayer, he stated that his lecture should be some what preliminary, answering some objections usually urged against agitating this subject and arguments usually brought up in defense of Freemasonry. It was truly a lecture worth hearing; the laugh turned upon Masonry and its weak objections and weaker arguments. Now frequent and loud applause greeted the speaker, showing there were those present who did appreciate truth. On Saturday it was said, there will be not one Freemason present to night; and sure enough, they were "few and far between." The subject as stated the preceeding evening was "How a man is made a Mason." This was truly a most convincing lecture, and I have heard of several who had intended joining the Masons, who now have changed their minds and are with us; one man had sent in his name. I wish every man, woman, and young person in the land, could have heard the burning words as they fell from the lips of the speaker. May the Lord send many such heroes out into the field! On Sabbath afternoon we listened to a sermon on the "Religion of Freemasonry, and Monday evening to a lecture on the ceremonies and obligations of the Master Mason's degree. While he was getting into the merits of the subject in walks the high priest of the chapter and sat down in front of the speaker on the platform, evidently for a disenssion or interruption, but he sat there very meekly under a seathing fire. After the lecture, however, he felt very funny, and staid to our meeting of consultation for organization.

It was voted to form a County Association, auxiliary to the National Association. There was then a committee appointed to meet next day to draft a constitution.

On Tuesday evening a lecture on Grange Masonry, Female Masonry, and Odd-fellowship; good house and good order. After the lecture the house was called to order and the constitution brought forward for signatures (it having been adopted before the lecture began). Quite a number signed and we now have an organization of about twenty-five members. We called a meeting on the 14th of July for the election of officers, with the following results: David Clark, Pres't; G. W. Welcher and J. A. Westbrook, Vice-presidents; T. Dean, Recording Secretary; P. Woodring, Corresponding Secretary; H. M. Woolford, Treasurer. We have meetings now once a week. Since I wrote the above, which I have delayed, to give you the particulars of the organization, we have heard of the labors of Bro. Kiggins at Jefferson, and feel very much encouraged. This is what we need and the only thing that insures us success, viz. Organization. We need a State lecturer very much, and we are ready to do our duty in this direction. Bro. Kiggins has done a great work in his flying trip through Iowa and wherever people are so fortunate to secure his services the lodge power will wane and the kindgom of Christ be built up. May the blessing of God go with him is the prayer of many. P. Woodring, Sec.

From Elder Baird.

Greenville, Pa., July 13, 1874.

Dear Cynosure: On the 27th of June at half-past 2 P. M., I had the great pleasure of hearing an able lecture on the government of the Lodge by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, in the Court-house at Meadville, Pa., after which we parted. On Monday, June 29th, I lectured in the U. B. church at Mount Pleasant, Crawford Co., Pa, to a good, attentive audience, and also on Tuesday evening. As there were no further arrangements matured and the hurry of harvesting and haying just beginning, I returned home to prepare other points for the present.

Elder J. R. Baird.

From Crawford County, Pa.

Glyndon, Pa., July 18, 1874.

Mr. Editor:—I would wish to say through the columns of your paper that Rev. J. P. Stoddard was at the U. B. Oil Creek Chapel on the 1st. of July and gave us two Anti-masonic lectures which I hope will be as good seed sown on good ground. There are some good Anti-masons here. This was proved by the "Amens," and applause during the lectures. I have faith to believe that there will be many more brought into this cause. It is plain to be seen that secrecy is nearing its final doom, and there should be a desperate effort now made, as the whole length of the secrecy chain is about run out. I expect to live to see the last secret society buried, and written on their tombstone, "No resurrection." I bid you God speed in this great work.

Missouri Baptists Awaking.—The All-conquering Truth Purging the Churches.

Baker, St. Clair Co., Mo.

Dear Cynosure:—As it strengthens me to read in your columns the progress of the reform, I have thought that perhaps there are others engaged in the same righteous work who would be glad to know that even here in south-west Missouri, light has began to shine on Missouri. And it is the earnest prayer of the writer that the light which is now beginning to shine on the works of darkness, like sending fires all over the land, may be so increased in radiance, and augmented in power, as to dispel secretism from our once happy, but now "secret-society-cursed" land.

Four years ago the writer moved into the vicinity of Baker, Mo., and brought with him a heart opposed to Masonry, a tongue that was by no means a "silent jewel" on the subject, and also a copy of "Adam's letters on Masonry"; to this was soon added Finny on Masonry, and subsequently "Light on Masonry." I am thus particular to enumerate the forces in order to show how any section may be aroused to a sense of duty by the circulation of a few of the right kind of works on the subject. The books were read by one, then passed to another, until for quite a section around the people learned that they could read and talk Anti-masonry, and "still live."

The Baptist church (Prairie Grove) in this vicinity, of which church I became a member four years ago, was freezing along under the charge of a Masonic pastor. He soon learned that the "Pet" was not a universal pet, and hatched an excuse for quitting. The church had at that time a membership of over thirty, and no ordained minister. But to be brief, I will only add that by the first of the present year, under the blessing of God she had an active and working membership of seventy-two, and four ordained ministers, and every one of them solid against Masonry. And why delay the much dreaded conflict longer, so thought some of the judicious members, and accordingly on the first Saturday of February, 1874, the first gun was fired by Elder R. H. Love, from the text "Prove all things," etc. This was followed by the introduction of a resolution, declaring non-fellowship with the teachings of Freemasonry. The next regular meeting day was set apart for the investigation of the subject of Masonry, and a general investigation given to all to attend, but particularly to the Baptist ministers who worship at the shrine of the "ancient and honorable institution."

The day came, and being very inclement but little was done; enough, however, to indicate that the enemy was bristling somewhat for the fray. The investigation was laid over until Friday and Saturday before the first Sabbath in April.

Friday came and with it came the people, anxious to see whether the "most ancient" institution of earth would stand the fire and silence the batteries that a few of God's people were bringing against her. The fight was made free, and at first the enemy seemed disposed to enter the field; but this was only a feint. A few well directed shots showed them that the best thing they could do was to use that precious jewel, a silent tongue. Their efforts were now directed to the end of causing a dissension among the members, by the "button-holing" process, but this was nipped, and Othello's occupation was gone. They became grum, but sat and twisted until evening, when they began to go out one by one like the woman's accusers; and like them doubtless felt that they were not without sin.

Saturday came; the Masons though less in numbers seemed somewhat more disposed to try to rescue Christianity's "hand-maid" from the hands of her mistress, who was giving her a severe chastizing, and letting her know that unless she soon produced a better character they would soon have to part company forever, at least in Prairie Grove Church. These were new men, and knew not of yesterday's discomfiture. But, alas! the sun was shining and the plants from green-houses must soon wilt; and wilt they did. The field was won, and for the satisfaction of a few members, who wished some further proof concerning the standing of Bernard and Finney the question was deferred until the May meeting.

The day came; the proof was there, but no Masons; the arguments were briefly rehearsed, the question put; and Prairie Grove Church declared she would no longer fellowship the teachings of Freemasonry; only four members dissenting. What has taken place since will form the subject of another letter, when the result of the second engagement, which will take place in Tebs Church, Henry Co., Mo., on the 23 and 24th of this month, and a general account of the success of the work here will be given.

Yours in the cause,

W. M. Love.

Around the Lakes.

Milwaukee, Wis., July 15, 1874.

When our boat left Chicago at seven o'clock last night the prospects of your city for another conflagration were quite bright. The flames could be clearly seen and the wind piled up the smoke directly over us and on the other side it sank into the waves; so that our company sailed under a complete arch of black smoke, fringed with gold by the rays of the setting sun.

When we arrived here in the morning we were glad to learn that the flames had been arrested and the city and Cynosure saved. I cannot say how glad my fellow passengers were to have the Cynosure saved, because I hardly had time to become acquainted when I "stopped off" to visit some friends in the "Cream City." Fortunately or unfortunately I left the package of Cynosures on the boat and they may do a missionary work in my absence. Can you send some more to Oberlin?

Our trip was rendered disagreeable by the disproportion between the size of the boat and the number of passengers. The comical little three-story state rooms (or rather 'boxes') were all taken and a few passengers had to sleep on the floor in the cabin. About four or five miles from the city a swarm of 'dead heads' took possession of our boat. They quartered themselves on the decks; entered the cabin and many of the state rooms; swarmed into the hold and stole rides in almost every nook and corner of the boat. The Captain called them soldiers, others called them June flies, and others still gave them a name more forceable than elegant. They are very disagreeable little things, lighting anywhere and on everybody and not leaving until brushed away which operation generally crushes them. In the morning they were gathered together in heaps like the frogs of Egypt, and thrown overboard.

Milwaukee is rather a lively city, more noted for dust than cream just now. It takes its name "Cream City," from the color of Milwaukee brick of which many of the buildings are erected.

If during my stay here, or in the further progress of my rambles, I find or see anything that may be of interest to the readers of the Cynosure, it will give me great pleasure to cultivate their acquaintance by further communication.

Manufacturing Popularity.

Linden, Mich., June 26, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

The exposition of the secrets of Masonry here by Brn. Stoddard and Baird was the means of arousing the members to a considerable extent; so much so, that large bills were printed and sent far and near, reading thus: "Grand Rally! Masonic picnic at Linden, June 24th.—A general invitation is extended to all—The Meeting to be addressed by the Hon. Hugh McCurdy, attended with other ceremonies too numerous to mention." As the time drew near matters among the brethren grew lively, and on the 24th, the Knight Templar's band made their appearance, and the crowd began to assemble. Near the middle of the day the procession was formed for a march to the grove, in which it was expected to see from five to ten thousand and which amounted to about as many hundred. Among those were about one hundred and fifty of the white-aproned patrons. I suppose they had a good time, with plenty to eat and drink, accompanied with a speech from the Hon. McCurdy, who informed the community at large that they were a fraternity that asked no favors and granted none.

If Masonry is not exposed, its secrets divulged to the world, its damnable and unholy oaths laid bare, but all as gloriously secret with them as ever, why should they feel so troubled? Why be to such great effort and expense to show the world their independence and safety—ask no favors and grant none. Idle boast, for if they

OUR MAIL.

Holmes Smith, Hebron, N. Y., writes:

"The town of Hebron was, in the Morgan times, and succeeding years, Anti-masonic, as well as Washington county in which it is loeated; but though the Anti-masonic element of former years is not all destroyed, yet it sleeps, and wants waking by lectures and the circulation of intelligence, and may God speed the day when this shall be done to the pulling dowu of this strong Babel of iniquity, the confounding of its languages, (the grips and signs) and the total extinction of its horrid and blasphemous oaths, together with the extinction of its many religions. May its devotees, though now infidel, become the servants of our Lord and his Christ."

John Denny, Seattle, Washington Territory, writes:

"Much more could be done if I were able to go around and attend to the business. I wish to be considered a life member as I am in my eighty-second year, and "the time will not be long." There is, evidently, not the harmony in the ranks of the mystic brotherhood that there was two years ago. I think they have seen their best days. The friends of law and liberty and Christianity, will be looking with great interest for the news from the National Convention at Syracuse."

We hope our readers who have the vigor of youth will be stimulated by the earnestness and success which attends the efforts of the veterans in this struggle, and complete the work they begin. Is there a young friend in Seattle who will consult with Mr. Denny, and attend to the business of getting all the subscribers possible, in that locality, for the Cynosure?

Thos. Marlow, Kennonsburg, O., writes:

"This is a hard place for men that will do anything for the cause."

For the encouragement of others who live in hard places, we would say that he has sent in $12.80 for the Cynosure.

D. Weeks, Wauseon, O., writes:

"I circulated those tracts. The people are waking up."

J. L. Manley, Geneva, Ind., writes:

"I had a conversation with a M. E. minister a few days ago, who is an adhering Mason, and when we closed our conversation, he said, in answer to a question that I asked him, that he would dare to say that Masonry had never been any advantage to him in his Christian journey, and that he did not know that he ever would enter the lodge again. He regarded it as fighting against God to fight against many good people."

J. G. Smith, Beverly, Mass., writes:

"Count on me as a subscriber as long as I can live on sawdust and thrive. I will try to get some new subscribers. Those tracts you sent me, I think, have done good."

We expect Massachusetts will yet do her duty on the secret society question. Although she moves slowly, the Cynosure has a few subscribers in ten of her fourteen counties. If they will so far as possible enlarge this circulation, it will be an important step towards the advancement in other respects.

W. W. Kelley, Kewanee, Ill., writes:

"I never felt so much as now that God is in this work."

He says not to stop his paper so long as he can get fifty cents to pay for three months.

Eleanor Bales, Plainfield, Ind., writes:

"I want your paper not only for my own perusal, but to send abroad to my friends and acquaintances, hoping thereby to add to your list of subscribers."

C. H. Read, Breckenridge, Mo., writes:

"I have felt very much interested in the cause in which you are working. I suppose more so on account of being acquainted with so many of those who are leading in the great movement. I see often some notice of school friends with whom I associated at Wheaton and had lost track of. I like the Cynosure better than ever, and believe that God is blessing the efforts which are being made for the putting down of the stronghold of Satan."

John T. Walsh, New Berne, North Carolina, writes:

"The cause of anti-secrecy is looking up in this section. I shall soon lecture on the subject."

E. E. Morrison, Des Moines, Ia., writes:

"There is quite a strong anti-secret element hereabouts. A grand chance to get subscriptions; so please send some of those back numbers and I'll do the best I can for you. . . . I have often been told I'll lose popularity by opposing Masonry. I am aware of the fact, but do not feel very bad about that as I value principle more than popularity. I do not value any one's friendship that I would lose by doing right."

(We italicise the last sentence ourselves because we think it worth remembering.)

Geo. Avery, Galesburg, Ill., writes:

"I wish you much success in bringing to light the deeds of darkness of all secret societies."

J. N. Rentou, Wales, Ill., writes:

"I am a poor man in my seventy-eighth year, and afflicted. I can see to read but little, and to all appearances my time is short. A few months, at most, must close time with me; but I bid you a Godspeed in your noble work."

Hope Davis, Carpenterville, Ill., has been looking after the three months subscriptions that he sent in, and asks us to read the second chapter of 2d Thessalonians in connection with Nahum, 2d chapter, third and fourth verses. They may inspire some who are working for Christ to a more earnest life, so we mention the circumstance here.

Horace Divoll, East Topsham, Vt., writes:

"Reminiscences of the Morgan times by Elder Bernard, I liked exceeding well."

G. W. Bethers, Corvallis, Oregon, sends five new subscribers for a year, and writes:

"I find it hard work to get subscribers for the paper. It is hardly known in this State. . . The lodgemen are bold and overbearing. I hope you will organize a political party. Bring out good men; get up a good platform; have it so we can elect the President and Vice-president and United States Senators, direct by the people. . . . I wish you could send a shrewd lecturer out on the coast to open the eyes of the people on secrecy. The grange especially."

Can any friend who reads this extract aid Mr. Bethers in obtaining the right man to lecture? Cannot a good lecturer report himself who is already out in Oregon or Washington Territory? If the fifty-eight Cynosure subscribers in these two sections can by any means co-operate, with God on their side, they can accomplish a great deal for light and truth.

Isaac W. Lowman, Auburn, Ind., writes:

"I am still talking reform and circulating tracts among the people, and expect to do all I can to advance the Anti-masonic cause."

N. Perkins, Rollin, Mich., writes:

"There is quite a stir in this part of the country on account of Masonry, and there needs to be more of a stir in this place. I only live twenty miles from Morenci, where that murder was perpetrated. I have friends living there, and they say you told the truth in what you published in the Cynosure of the 25th of June. . . The whole craft have made a raid on me. The preacher, the craft, and the devil, or all three in one, have put their heads together to destroy me and my business (milling)."

We hope that the grace of God and well ground flour and meal will save your business, and that the truth which you support will have a glorious victory.

Wells Springer, Rochester, N. Y., writes:

"I look upon any man, or set of men, strangers though they be, as confiding friends; that have the moral courage to stand upon their manhood, with a bold and defiant front, in behalf and in defence of the truth and the right, as you and your little heroic band are so nobly doing in the locality of which you are the soul and center. Shame on the city of Rochester, and of the blood stained district of western New York, that this locality is not foremost in the battle. Of all the places on God's earth this should be the last to bow its neck to the behest of Freemasonry. My Anti-masonry dates back to the time that Freemasonry was disgraced and degraded as a common felon for the murder of a brother; murdered for what the laws of the land were in duty bound to protect him in. I have lived to see this murderer fellowshiped in some of the most popular churches, where William Morgan's cries might have been heard, if not suppressed by Masonic fiends, when taking him through the city of Rochester in the dead watches of the night to his final destination, gagged and bound. This was nothing more or less than the legitimate fruits (Masonically) of the seven devilish oaths he had taken in accordance with the blood-thirsty code of Freemasonry. I mourn for my country and for the fallibility of human nature, that such a state of things should exist in a land professedly Christian. The church wedded to an unrepenting murderer is an unequivocal and stubborn fact, virtually, when fully analyzed. And now that it is permitted to glory in its shame, is fearfully humiliating and ominous of the future destiny of the best government on earth. The sanctuary is oft polluted by its tread with a bold effrontery unparalled, and this, too, throughout the blood stained district of the martyred and murdered Morgan. And still worse, the cup of our iniquity is filling fast, as the magician wand of this clandestine beast, with its score of horns (oaths) and its hydra-heads without number, are awing the people into silence through such fear or favors as it can command. Having greater facilities to strike the blow and conceal the hand than any other power under the broad canopy of heaven. Our great champion of Freemasonry in the church, in the person of the Rev. D. H. Muller in his extraordinary sermon on the 28th of December last, and reviewed in the Cynosure, stands endorsed in silence in our Christian city to this day. I want no better proof than public sentiment manifest in regard to this monstrosity than that there was not a word of rebuke from professing Christians of this city. No better proof that Christianity worthy of the name is at a very low ebb here. Now, to put you right on the record, I am not a professor of religion. At the same time, at the risk of being thought inconsistent, I do believe the Christian religion, (pure and undefiled) is "the salt of the earth;" and that Freemasonry cannot be a substitute, as they delude themselves to believe."

Milo Stark, Lee Center, Ill., writes:

"As I have been reading your paper for two years, and heartily agree with you in sentiment as regards the mystical order, Freemasonry, and have been so intimately acquainted with the venerable family as to know their proceedings; and having become dissatisfied therewith, have taken my departure from the (dis) honorable parental roof, I desire to record my eternal abhorrence of the Father (lodge) who did nothing for, and required everything of, me. I am a member of the body of Christ's church, called by the name of Episcopal Methodists, and glory in the cross so valiantly borne by many of its ministers; but with you can note the deficiency, the lack of power and efficiency with God and man, apparent in those who adhere to Mammon (the lodge) while they try to serve God; which the Bible plainly declares they cannot do. Be not deceived; God is not mocked. The time is coming when the Cross will triumph over every foe. God will send a Lincoln or a Luther, or perhaps a Cynosure, at least some instrument though it be as simple, yet will be as effectual as David's sling to lay Goliath low. The church of the living God must and will be purified, though it be by fire. I would not leave my family and home to be destroyed by some unruly members who might help to constitute it, but would exclude those that happiness might reign again. Neither would I leave the church as though I stood alone in this matter. There are many, very many who are laying aside their mystical robes, and donning the robes of Christ's righteousness; coming up to the help of Christ against this mighty evil. I stand with them to fight or die. My motto is, Holiness and heaven. To such Christ says, come out from among them and be ye separate."

Forty Years Ago.

Action of a Methodist Conference.

We are informed on respectable authority that at the late general conference of the Ohio Methodist church, the subject of Freemasonry incidentally came up for discussion.

When the question was first mentioned in that pious and venerable body, a deep and unusual sensation pervaded those members present, who belonged to the masonic society. Several of those worthy men had been entrapped into lodge rooms, by the pleasing allurement of religion, held forth to them by Freemasons, and by the secret policy of the Grand Lodge of Ohio, which authorized its subordinate lodges to bestow on licensed preachers the first three degrees gratis. By these arts several ministers of the Methodist church had been induced to join the fraternity. But the time had now arrived when the principles of the order were before the conference for investigation, and the doctrines of the pious Wesley were to be contrasted with the secret obligations which led to the murder of a fellow citizen. it was no wonder, then, that the feelings of the members were excited, and that the heavy sigh was heard to burst from those bosoms on which rested Masonic obligations, The Rev. James C. Taylor was the first to cast off the shackles that bound his conscience. He rose and briefly stated that it had been his misfortune to be led into the masonic society—but that he now openly renounced it forever. The effect which this declaration produced was all-powerful. The Masonic members of the conference instantly withdrew, and with the same spirit which actuated Mr. Taylor, formed a written declaration that they would never attend a Masonic lodge, or participate in a Masonic festival; to which declaration they formally subscribed their names.

Thus had the Ohio conference at once wiped away a stain from the purity of its character, and proved itself worthy the the pious exertions of the great founder of their creed, who indured labor and pain and persecution to erect the church.—Tuscarawas Chronicle.

The Grand Jury of Niagara county last week found bills of indictment against Jeremiah Brown and Solomon C. Wright for participating in the abduction of William Morgan. These bills were found the testimony of a witness who was called upon by Wright to assist in guarding Morgan in W's barn while the bandits were waiting for the Lockport reinforcement. This witness is a Royal Arch Mason. He has been in Canada ever since the outrage. Great exertions have been made to get his testimony, but had heretofore failed. He states that Morgan was pinioned, blindfolded and gagged.—Anti-masonic Christian Herald, Jan. 29th, 1829.

LESSON XXI.—AUG. 2, 1874.—JESUS AND THE SABBATH.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK ii. 23-28, and iii. 1-5. Commit Verses 27,28.

23. And it came to pass, that he went through the cornfields on the Sabbath day; and his disciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn.

24. And the Pharisees said unto him, Behold, why do they on the Sabbath-day that which is not lawful?

25. And he said unto them, Have ye never read what David did, when he had need and was an hungered, he, and they that were with him?
26. How he went into the house of God, in the days of Abiathar the high priest, and did eat the shew-bread, which is not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave also to them which were with him?
27. And he said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man and not man for the Sabbath:
28. Therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath.
1. And he entered again into the synagogue; and there was a man there which had a withered hand.
2. And they watched him, whither he would heal him on the Sabbath-day; that they might accuse him.
3. And he saith to the man which had the withered hand, Stand forth.
4. And he saith unto them, Is it lawful to do good on the Sabbath days, or to do evil? to save life, or to kill? But they held their peace.
5. And when he had looked round about on them with anger being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, he saith unto the man, Streteh forth thine hand. And he stretched it out; and his hand was restored whole as the other.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I gave them my Sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them.—Ezek. xx. 12.

CENTRAL TRUTH.—The Son of man is Lord of the Sabbath.

HOME READINGS.—Ex. xx, 8-11; Deut. xxiii. 24, 25; Ex. xxix. 31-37; 1 Sam. xxi. 1-9; Matt. xii. 1-14; Luke vi. 1-11; John v. 1-16.

In this lesson we may study the true idea of the Sabbath, as shown in the words and works of Jesus Christ. The Pharisees and Christ referred to the law, (vs. 24 and 4). We learn (1) of the appointment of the Sabbath by God and his estimate of it: Gen. ii. 1-3; Ex. xvi. 22-30 and xxxi. 12-17; vs. viii. 13; and the first home reading. Christ's followers observed the Sabbath, Luke xxii. 56. The commandment given to the Jews was for the seventh day; and there is no difficulty as to time if that nation only was to observe the day, because they occupied a limited territory. When the keeping of one day of rest was given to all the world it is evident that all could not be keeping holy the same space of time. So when the Christian religion was given to all the world, the disciples neglected the seventh day and kept the first, the day of Christ's resurrection (John xx. 19-26), which is appropriately called the Lord's day, Rev. i-10. "The practice of the courts is the highest law" in the case. But (2) the Sabbath was made for man. Men and animals need a period of rest and recuperation. The seventh day is the best, and has been proven so by instances too numerous to be gainsaid. The French nation tried by law to establish a tenth-day rest, but failed. The Lord's day "is the poor man's day." The Sabbath was made for man in his highest being—for his soul. Giving rein to appetite and passion, or any indulgence is disregarding it; so does any mere attempt to cultivate taste and intelligence.

We should learn (1) the Sabbath is important under both Testaments. (2) The day changed, but the seventh part of the time is holy. (3) Not idleness for idleness' sake, but rest from work for the sake of the soul and body is required. (4) Keep the days to the Lord.

The Sabbath.

In connection with the Sunday-school lesson read the following extract from an opinion delivered by Judge Brown, of Michigan, in a case involving the Sunday ordinances. It had been argued that these could no more be considered a police regulation than any other social question on which some enthusiast might imagine the happiness of the people to depend. To this the Judge replied: "It must not be forgotten that we live in a Christian country, and that the observance of the Christian Sabbath has been a subject of legislation ever since the establishment of our government. The profanation of the Lord's day was punished by the municipal law of England long before we had an existence as an independent government. The laws of King Athelstane forbade merchandising on that day. By the statute 27 Hen. VI., C. 5, no fair nor market could be legally held on Sunday (except the four Sundays in harvest.) The statute of 1 Car. 1., C. 1, was to restrain sports on that day; and by 29 Car. 11., C. 7, no person is allowed to 'work on the Lord's day, nor use any boat or barge, or expose any goods to sale, except meat in public houses, milk at certain hours, and works of necessity and charity.' In 4 Wend. B'l Com. 63, we find the following: 'Besides the notorious indecency and scandal of permitting any secular business to be publicly transacted on that day in a country professing Christianity, and the corruption of morals which usually follows its profanation, the keeping of one day in seven holy, as a time of relaxation and refreshment, as well as for public worship, is of admirable service to a state, considered merely as a civil institution; . . . it imprints on the minds of the people that sense of their duty to God, so necessary to make them good citizens.' Our own statute forbids any secular business on the Sabbath. Ordinary labor on that day is deemed a misdemeanor. Can it be said that the making of drunkards, widows, and orphans on that day is less criminal."

Home and Health Hints.

Our Teeth.

BY DR. J. H. HANAFORD.

Since it is a well known fact that the body is constantly decaying, wasting away, it follows that the waste occasioned by such transformations must be supplied by our daily food. If this food contains all of the elements needed in the body to reproduce its bones, muscles, tissues, etc., the work of demolishing and reconstructing goes on without interruption. But it is too often true that some of the most important elements are wanting, are not found in the food used by a large class in almost every community.

Among the most important, or some of these, are carbon, or heat-producing; nitrogen, or the muscle-producing; phosphorus, or the nerve and brain-sustaining and the bone-producing elements. In the bill of fare for the epicure it is quite certain that the carbon will always be abundant, as found in the oils, sweets and starch, as in ardent spirits; while we should be surprised to find this class anxious about the supply of brain food. It follows that the muscular system—really the basis of power, and endurance, if not of mental and moral vigor—is sadly neglected; while the whole bony structure, including our teeth, of course, is in a constant state of starvation. As a result, or the natural and necessary result, the muscles are slight, flaccid and nerveless, the skin yellow, cadaverous and unnatural, the bones porous and brittle, and the teeth—who can describe them? They scarcely appear. The first set, before they waste away like the morning dew, crumble, wear away with the slightest use, a constant source of discomfort—neither useful nor ornamental. They are too often suggestive of a mass of ruins, such as are seen when the devouring element sweeps over a city; disgusting ruins of what should have been a coveted ornament, now black, dilapidated, irregular, corrupt and corrupting; like a gloomy, unsightly cave in which are decaying the bones of the dead slaughtered there by beasts of prey.

As a legitimate result, by far too many are supplied with false teeth before reaching majority; before which time they must bear about with them the evidences of uncleanness that might put even the swine to blush; from whose mouths a fetor almost unendurable by the fastidious is ever emanating, highly suggestive of the "Augean stables," which even Hercules found it so difficult to cleanse.

Indeed, no one can be regarded as beautiful, especially females, without good teeth. Lavater says that "the contenance is the theatre on which the soul exhibits itself;" and adds, "as are the teeth of a man, so are his tastes." "The teeth are the finest ornaments of the human countenance; their regularity and whiteness constitute their chief attraction. Even when the mouth exceeds its ordinary size, fine teeth serve to disguise this defect."

A writer says: "Let a woman have fine eyes, a pretty mouth, a handsome nose, a well-turned forehead, elegant hair and a charming complexion, but only let her teeth be bad, blackened by caries, or covered with tartar or vicid accretions—let them, in a word, exhale a contaminated breath, and the moment she opens her mouth she will cease to be thought beautiful.

That our teeth—the permanent set—were intended to last during life, seems evident, not only from their peculiar structure, but from the nature of the case, since there is no provision for their reproduction. This fact is highly suggestive of the imperative duty to exercise care in protecting them, and also to nourish them by a proper supply of the elements needed in their growth. This idea, however, is too often ignored in the selection of our food, which is generally selected principally in reference to taste rather than with due regard to health. Our fine food is nearly destitute of the elements needed to sustain both the muscles and the bones. These elements in the grains, are found principally in the hull and the outer crust; that inclosing the central mass of starch, the fine and white part of all cereals. Even the husk or hull contains iron, silex, etc., while nine-tenths of all the muscle-making elements reside in the red crust, with the phosphates of soda and lime, of which the bones are made.

If, therefore, we wish to be muscular and strong, if we would have good bones such as will not easily break, we must nourish them. To do this it will be necessary in the use of the grains to use them in accordance with the design of the Creator, receiving all of the elements of nutrition made for our use. Oat-meal, graham and the meals of all the grains will nourish the brain, muscles and bones far more than the fine flour. The wheat, as a whole, is regarded as the best, and I know of no preparation equaling that called "Smith's crushed white wheat" made at Brooklyn, N. Y., at once palatable, wholesome, nourishing, easy of digestion, particularly favorable for the sick,—good for all classes.

Farm and Garden.

How to Manage Manure.

A writer in the American Agriculturist says that when horse manure has been allowed to mould, or become covered with a light white fungus, it is in the condition known as firefanged, and has parted with its chiefly valuable quality and cannot be restored. Fresh manure, if kept under cover, should be turned whenever it has become heated so that steam arises from it. If outside, it should be laid up in a broad pile, with dishing top, so as to catch the rain that falls. If plenty of rain falls while the pile is heating, so that it be kept moist, it will not become firefanged; if not, it should be turned once or twice. Sods may be rotted for potting purposes by piling them in a heap and leaving them during the summer. Animal manure is not the best for lawns, on account of the weed seeds contained in it. Guano or blood manure, at the rate of 250 pounds per acre, with a bushel of plaster each spring, is the best dressing; wood ashes also are an excellent fertilizer.—Rural.

CULTIVATING RASPBERRIES AND BLACKBERRIES.—After fruiting the old canes may be cut away, or may be left to assist in supporting the new canes, as they make growth. When this new growth has reached three or four feet, according to circumstances, the ends should be clipped, which will tend to strengthen the laterals when they appear and promote fruit growth. This will also cause the vines to stand up better. They should in no case be allowed to ramble at will.

Summer Blankets for Horses.

Blanketing horses in summer is now an acknowledged necessity; and light blankets are now an important portion of the harness-maker's stock. The materials used for these are brown and bleached linen, scrims, flannel and light cotton duck. Muslin sheets are also used; but these, as well as those made of duck, are not popular. Linen and flannel are the favorite goods; they cost more, but are durable and look well. Twilled braid is used for binding and joining and some of the finer qualities have monograms or the name of the horse worked on with very narow brade of the same shade as the binding. Scrims is used more as a protection against flies than for any other purpose; and being very loosely woven, requires to be well bound at the seams. A strip of light leather should be stitched on under the braid, either on the back of the scrims or between it and the braid. The edge must be turned in so that the outer row of stitches will pass through two thicknesses; if this is not done it will ravel and the binding will come off.—Rural.

The Christian Cynosure.

Chicago, Thursday, July 23, 1874.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

STERLING, Ill., July 16, 1874.

DEAR CYNOSURE :—I am here to address the Ladies' Temperance Association, which held a very full mass meeting in the Congregational church of this beautiful town last night. The audience was very intelligent and attentive, and the usual vote of thanks and request of copy for the press was taken by rising.

As Rev. Mr. Stoughton, (Freemason), and Gen. Samuel Carey, Good Templar, have spoken here before me, and, as the people here are almost "wholly given" to secret societies, I wondered at the request for a speech from myself. But this is an age of wonders, and the people of Sterling are intelligent and wish, doubtless, to hear all sorts. Mrs. Dr. Gordon is president, and Mrs. Jenne, secretary of their association, and the sentiment of this place is strongly temperance. Rock River, at this place, is beautiful, and the water-power perfect. An artesian well is nearly completed, and a soft, clear, beautiful stream of water pours steadily forth from the well already. Would that every town in Illinois had the like!

I meet my old students here, and almost every where, and it is very grateful to be greeted by them with no cloud on our memories. Very many talk of sending to Wheaton next September, and I hope our nice rooms in Wheaton College will all be filled; but, above all, that God will meet and continue with us as heretofore.

S. V. White, Esq, one of Mr. Beecher's investigating committee, is one of the Knox College graduates, and a noble and upright man. He has admired and loved his pastor, but I shall be disappointed if his part of the decision, at least, is not as just as he can make it. I learn, as I pass along, that the so-called "liberals," which means infidels and spirit-worshiping admirers of Henry Ward Beecher, rejoice in the increasing evidence of the guilt and shame of their idol, because the churches and religion of Jesus Christ are to suffer by it.

The Rev. Lucien Farnham was buried last week at Princeton, Ill., where he was an original abolitionest, the first pastor of the church there, and always a good and consistent man, and active friend of the Cynosure reform. He was 75 years old the day he died, and said to Mrs. Farnham, "I shall spend part of my birthday in heaven."

Mr. J. V. Farwell is here in Sterling, visiting his good mother. He was out to hear me last night attended by his sister. His father died here.

The more I see of this great and glorious country of ours, the less I wonder that Satan strives for it.

In haste, J. B.

THE REFORM IN MOLINE—U. B. CHURCH—MINISTERIAL MASONS—FREEMASON PRESIDENT FOR KNOX COLLEGE—THE CANDIDATE FOR STATE SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT—ENLARGEMENT NEEDED.

MOLINE, Ill., July 18, 1874.

DEAR CYNOSURE :—In still times things follow their tendencies; and, as a rule, in this world, the tendencies of things is downward. Not one motion has been attempted against these secret orders in this beautiful city of Moline since I spoke here some years ago in the United Brethren church. This society was almost extinct then, and it has about held its own. Their pastor loathes the lodge. But he is building a parsonage here, and depends on outsiders to help him pay for it, and so is under implied bonds to keep the peace with the secret orders which rule here, at least till his parsonage is paid for. This may be wise for a little while, but it is a mistaken policy as a rule. The "god of this world" keeps his children posted, and the lodge discusses every church and every other institution on the soil which has a bearing on itself.

I hear of several fearless and decided anti-secret order men here in Moline, and if there was only a leader here who would get up a monthly concert of prayer here for the overthrow of the modern Dagon-worships, those who sigh in secret for the desolations coming on the country and cause of Christ from the multitude of strange oaths and strange worships, would rally, and something would be done. Now all is silent as the grave. There is not life enough in the United Brethren church here even to ask me to lecture, now I am present. And the pastor says he has let his Cynosure run out, and that when he came here he found but three working United Brethren and two sisters. He got rid of the male members who did not agree among themselves, and started anew. As he is a resolute and good man, he has gained a little, and but a little, strength.

When I was here before, the Methodist Episcopal minister (Tullis) was complimentary to me; said he was an old student of mine; and acted the usual role of pretended indifference to the lodge. But these Masonic preachers have anything under the heavens but indifference. They are calm and silent on the subject in ordinary society, or among their Christian brethren; but the moment they are alone with Freemasons a change passes over their whole moral and intellectual being, analagous to the galvanic change which comes over a sleepy rat-terrier when put in a grain bin which smells of vermin and promises prey.

When will true and faithful United Brethren, and other ministers, learn that our duty and our interest are one on earth and one in heaven. That every dollar given by adhering Masons who love their lodge to aid a Brethren church will be given with a sneer or remonstrance, in hope to bribe or intimidate the preacher, or to break the force of his testimony against secretism, by accusing him of getting money from Masons to help him, and then abusing them. As "A little that a righteous man hath is better [mightier] than the riches of many wicked," so the contribution of a poor widow amounting, in all, to "two mites which make a farthing," will do more to build up a church of Christ than the donations of "many that are rich" who "cast in much."

I see by the papers that W. S. Powell, Knight Templar, stands the best chance to be Superintendent of Schools in Illinois, as the successor of Hon. Newton Bateman, who is talked of as President of Knox College! Only think of an adhering Freemason President of Knox College; an institution committed to the cause of reform by the prayers and tears and toils of the best men on earth! Even my successor, Dr. Gulliver, loathed the College secret orders and attempted (ineffectually,) their suppression through the College Association.

But to return to Mr. Powell. Must a Knight Templar, a man with seventy-two blasphemous oaths in his conscience; oaths which he recognizes, and swears over again, virtually, every time he enters a commandery,—is such a mind a fit guide for the schools of Illinois? Is a man, with the fifth libation from a human skull at his lips, and a double damnation invoked in his prayer, or imprecation,—is such a man a fit model for our raising young men in the popular school system of Illinois?

But, what can we do? We have one weekly paper and the lodge, as a rule, has the press.

I answer, We can do all things through Christ strengthening us. The change in the few short years since our first convention in Aurora City Hall, is vast, wonderful, far beyond anything wrought by the anti-slavery discussion during the first six years of its existence.

Nevertheless, we must push steadily to proportion our means to the proposed ends. We ought to have monthly prayer-meetings, or turn the old "Monthly Concerts" into meetings to pray for the downfall of heathenism and spread of Christianity, "beginning at Jerusalem," here in the United States. Then we ought to have a tract society, larger than that of Cincinnati or New York, which will not shun to declare the whole counsel of God to men; and also a central daily press in the city of Chicago (unless Satan burns it down) to impress the living mass of mind which flows and counterflows from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Meantime, let us stand by our guns and look steadily for help to Him who made heaven and earth.

I am to preach here to-morrow, in the beautiful Congregational church, on the duty of national recognition of Christ and Christianity. To this a Christless lodge never will consent. It must, therefore, fall before Christ shall reign on the earth.

Yours in Christ, J. B.

THE "INTERIOR" ON FALSE RELIGIONS.

The week after the Masonic corner stone laying at the Chicago Custom-House, the organ of the Presbyterian church for the northwest published at some length the ceremony and the odes sung on the occasion, on which are based the following deductions and remarks:

These ceremonies and symbols prove that Masonry is a system of religion. If not, then all the tests and traits of a religious organism go for nothing, and there is no method of distinguishing between a religious system and a literary or social club, or a co-operative union of any sort. Masonry is a monotheistic system, requiring subscription to a creed, the chief article of which is the belief in the existence of God and his direct government of men. It is eminently a religion of emblems, and speaks to the understanding after the manner of the primitive ages, making implements and many curious designs the representatives of articles of belief and of sundry virtues. It very clearly teaches the attainment of immortal life through the practice of lofty virtues and obedience to a system of pure morals. It is claimed, and we doubt not with truth, that obedience to the precepts of Masonry will lead to a benevolent and irreproachable life in all the relations, domestic, social and civil.

We shall not claim, nor do we believe, that the profession and practice of Masonry cannot co-exist with the profession and practice of Christianity. But every system of religion is exclusive in its character, and is a rival and an opponent of all other systems; and whether Freemasons intend it or not, they are furnishing to the world a religion which tends to satisfy the religious nature of man, and to exclude the religion of Jesus Christ. A very common remark to be heard from individuals in nearly all Masonic communities, is that "Masonry is as good a religion as I want. If I square my life to Masonry I shall be a good and worthy man." We doubt if there is a member of that order anywhere who has not heard similar expressions. It is undeniable, and, so far as we know, not denied, that Masonry holds out to its membership the promise of a blessed immortality as the reward of obedience to its maxims and the practice of its virtues. This excludes salvation through the atonement of Jesus Christ.

No man can give hearty adherence to two or more rival religious systems. A church member will be a more zealous Christian for not being a Mason, and a Mason will be more devoted to his craft for not being a church member. We have no passionate war to wage upon Freemasonry, nor have we any crimination or disparagement to heap upon them. On the contrary, we are by no means blind to the high standard of their code of morals, and, as an outside observer, have known instances in which it was rigorously applied in the exclusion of applicants and the suspension of members. They are entitled to as respectful treatment as any other religious system, and must expect and respect sharp criticism and earnest opposition from evangelical Christianity. It is true that some members of that order honestly disavow any claims for their organization as a religious sect, or any rivalry with religious denominations. We accept their disavowals as sincere and yet dispute the truthfulness of their opinion on this point. The facts are against any such view; and it is due to all parties concerned both in the Masonic bodies and the Christian churches, that their natural and necessary relations to each other should be fully understood.

For a logic which has dropped its morality but not the dread of opposition, the above is not a bad specimen. That Freemasonry "teaches the attainment of immortal life," "tends to satisfy the religious nature of man, and to exclude the religion of Jesus Christ," "holds out to its membership the promise of a blessed immortality" to those who are faithful, "excludes salvation through the atonement of Jesus Christ," is a "rival religious system," and must expect "earnest opposition from evangelical Christianity" are just conclusions from the performances described; and every lover of truth must rejoice that the Interior has observed and published them to the churches. Doubtless the same clear mental perceptions led Prof. Patton, its editor, to engage with the liberalism of Prof. Swing. But does he, when he enters his office, leave his conscience with his umbrella at the door? The Interior is supported for a religious paper, and must often perform the office of pastor in warning, exhortation and counsel. Why then hesitate to make practical application of its conclusions, if honestly drawn? How explain the claim of believing that "the profession and practice of Masonry" may "co-exist with the profession and practice of Christianity," whose great Founder expressly says that such professions and practices cannot co-exist?

No one has required the Interior to wage a "passionate war" on the lodge, least of all Jesus Christ whom it professes to serve. But it will not be denied that he demands an opposition to this system commensurate with the knowledge of its evil principles and tendencies, and no Christian editor in our country and time can be excusably ignorant on this subject. Were the apostles of Brigham Young, or of Mohammed, or Loyola proselyting by the hundred from the Presbyterian church, casting their mantles on its ministers, reflecting their baleful light upon its hearth-stones, there would be no delay in bringing a courageous war against them. There would be no acknowledgements paid to their "precepts" or the "high standing of their code of morals," but such apparent virtues would be given their just due. For only the restraints of the true religion curb the vices of all false systems and compel them to simulate its virtues. Unless the Interior fears the effect of its words and wishes to blunt them with such expressions, it is hard to explain their meaning; and it should know that sin is is not abandoned by the world by objections made from our knees. And if anything is a sin in a Christian land, it is the practice of a false religion.

—Rev. John Levington in the Methodist Free Press complains of inaccuracy in the minutes of the last annual meeting. The Cynosure's report represented that Mr. Levington said he would leave the lecture field unless appointed national lecturer by the convention. He says that he said he would not "accept" unless so appointed. The motion to appoint him a national lecturer was made after ten o'clock when the audience had largely retired and members of the convention were preparing to leave. There were several other things which Mr. Levington says he did not hear. Thus the expression in the motion to appoint him a national lecturer "like Mr. Stoddard," he says he did not hear. The report also states that an effort was made to refer the appointment to the Executive Committee. Mr. Levington complains that the name of the mover of reference was not given. It was Mr. Stoddard who made the motion.

The attention of correspondents is called to the necessity of condencing as much as possible. Our letters are so numerous that it will be otherwise impossible to publish a large part of them.

In regard to the grasshoppers in Minnesota we have seen a letter from A. Fancher, the clerk of the District Court of Martin county, in which the writer says: "Of 23,000 acres sown in this county, not one acre remains to be harvested. Hundreds are leaving to obtain work in the eastern portion of the State, while others cannot leave without sacrificing their all. Our governor is doing what he can to aid in this our extremity. There are 15,000 people in the devastated district, consisting of five counties. Martin county contains 4,000 of that number." A committee appointed by the citizens of the county have published an appeal for aid to the country at large, and their urgent need should have a prompt response. Aid may be sent to the Board of county commissioners, Fairmont, Martin Co., Minn.

NOTES.

—Milton Woodard of Adams, Jefferson county, N. Y., a former Vice-president of the New York State Association, died at his home on the 7th of May last, aged 85 years. He was one of the "old line" Antimasons and was steadfast in his opposition to the lodge to the last.

—The letter on the Civil Rights Bill from Gerrit Smith to Frederick Douglas on our third page will be read with interest as an opinion of a life-long and zealous toiler for the redemption of the colored race. Mr. Smith has lately led the way toward Minnesota by a contribution of $1,000 to the sufferers from the grasshopper scourge in that State and Iowa.

—The ambition for title, place, a "little brief authority," so well exemplified by the lodge and every other system of religious error, is a source of disquiet in the Jewish church. There is, it is claimed, an excess of synagogues in all our large cities, for the reason that the Jews consider themselves created a nation of priests, and each wants a chief seat, an official recognition as a "Prince in Israel." Hence discord and separation. A love of vain-glory is a leading virtue of Masonry so far as we may judge of its fruits. But the Gospel of Jesus and the fellowship of saints knows but one "Master," one "Priest," one "Prince," and all the rest are "brethren."

—If anything in our work could inspire a shout of Praise the Lord! it is such a letter as may be read on another page from Bro. Love, of Missouri. The angels rejoice when a sinner repents, do they not also when saints go on to perfection in holiness? There is no opposition to this dark system of the devil so necessary, so glorious in result, so difficult of accomplishment, humanly speaking, as the redemption of a church from the lodge. And we must never cease to regard this as the first great objective point in our work. And the Lord seems every where working with us; his Spirit even far out runs our efforts. The other day, on the cars, a good Methodist brother from Minnesota, who knew nothing of the National Association, told us of the opposition to the lodge in his church, and their refusal of Masonic ministers. We need more workers to find out these scattered friends, and secure their co-operation and second their efforts for the truth.

Religious Intelligence.

—Jesuit missionaries are making their way into Madagascar. They claim 74 places of worship and 44 priests in the central province.

—The second "Union convention for the Promotion of Holiness" has opened at Ocean Grove, N. J., and is attended by numerous ministers from New York. The town is celebrated as a watering place as well as for its camp-meeting.

—A portion of the congregation of the First Baptist Church, Chicago, met in the ruins of their once beautiful building (burned in last week's fire) last Sunday evening, and held an interesting service, conducted by B. F. Jacobs, superintendent of the Sabbath-school.

—There are forty-eight missionary societies among American, British and other European Protestants, connected with which are 9,418 missionaries, colporteurs, etc., having under their care 518,000 pupils in missionary schools. The annual receipts of these societies are $4,500,000.

—A convention was held in Geneva, O., June 27th, Rev. H. Kinsley, Moderator, to consider and protest against the prevailing and increasing desecration of the Sabbath. Committees were appointed to visit the cheese factories in several localities, and to present an appeal to the managers of the L. S., and Mich. Southern railroad.

—In Liberia there are 52 ordained Baptist ministers, all of whom, with one exception, are men of color. Six of them are converts from heathen tribes. Besides these, ninety men and women, not ordained, are employed in the work of the Gospel. One king in the vicinity has offered 8,000 acres of land for a mission station.

—From 1861 to 1871, the number of Baptist missionaries in India was increased by only nine, from 479 to 488. But the number of ordained native preachers increased from 97 to 225; the number of churches or congregations from 971 to 2,278, and the number of communicants from 24,976 to 52,816.

—In 1845 the first missionaries settled in the Chota Nagpur, India, among the Kols. For five years they labored without visible fruits. At last four men came who were anxious to see Jesus. These became the first fruits of the mission. Now the converts number more than 10,000.

—A remarkable religious revival occured last year among the Syrian Christians at Malabar. The revival was of great power, and seems to have partaken of the characteristics of the revivals of the times of Edwards in New England. One great centre of superstition and saint worship was effected, The results of the revival are of the happiest kind on the priests and the people.

—Dr. Schaff at the late commencement of Hamilton College, N. Y., delivered an address on the relations of church and state. He said that though the two were divorced, as in this country, yet the State is bound to maintain four things based upon Christianity namely, monogamy, the quiet and order of the Sabbath, the Bible in the schools, and exemption of church property from taxation.

—The General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church met in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 3d. There were 75 ministerial and 44 lay delegates present, representing four particular Synods, 34 classes and about 65,000 members. The question of union with other bodies was warmly discussed, but no plans for organic union were favorably received. A revised Litergy was adopted, which indicated a leaning toward ritualism. The grange was condemned and the temperance movement was moderately endorsed.

—Before he went to England Mr. Moody organized a benevolent enterprise in Chicago under the name of "Bible Work." It consists of a daily morning school for children a sewing school on each Saturday, and Bible reading from house to house and visiting the sick; also mother's meetings and cottage prayer-meetings. At the departure of Mr. Moody the work was entrusted to the superintendence of Miss E. Dryer and has been prosecuted vigorously. For the month of June the sewing school had an entire attendance of 862; the number of religious and Bible visits 690; visits to the sick 55, and other departments of the work in like proportions.

News of the Week.

—The second great conflagration of Chicago, July 14th, ourned over some sixty acres of ground and destroyed property estimated at three and a quarter million dollars. Five persons are known to have perished. The fire began near the corner of 12th and Clark streets in a building owned by a Jewish ragpicker, and stored with his wealth. A large oil refinery was near and was on fire before the first engine, manned by a colored company, was at work. The exploding oil spread the flames for rods in every direction, destroying the engine and giving the fire uncontrollable headway among low, crowded wooden buildings, dry as tinder. The fire, driven by a strong south-west wind, burned ovor a space nearly one-fourth of a mile wide and twice as long. The firemen are generally believed to have worked well, but were unable to stop the fire until the brick walls of the newly built portion of the city gave them an advantage. Nearly five blocks swept by the fire of 1871 were burned. The First Baptist Church, two colored churches, two Jewish synagogues, four hotels, a theater and the Wabash Ave. M. E. church, used as the Post-office, were the prominent buildings burned. The city is wholly aroused to the danger of fires. Large meetings of citizens have been held, and the daily papers devote page after page to the subject. On Monday night the Common Council took the first step by passing an ordinance extending the fire limits to the bounds of the city. Other measures for the reform of the fire department and further protection by wide streets, increase of water supply, will doubtless follow. The houseless people are receiving all necessary aid. The classes burned out are largely colored people and Jews.—While Chicago is busied with fires, New York is thoroughly excited over the Beecher-Tilton matter. On Monday night Tilton made a sworn statement supported by strong documentary proof of Beecher's unlawful intimacy with Mrs. Tilton Mr. Beecher has not yet made his defense, but is with the help of able lawyers preparing it. It is said that even Ben Butler's aid has been sought. There is general confidence in the investigating committee, and their verdict is anxiously awaited. Whatever the result God's truth will not in the end suffer. No one will wish to be an adulterer and have Beecher's punishment, or an advocate of free love and suffer its results with Tilton.

The Home Circle.

Alone With Jesus.

Alone with Jesus! There will he
Show me his feet, his side, his hands;
Tell me he suffered, died for me,
And as a Saviour now he stands.

Alone with Jesus! "Peace" he speaks;
"Neither do I comdemn," he cries;
And thus I'm blest, forgiven, saved,
And wait my Saviour from the skies.

A Plain Question.

I went to visit a lady in an anxious state of mind. She was a stranger to me, but attended upon my ministry, and I had been requested to call upon her. Arrived at the house, I rang, and a lady came forward to meet me. I asked if she were Mrs. M——.

"No," she said, Mrs. M——is not in; but if you have any message for her, I will recieve it."

I was somewhat embarrassed, not knowing exactly what to say; but I answered, "I wanted particularly to see Mrs. M——."

Again she said, "If you have any message for her, you can leave it with me."

I replied, "I have come to converse with Mrs. M——, on the subject of religion. But perhaps, after all, my Master has sent me to you. Will you allow me to ask if you have peace with God, because your sins are forgiven through the Lord Jesus Christ?"

The lady seemed very much overcome by the inquiry, and answered: "No, I have not," and sank into a chair. At the same time she asked me to be seated.

"Do you really desire to be a Christian?" I said.

"I do," she replied.

"Are you willing to do just what God requires, that you may be a Christian?"

"I think I am willing and anxious to do what God requires of me. What am I to do?"

"Only believe on the Lord Jesus Christ as your Saviour with all your heart."

"And is that all?" she asked.

"Yes, that is all. Now will you believe in him?"

"I will try to do so."

"Ah, that will not do. You must not try, but you must believe in him. You must trust him. Now suppose I came here and told you that I would do something for you which you were very anxious to have done, and suppose you should then say to me, I will try to believe you—would you think you treated me well?"

"No, sir; certainly not."

"Then will you treat the Lord Jesus Christ as you would not treat me, a poor fellow mortal?"

"No, I will not. That would be very sinful."

"Indeed it would."

"Then how am I to believe on him?"

"True, you are unworthy, utterly unworthy of the least favor from God. Your whole life condemns you. You have not loved and honored God as he deserves."

"How, then, can I hope to be saved?"

"Your hope must be in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus. Salvation is of pure grace. No mortal deserves it."

"But God is a holy aud righteous Judge, and he is angry with sin."

"Yes; but he loves the sinner; and he has sent his only begotten Son into the world to die, 'the just for the unjust.' God has judged, condemned, and punished sin in the person of our Substitute, so that he can now, in his infinite goodness, freely pardon and receive us."

"But how may I know that he will receive me?"

"Because He sends you his message, which is recorded in his word, that it is His will, 'that whosoever'—whosoever of all the sinful race of man—'believeth in Him'—that is, in Jesus as his Saviour—should not perish, but have everlasting life.' Is not that warrant enough for you to hope for salvation? Does not 'whosoever' take in your case? Can you receive that word, whosoever, and shut yourself out."

She was silent for a short time; and then laying hold of the promise as she repeated the words, 'that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish," her countenance brightened up with joy, and she exclaimed, "I receive God's message as a message to myself. I do, I will accept of Christ as my Saviour. I will, I do trust in Him."

"And trusting in Him," I added, you will never be confounded. Trust in Jesus, and pardon and peace are yours."—Pastor.

Anecdotes of Isaac T. Hopper.

What Philadelphian of forty years ago does not remember Isaac T. Hopper? He was a bold and unshrinking friend of freedom. On one occasion he followed a slaveholder who was carrying a free man into slavery. Overtaking him near Gray's Ferry bridge, he requested him to return. The slaveholder presented his pistol, and swore that if any one molested him or said another word he would blow his brains out.

"If thou wert not a coward, thou wouldst not try to intimidate me with thy pistol, which thou hast no intention of using," said Isaac, with a calm gravity that could not be shaken. "It is in vain for thee to think of taking that man to Maryland; and, if thou wilt not turn back, voluntarily, thou shalt be stopped at the bridge."

Friend Hopper once went to the lodgings of a slaveholder, who, in the arrest of a slave, had violated a law of the State, with a warrant and two officers for his arrest. They found him at a table writing with a pistol on each side of him. He seized a pistol and ordered them to withdraw or he would shoot them.

"These men," said Isaac, "are officers, and have a warrant to arrest thee. I advise thee to lay down thy pistol and go with us. Remember, thou art in the heart of Philadelphia, and a pistol is a very unnecessary article here, whatever it may be elsewhere. Thou dost not attempt to use it for any other purpose than to frighten people, and thou hast not succeeded in doing that."

Rage could do nothing with such resolute calmness, and the slaveholder consented to go. Isaac was a Quaker, and he appealed to the law, as he himself said, with no vindictive feelings; but only to hedge in slavery with all the difficulties the law could give.

Isaac T. Hopper was not a sectarian, but a friend of humanity. The poor and the suffering always found a friend in him. He visited prisoners in their lonely cells, when they were cast off and forsaken by the world. So much confidence did Governor Young, of New York, place in his judgment and his honesty, that he once wrote to him: "Friend Hopper, I will pardon any convict whom you say you conscientiously believe I ought to pardon."—The Journal.

Christian Cheerfulness.

The language of the religion of Christ truly in the heart is that of rejoicing. "I will joy in the God of my salvation," said Habakkuk. Joy and peace are the fruits of believing. "Believing," said Peter, "ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Paul, too, closes one of his epistles with the charge to all saints, saying: "Rejoice evermore." All these and the multiplied similar expressions in the Holy Scriptures, show in the clearest terms that cheerfulness and joy are divinely intended to be among the most marked characteristics, and should be regarded as among the most constant of the privileges and duties of every true Christian.

Yet how far is all this practically from many that bear the Christian name? Their countenance looks as if it were seldom or never lighted up with the comfort and bliss of a joyful heart within. Their very coming into the social circle is not unfrequently the signal for every sign of cheerfulness and joy to flee away as dangerous or forbidden things.

But why should such things be? If a man has truly had his sins forgiven, been reconciled to God, and made to have a good hope of its being certainly, and in the best of all senses, well with him, both in this life and in that which is to come, has he not of all persons some ground upon which he may have joy, and if he has it as the fault of his faith in Christ and through his religion, ought he not to show it to others?—Ex.

Regular Habits in Children.

A large number of parents either underestimate, or in their domestic regulations neglect to recognize the great importance of regular habits in children. The injunction of the wise man, "Train up a child in the way he should go," so that "when he is old he will not depart from it," is not more important or more imperative than his command to "ponder the path of thy feet and let all thy ways be established," and through thy ways the ways of thy children also. Repetition is natural. Nature is repetition, subject only to the laws of progression and development. There is in all, and especially in children, an indwelling force, which inclines us to repeat past experience. Why oppose this force; Why not regulate it and take advanvantage of its propelling power to secure greater progress in discipline and education? A change is a shock, especially to a child. In adults the will power is more fully developed, and they can more readily overcome the effects of change of habit. A child's reflective powers are not matured—he cannot philosophize to account for the depressing effects of change. He is mystified and irritated, and consequently his disposition suffers. We often speak deprecatingly of the force of habit. This is only because the habit is bad. If the habit be good, the greater clinging to it the better. Some persons have habits they would not part with for a fortune. In a river whose course is direct or only subject to the general slope of the land, the current has many times the velocity and power that it has in one which is constantly fretted by short turns. Machinery which moves steadily forward does not require more than half as much propelling power as that whose action is frequently reversed. Both these cases are analogous to the one we are trying to make out, viz: that children who have regular habits, through the wise direction and supervision of their parents, will have better dispositions—will make better progress in acquiring an education, and will have more established character than those, the current of whose lives is continually at the mercy of circumstances. Without speaking here of a child's other habits, I will say that it is especially important that he should have a fixed time for home study after having received a proper age—say past nine. If this be the case, when the usual time arrives, his mind will intuitively turn to the usual subjects of his study, instead of being compelled to reach them through a confused medley of other things.—Ex.

PREACHING.—Lawyers do not care to hear preaching upon law, nor doctors upon physic, nor artists upon care nor business-men upon banks and cotton and railroad securities. They know more of these things than ministers do. They want the pure, fresh, and simple Gospel, applied with all wisdom to the regulation of human motives, words, and deeds, and to the wants of living men. But they want it also as "spiritual refreshment," the manna of the desert pathway, the stream that follows them from its source in the smitten Rock. They have enough of secular things all the six days of the week, but on the Lord's day let them have some of his "heavenly meat and drink." Every pastor of an educated and intelligent people will testify that their most learned Christian parishoners are less critical, less exacting, and far more inspiring hearers than those who have only a smattering of science or of literature.

Let the pulpit do its own legitimate work. That work only has the promise of the Spirit. The preacher who subordinates the Gospel to any human science is more likely to make sceptics than believers.—Intelligencer.

—A Christlike gentleness of manner is an excellent thing in a man, especially in one who is set to lead the flock. If one hes not this gift by nature, he may have it by grace, and he should seek after and pray and labor for it until he attains it. He can never have nearness to Christ without it. It is a distinguishing trait of those who have been eminent in piety. It is said of James Brainard Taylor that you could observe this trait even in his manner of closing a door. You see quite the opposite spirit manifested in the way some professing Christions close doors when annoyed or provoked. Somebody has called the latter style of closing a door "a wooden oath." The suggestion is forcible, at least, and should lead us to self-reflection.

There are some who count gentleness as a weakness, and sneer at it in a man. Remember that in so doing you condemn Christ, and the whole tenor of his teachings.

Driving and Leading.

There was a good deal of sound sense and sound doctrine in the remark of the Methodist brother, who remarked, after having received a precious baptism of divine love and life, "I have been a Class-driver long enough; now I am going home to be a Class-leader." A large proportion of the religious labor of the day is done by men who are drivers rather than leaders. Like Shakspeare, they find it easier to tell twenty men what to do, than to be one of the twenty to go and do it. They tell what "we ought to do," what "we should do," "where we should be," and "how we should labor;" but their feet do not take hold upon the heavenly path, neither do they run with delight in the way of God's commandments. They drive, or try to drive others, but they do not lead them in the way of life.

Christ was a leader. He called his servants to follow him. And the Apostle says: "Be ye followers of me, as I follow Christ." In proportion as men become imbued with the spirit and power of Jesus Christ, they are prepared to be leaders in the work of God, and to win others from the ways of death to the paths of peace.

Echoes in the Air.

In a series of experiments made to determine the distance to which the air would convey the sounds produced by trumpets, whistles, and guns, Professor Tyndall found that the power of conveyance of the air varied greatly with its condition. On a clear day, for example, the sounds could only be heard to about one-third the distance they readily penetrated a foggy day. In discussing the cause of this phenomenon the Professor says: Humboldt, in his observations at the Falls of Orinoco, is known to have applied the following principles. He found the noise of the Falls three times louder by night than by day. The plain between him and the Falls consisted of spaces of grass and rock intermingled. In the heat of the day the temperature of the rock was 30 higher than the grass. Over every heated rock a column of air rarefied by heat arose, and he ascribed the deadening sound to the reflections which it endured at the limiting surfaces of the rarer and denser air. But what, asks Professor Tyndall, could on July 3d, over a calm sea, where neither rocks nor grass exist, so destroy the homogeneity of the atmosphere as to enable it to quench in so short a distance the vast body of sound with which we were experimenting? As I stood upon the deck of the Irene, pondering this question, I became conscious of the exceeding power of the sun beating against my back and heating the objects near me. Beams of equal power were falling on the sea, and must have produced copious evaporation. That the vapor generated should so arise and mingle with the air as to form an absolute homogeneous mixture, I considered in the highest degree improbable. It would be sure, I thought, to streak and mottle the atmosphere with spaces, in which the air would be in different degrees saturated, or it might be displaced by the vapor. At the limiting surfaces of these spaces or invisible clouds we should have the conditions necessary for the production of partial echoes, and the consequent waste of sound. But, granting this, it is incredible that so great a body of sound could utterly disappear in so short a distance without an account of itself. Suppose, then, instead of placing ourselves behind such an acoustic cloud, we were to place ourselves in front of it, might we not in accordance with the law of conversation, expect to receive, by reflection, the sound which had failed to reach us by transmition? The case would be strictly analogous to the reflection of light from an ordinary cloud to an observer placed between it and the sun. Putting this idea to the test of experiment, we took a position in which the body of the air had already shown such an extraordinary power to intercept sound was placed in front of us. On it the sonorus waves impinged, and from it they were sent back to us with astonishing intensity. The instruments hidden from view, were on the summit of a cliff 235 feet above us; the sea was smooth and clear of ships; the atmosphere was without a cloud, and there was no object which could possibly produce the observed effect. From the perfectly transparent air the echoes came, at first with a strength appearently with but little less than that of the direct sound, and then dying gradually and continually away. The remark of my companion, Mr. Edwards, was: "Beyond saying that the echoes seemed to come from the expanse of ocean, it did not appear possible to indicate any more definite point of reflection." Indeed, no such point was discoverable; the echoes reached us as if by magic, from absolutely invisible walls, Argo's notion that clouds are necessary to produce atmospheric echoes is therefore untenable.—Scribner's Monthly.

Children's Corner.

Country Children.

Little fresh violets,
Born in the wild-wood;
Sweetly illustrating Innocent childhood;
Shy as the antelope,—
Brown as a berry,—
Free as the mountain air,
Romping and merry.

Blue eyes and hazel eyes
Peep from the hedges,
Shaded by sun-bonnets,
Frayed at the edges!
Up in the apple trees,
Heedless of danger,—
Manhood in embryo
Stares at the stranger.

Out in the hilly patch
Seeking the berries,—
Under the orchard tree,
Feasting on cherries,—
Trampling the clover blooms
Down 'mong the grasses,
No voice to hinder them,
Dear lads and lasses!

No grim propriety,
No introduction;
Free as the birdlings
From city restriction!
Coining the purest blood,
Strengthening each musele,
Donning health's armor
'Gainst life's coming bustle.

Dear little innocents!
Born in the wild wood;
Oh, that all little ones
Had such a childhood!
God's blue spread over them,
God's green beneath them,
No sweeter heritage
Could we bequeath them.

The Body.

Did you ever sit down five minutes in your life and think over this wonderful body of yours? Let us examine it.

Think of your eyes, those little organs that unconsciously give you so much pleasure every day of your life.

When you ride in the cars, how often do you look with delight at the mountains towering in the sky, the river running "like a silver ribbon" through the land, the rainbow spanning the heavens, the fields of waving corn, and the flowers that bloom beneath your feet!

As you see those millions of worlds above you, the moon and stars shining on a clear, still night, reflect that two tiny little pieces of God's workmanship enable you to see all this grandeur; and will you cease to wonder at his infinite skill?

There are your ears, that lie, placed like little shells, on the side of your head. You are delighted with music, with the sweet sound of the piano or guitar. Perhaps nothing gives you so much enjoyment as to sit and listen for hours to the strains of an organ. Do you ever stop to praise God, to thank him, for his loving kindness in creating those ears?

There is your nose. That you probably consider quite an unimportant part of our face. Very likely you haven't thought anything about it, save when people around you have talked about noses, bent or crooked, Roman or dug. How could you perceive the fragrance of the rose? Where would be the perfume of the apple-blossoms, the odors of the modest arbutus and tiny white violet?

There is your mouth and its internal help-meets,—tongue, and teeth, and throat. What would you do if you could not talk, or if others could not?—if we were like animals, who can only make their wants known by noises?

Think of the soft tones of the voice, the love expressed by one tender word spoken, by your mother!

Think of your hands, willing servants to perform all you wish; your feet, which take you where you will!

Observe how God has joined all these together in one piece of machinery,—your body; and then remember how God hath given these to you for life, to enjoy not only here, but in the great hereafter. Ought we to weary of praising the Giver of all these gifts?

The bird doth carol from morn till night. How much more ought we to praise Him who hath multiplied our pleasures ten thousand-fold!—Well Spring.

The Precious Little Plant.

Two little girls, Bridget and Walburgia, went to the neighboring town, each carrying on her head a basket of fruit, to sell for money enough to buy the family dinner. Bridget murmured and fretted all the way, but Walburgia only joked and laughed. At last Bridget got out of all patience and said vexedly:

"How can you go on laughing so? Your basket is as heavy as mine, and you are not a bit stronger. I don't understand it."

"Oh! it is easy enough to understand," replied Walburgia.

"How so?"

"I have a certain little plant that I put on the top of my load, and it makes it so light that I can hardly feel it. Why don't you do so too?"

"Indeed it must be a very precious little plant. I wish I could lighten my load with it. Where does it grow? Tell me. What do you call it?"

"It grows wherever you plant it, and give it a chance to take root, and there is no telling the relief it gives! Its name is patience!"—Herder.

"That's How."

After a great snow storm, a little fellow began to shovel a path through a large snow-bank before his grandmother's door. He had nothing but a small shovel to work with.

"How do you expect to get through that drift?" asked a man passing along.

"By keeping at it," said the boy cheerfully. "That's how."

That is the secret of mastering almost every difficulty under the sun. If a hard task is before you, stick to it. Do not keep thinking how large or how hard it is; but go at it, and little by little it will grow smaller until it is done.

If a hard lesson is to be learned, do not spend a moment in fretting; do not lose breath in saying, "I can't" or "I don't see how," but go at it, and keep at it—study. That is the only way to conquer it.

If you have entered your Master's service and are trying to be good, you will sometimes find bills of difficulty in the way. Things will often look discouraging, and you will not seem to make any progress at all; but keep at it. Never forget "That's how."

Correspondence.

were not favored to live and have a being, bound by oaths opposed to the living God, and the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, how long could they exist? I often wonder why they are permitted to remain, but God's councils are hidden from us in this respect as well as others, but he will work it right in the end in accordance with the mystery of his own will; and I believe the means now being used are fast undermining the whole structure of the unholy combination.

One of the worst features to overcome is, that men who join the Christian churches are permitted to remain as members, and yet are bound to protect all the unholy conduct of a brother Mason, be the crime ever so henious, murder included; and among them, ministers who profess to be called to preach the true Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to all the world. Look at the idea! A minister of the Gospel bound by Masonic oaths to protect a brother in his deviltry, right or wrong, to favor, conceal and never reveal the same, and to the best of his ability if within the length of his cable tow warn him of approaching danger of all characters and kinds, even to protect him from justice under the laws of our country, and yet professing to be a true minister of the sanctuary of Christ. Horrible! Horrible! This I say, is the greatest impediment to overcome in overthrowing the wicked comination. Renovate the churches first, the balance is easy.

Many Masons claim to be honest men, but I ask, Is this the case? Many Masons are the worst of men, dishonest, drunken, lying, and disreputable, yet these good, honest men and Christians have bound themselves by those abominable oaths to fellowship them, and protect them in all their sayings and doings. A beautiful idea of honesty indeed!

I feel that I cannot rest while living and see and know they are prospering. That they are exposed and now trembling at this prospect of a great overthrow is evident from the efforts to keep by addition of numbers, as they are receiving back suspended and expelled members without any preceptible change of character or conduct, and added to this is the number of "Jacks" they are working into their interest, who are far more despicable than a full blown Mason. Some are afraid of them, and I am not sure but they should be, for one thing is manifest, and that is a person is not sure of the benefit of the laws of his country if Masonry is opposed to him, and again they do not scruple to undermine the character, good reputation and business of any good citizen, and that in a sly, stealthy way. All this I know to be true, for I have seen its operations and affects on good citizens, who cannot be brought to believe that the Christless institution is not a righteous one. More anon. S. SWEAT.

A Noble Woman.

MR. EDITOR:—A few days ago I was credibly informed that a man in Connersville, Ind., had "sent up" his name and money preparatory to join "Masonry," and an intelligent, reading and thinking lady who had read Charles G. Finney's truthful and convincing book, hearing of his awful and imminent danger, and prompted by philanthropy and patriotism, sought and persuaded him to read this book before he joined the lodge. After reading that book he demanded the restoration of the money which he had "sent up," which demand was, after consultation, complied with. Persons who are acquainted with Masonry need but little sagacity to tell why his demand was complied with, especially those knowing of his patriotism and power of muscle. NOBLE WOMAN! thus to be the means of saving from Masonic bondage and degradation a hard working man and loving husband. For that liberal and patriotic act she merits ten thousand times as much eulogy as is deserved by all of the Masonic "Knights of the East and West, and the Perfect Prince Freemasons of H-R-D-M., and the Knights of the Eagle and Pelican, and the Grand Pontiff, and the Master, ad vitam, and the Patriarch Noachites, and the Libanus, and the Chief of the Tabernacle, and the Prince of the Tabernacle, and the Knights of the Brazen Serpent, and the Prince of Mercy, and the Commanders of the Temple, and the Knights of the Sun, and the Patriarchs of the Crusades, and the Grand Elect Knights, K. H., and the Grand Inspector Inquisitor Commander, and the Knights of the White and Black Eagle, and the Sublime Prince and Commander of the Royal Secret," for all of the Masonic benevolence they have practiced or bestowed since the birth of Speculative Freemasonry in Apple-tree Tavern, in London, on the 24th of June, A. D. 1717. Was I a citizen of Connersville I would gladly be one of ten thousand persons to each give that noble and patriotic woman a "one dollar greenback" to encourage her in similar patriotic and Christian acts.

If one woman, by timely warning a man of such impending danger, can be the means of saving him, how many men can all our women thus save? That act is more praiseworthy than the act of a noble woman praying in a saloon; because men have learned to drink intoxicating drinks in a Masonic lodge-room! The act of that patriotic woman in Connersville is so praiseworthy that I will try to see her when I go there, and if I learn that I have heard the truth (and I have no cause to doubt it), I will aid in encouraging her in such good and Christian acts. That man thus saved should ever remember her with gratitude; and I believe his gratitude to her will increase in proportion to his increase in knowledge of the principles of Masonry, which teaches what is much worse than useless. Is it not strange that some young men will work hard and pay to the lodge millions of money to get rid of their precious and blood-bought liberties, and to learn in nightly conclaves that which they can learn in David Bernard's "Light on Masonry and Odd-fellowship," which can be had for only two dollars? It is, indeed, strange!

Political Column.

RIO, WIS.

As the opinions of your readers are solicited in regard to the platform of the National Association, I would say that I like it very well with the exception of the free trade plank, which, to my mind, is very objectionable; as it is my firm belief that a well regulated tariff is of vital importance to the welfare of our country. There are others of your readers here who believe in a well sustained tariff.

Editor of the Cynosure:

I learn in the Cynosure that you propose to have any one's opinion given on politics. Mine is that we must have a better party in power than we have lately had, or we shall not long be able to pay our taxes; and the principles the Cynosure advocates are such that if men can be sent to make laws that would harmonize with them, we might expect to be blessed as those were who gained our liberties. May our God give the Anti-masons wisdom to be a means in his hands of bringing about the death of all secret societies!

Comets and the Earth.

In a letter to the New York Tribune on the now vanished visitor to the northern heavens, Mr. Parkhurst, the astronomer, presents some calculations on that comet. He says that its nearest approach to the earth was on the 20th when it was 26,000,000 miles distant. Its tail is 26,000,000 miles long and its speed 4,000,000 miles per day. Though comparatively so near it was estimated that there would be no contact with the earth, and even in the event of such contact it would be unobservable to any but scientists. Mr. Parkhurst gives the following instance of what is considered by scientific men as an actual collision:

It was formerly supposed that, if the head of a comet should strike the earth, it would destroy it. Modern discoveries prove that even such fears have little foundation. Less than two years ago the earth actually was struck by the head of a comet; and probably very few of your readers know it, and not one of us knew it at the time. It had been ascertained that certain meteoric showers followed the track of certain comets, and Prof. A. S. Herschel suspected that there might be such meteoric showers in the track of Biela's comet, especially as it had been known to divide into two portions and had subsequently disappeared entirely. He requested observers to watch especially for these meteors in the last week of Nov., 1872. Prof. Klinkerfues saw the shower, of unusual brilliancy, and thinking it possible that it might be visible as a comet, immediately telegraphed to Prof. Pogson, Madras: "Biela touched earth on 27th; search near Theta Centauri," that star being nearly in the direction toward which the meteors were moving. Prof. Pogson searched and found the comet, which he saw on two successive evenings; but it was so faint that it was not again seen. In this instance, therefore, the earth passed directly through the head of a comet which was afterwas afterward seen, and the only effect was a brilliant shower of meteors.

The Secrets of the Bowl.

A former Brocklyn saloon keeper, who has been converted by the Quaker ladies, has printed the receipes he used to keep secret. He says bourbon or rye whiskey is manufactured from high wines commonly called fusel oil whiskey, made to-day and drank three days after. It also contains vinegar, syrup, oil of bourbon, French coloring, bluestone, and other poisonous chemicals. It costs from 80 cents to $1 a gallon, and retails for $5 and $6 a gallon.

Cognac brandy is made from French or Cologne spirits, burnt sugar, oi of cognac, vinegar, bluestone, Jamaica rum, honey syrup, port wine, French coloring, alum, and aloes. It costs $2 a gallon, and retails from $6. to $10 a gallon.

Irish or Scotch whiskey is made from Canada highwines, or new distilled whiskey, one week old, saltpeter, fine salt, essence of oil of Scotch or Irish whiskey, fusel oil, syrup, bluestone, St. Croix rum, some imported Irish or Scotch whiskey for flavor. It costs $1,50 and retails for $6 a gallon.

What sells for the best old Holland gin is made from French spirits, water, oil of juniper, syrup, white wine vinegar, bluestone, New England rum, peach pips, with some imported gin for flavor.

Old Tom gin is made from the same ingredients, but double syrup is added to make it sweeter. It costs $1. 25 a gallon, and retails for $5. It is also bottled as a medicine, and sold for the kidney disease.

Jamaica and St. Croix rum is made of double refined highwines, French coloring, oil of rum, fusel oil, vinegar, bluestone, burat sugar, molasses syrup, with some imported Jamaica, Cuba or St. Croix rum for flavor, alum, aloes, and prune juice.

Stock ale or porter is diluted with oil of vitrol, strychnine, and aqua fortis to make it keep. New ale is diluted with oil of vitrol and damaged molasses. Lager beer contains a little malt, plenty of water, some inferior hops, rosin, tar, saleratus, soda, with four different chemicals to make it keep after brewing.

An ex-liquor dealer said recently that fluids sold over two-thirds the bars in New York and Brooklyn are compounded as above.—N. Y. Witness.

The Wine and Liquor interest have just organized a new society to protect the trade. It is to "rescue the wine and liquor dealing interest from the yaning jaws of the monster teetotalism," and then "maintain the character of this land as the great home of individual liberty." Whence this necessity? O, whence?

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

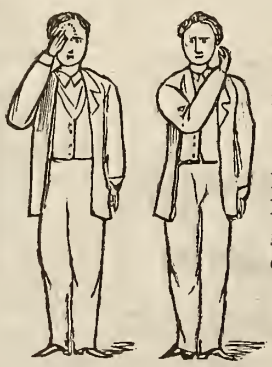
say thus unto the young man, Behold the arrows are beyond thee, go thy way, for the Lord hath sent thee away; and as touching the matter which thou and I have spoken of, behold the Lord be between thee and me forever.

And it came to pass in the morning that Jonathan went out into the field at the time appointed with David, and a lad with him; and he said unto the lad, Run, find out now the arrows which I shoot. And as the lad ran he shot an arrow beyond him. And when the lad was come to the place of the arrows which Jonathan had shot, Jonathan cried after the lad and said, Is not the arrow beyond thee? And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make speed, haste, stay not. And Jonathan's lad gathered up the arrows and came to his master; but the lad knew not anything—only Jonathan and David knew the matter. And Jonathan gave his artillery unto the lad and said unto him, Go, carry them to the city. And as the lad was gone David arose out of a place towards the south and fell on his face to the ground and bowed himself three times; and they kissed one another, and wept with one another until David exceeded. And Jonathan said unto David, Go in peace; forasmuch as we have sworn both of us in the name of the Lord, saying, the Lord be between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed forever. And he arose and departed, and Jonathan went into the city.

NOBLE GRAND'S CHARGE.

Such are the duties and objects of the degree of the Covenant. In addition to what has just been read, you will doubtless remember the beginning, the progress and the sequel of the laudable example and undeviating friendship. At its commencement David was known only as a humble shepherd, without title or honor, while Jonathan, a prince of acknowledged piety and distinguished valor, was the son and heir of Saul, then the Hebrew king. But in spite of the seeming disparity of condition, the ties which bound Jonathan to David, impelled him to lose no opportunity of honoring or comforting his friend, or of vindicating his character to his angry father, whose enmity had been excited against David through jealousy of his noble and daring exploits. Though Jonathan did not live to receive any adequate return for his own devoted faithfulness, yet David, in his day of prosperity and power, neglected not to seek for the household of Saul, that he might show them kindness for Jonathan's sake. And having found a maimed son of his former beloved friend, he treated him with marked favor and distinction, making him an inmate of his house, besides bestowing upon him the ample inheritance of Saul.



Now place your right hand on your left breast and repeat after me another

OBLIGATION.

I [name] in the presence of the Covenant brothers, do solemnly pledge myself to help and support my afflicted or persecuted brother, and warn him of approaching danger, whether it be from his own imprudence, or from the evil designs of others, or from some accidental cause. I will point out his advantage and interest, where they do not conflict with the rights of others, if it should be in my power so to do. I will protect his property, assist his family, defend his character, and save his life and limb, should opportunity offer.

[Here the candidate will place his left hand on the arrows, in conjunction with two brothers of the Covenant degree, and repeat as follows:]

And I do acknowledge myself solemnly bound in an especial covenant with all the BROTHERS who can and do prove themselves such.

Sign Cov't Degree. Answer.

PASS WORD.—Quiver, given same as former passwords.

SIGN.—Draw hand in a circle across forehead, thumb closed in with fingers.

ANSWER.—Bring right hand up to left shoulder, as if to take hold of left ear with the thumb and fore finger, or to draw an arrow from the quiver.

TOKEN—Rainbow.

MEMENTO—Arrows.

No grip in this degree.

CONCLUDING CHARGE.

Noble Grand to Candidate (s). Brother (s), in the historical narative of the love of Jonathan and David, we have a most happy and impressive illustration of mutual relief as the result of a covenant. In this world, where selfishness, violence and affliction so widely prevail, such relief is often needed, as may be seen in all forms of social life, for that all men are strong when in health and prosperity, yet all are feeble when in adversity and affliction; therefore, none can say they may not need assistance, and none that they are too poor to render it. On this basis rests our social covenant—tending good faith and kindly interests in the welfare of each other. Covenants, you know, are as ancient as the first inhabitants of the earth, and have been sanctioned at all times by the highest authority. We read in the Scriptures of one especially by our heavenly Father with Noah, of which we have a perpetual token, giving assurance that this earth shall no more be deluged by the waters of a flood. Of this the rainbow is the seal. We read of others by the same high power, with Abraham and the Hebrews at large. And tracing history through ages we find that covenants have existed among persons as well as among nations. They are indispensible in all the regulations of society; because the necessities of human nature are such as to render every man dependent upon his fellow-man. Look abroad, embracing in your scope the entire world; behold every city and hamlet—the operations of labor and traffic—business of the land and the sea;—everywhere you witness the truth not only of men's dependence upon each other, but of the existence of Covenants in all the vast concerns of government and life. But in most cases they are mere business compacts protected by law; and whilst fully recognizing their utility, we would win men into a covenant of a different sort—one that dispenses a yet more beneficial influence. We would win them into a Covenant of friendship and love, even such as that of Jonathan and David, pledging the kindest of offices, sealed alone in honor and affection, and having for its foundation the great truth of human brotherhood—a truth which is scarcely yet felt in the mass communities, as is apparent from the slow and reluctant responses to the claims of charity, even when presented in the most imposing forms—the breaking of bread to the hungry—the cup of cold water to the thirsty—watching by the sick bed—comforting the afflicted—cherishing the stranger—visiting the imprisoned—succoring the enfeebled. How sadly are all these tender duties neglected by a large portion of our race. Acting, then, on the principles of mutuality, and as the result of a covenant, it is the pride of Odd-fellowship to use its influence to extend the sentiments of brotherhood, and by this means remove the obstacles that interpose between the hearts of men. Hence, its members having before them, in the Covenant of Jonathan and David, not a romantic fable, but a veritable and practical example of the beneficial effects of such an obligation, binding themselves in like friendly relations not to shield or countenance wrong doing, but to assist each other in distress, help each other in want, counsel each other in difficulty, and by this association to realize as far as possible those benefits which would ensue were the souls of all men truely knit together in the bond of universal benevolence. Brother, such is the instruction of the Covenant degree, to which in the name of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, I declare you duly advanced, its emblematical color being pink.

The regalia of the Second or Covenant degree is a white collar trimmed with pink fringe or ribbon. It may be ornamented with a pink and white rosette worn at its point in front.

OPENING CHARGE, ROYAL BLUE DEGREE.

Noble Grand to Candidate (s). Brother (s), in the first degree, through which you have passed, calling your attention to the source of all kindly actions, we attempted to portray the beauties of charity; not such as that virtue which usually displays itself to the world in cold alms-giving, but warm with active benevolence—a universal good will—a ready sympathy in the afflictions of mankind. Then in the second degree, as illustrating the tendencies of attachments founded so purely, we set before you a worthy example of natural affections and mutual relief in the memorable friendship of Jonathan and David, as recorded in the sacred Scriptures. And now having reached the third, or Royal Blue Degree, the lesson which we desire especially to impress upon you is Friendship; and if necessary, even self-sacrificing Friendship,—our general views of which may be ascertained by attention to our worthy assistants.

Noble Grand. Brother, what is Friendship?

A. It is disinterested, mutual regard.

Noble Grand. What is the surest test of friendship?

A. Adversity.

Noble Grand. Why is adversity the surest test of friendship?

A. Because, in time of prosperity, as it is then easy to assume a friendly demeanor, mere professions of love and esteem may exist with the most hollow and superficial sentiments; but in the seasons of adversity, the professed friend is called upon to show the depth of his attachment, to abandon ease, to part with a portion of his goods, or even to risk his life. Genuine friendship will endure this test; and when all adventitious circumstances are removed it will abide the storm and shine brightest in the darkest hour.

Noble Grand. Brother, are you willing to enter upon an obligation that may expose you to such tests of friendship as have been described?

[Ans. by the candidate.] I am.

Noble Grand. [Presenting a blue rod.] Then receive this rod, which is emblematical of the rod of Moses, one whose life exhibited a just illustration of true friendship and self-sacrifice; for he forsook honor and riches to deliver from captivity his persecuted brethren, whose afflictions he willingly shared for the love he bore them. Holding that rod as a memorial of his virtues, repeat after me the obligation appropriate to this degree.

Noble Grand. I [name] of my own free will and accord, do, in the presence of the brothers of the degree of the Royal Blue now assembled, most solemnly promise declare and say, that I will conceal and never reveal, the signs, secrets, or mysteries of the degree of the Royal Blue to any person or persons, no, not even to a brother of any other degree, unless instructed so to do in a lawful manner; and that I will by no means whatsoever make them or any of them illegally known. With steady determination to fulfill all which, I hereby pledge my most sacred honor.

Sign R. B. Degree. Answer. Principal sign.

PASS WORD.—Moses.

ANSWER. — Left hand over right hand.

PRINCIPAL SIGN. —Right hand over left, then raise hands and eyes in form of supplication to heaven.

TOKEN. —Moses' Rod.

GRIP.—Press second knuckle of right hands by ball of thumbs.

In this degree a sign is introduced called the auctioneer's or trading sign.

Auctioneer's Sign. Auc't. sign, "good bargain." Auc't. sign, "well." Auc't. sign, "bad bargain,"

To signify "well," put right hand on left.
To gain the attention of a Bro., draw right hand from left.

Noble Grand. Brother, we have yet some further instructions to communicate which will increase your knowledge of the principles and mysteries of the Royal Blue degree. Again give heed to my assistants.

Noble Grand. What are you?

A. An Odd-fellow.

Noble Grand. How may I dnow you are an Odd-fellow?

A. By my password, together with my sign and token.

Noble Grand. Will you give me your password?

A. I did not obtain it it so myself.

Noble Grand. What do you intend to do with it?

A. Letter it with a brother of the Royal Blue.

Noble Grand. Then begin.

A. No, you begin.

Noble Grand. M-o—

A. S-e-s—

Noble Grand. Moses.

Noble Grand. Why did you take Moses for your password?

A. Because it is associated with true friendship.

Noble Grand. What else is associated with it?

A. The ten commaudments and sundry other laws whereby every Odd-fellow should regulate his conduct.

Noble Grand. Does it remind us of anything else?

A. Of our duty to reverence that eternal, infinite and incomprehensible Being, the Creator of all things, who preserves and governs all things by his almighty power and wisdom, and is the only proper object of our worship.

Noble Grand. Did Moses leave any charge concerning distressed brethren?

A. Yes.

Noble Grand. Repeat it.

A. If thy brother be waxen poor and fallen in decay with thee, thou shalt relieve him. Yea, though he be a stranger or a sojourner, that he may live with thee.

Noble Grand. Have you the sign of this degree?

A. Yes.

Noble Grand. Advance it.

Noble Grand. What is your token?

A. Moses' rod.

Noble Grand. Why did you take Moses' rod for your token?

A. To remind me of Moses and the virtues which he illustrated.

Noble Grand. How did Moses illustrate the peculiar virtues to which you allude?

A. By the sympathies he manifested for his brethren, the Jews, when they were in affliction; for notwithstanding his position at the court of Pharaoh, he was true to his dearest obligations.

Noble Grand. Have you the principal sign of the Royal Blue?

A. I have.

Noble Grand. Advance.

Noble Grand. Are there not some words peculiar to that sign?

A. Give ear, O, ye heavens.

Noble Grand. What is the use of that sign?

A. That I may know a brother in distress.

Noble Grand. Thus terminates the lecture of the Royal Blue degree, in which, among other things, has been rehearsed the appropriate manner of proving members of our order, when they are personally unknown to us. Friendship, its leading subject, is truly a noble sentiment and one that well deserves the exalted rank which Odd-fellowship assigns to it. Heathen nations even have not been strangers to its cultivation. That the Greeks held in high honor the formation of ties of particular friendship among their braves and warriors, is attested by their mythology as well as their history. The noblest of their poets, whose immortal verse is still the chief wonder of all literature, though incomplete the character of Achilles himself, until adorned with a devoted attachment to a cotemporary chieftain. Among many of the States of Sparta every generous character, that the youths were encouraged by the law and by public precept to form betimes some honorable individual attachments and to signalize through life, not only at home, but in the dangers of the field, their mutual fidelity to the chosen brother of their career as citizens or solders. A like practice, though to a less extent, prevailed with the Romans. Among that people the friendship of some of the most learned and distinguished citizens was publicly honored and celebrated. But what in connection with this degree we would more especially cite your admiration and invitation, is the yet nobler instance of friendship, because acting on a much larger scale, as exhibited in the life of the Great Law Giver of the Jews. Moses, though brought up amidst all the delights of court, not only loved better than honor, or fortune, or pleasure, his own humble paternal household, but chose rather to share the wretchedness of his despised countrymen than to enjoy the utmost favor of the master who opposed them. Though the adopted child of Pharaoh's daughter, though bred in all the learning and admitted to all the confidence which Egypt could confer upon him only, of all his injured race, yet he forgot not that he was an Israelite; nay, remembered it the more because of all his numerous kinsmen and countrymen he alone was fortunate. And therefore inspired of heaven and yielding to his affections for his enslaved countrymen, he hazarded all his brilliant prospects of an easy personal eminence to deliver them from their bondage. So faithful and tender in him was the large brotherhood that bound him to his race. And here, brother, we conclude the degree of the Royal Blue, and by the authority of the Independent Order of Odd-fellowship, I declare you entitled to all its privileges.

The regalia of the Third or Royal Blue Degree is a white collar trimmed with light blue fringe or ribbon. The collar may be ornamented with a rosette of white, pink and blue at its point.

The color of this degree is Royal Blue.

FOURTH, OR REMEMBRANCE DEGREE.

[The conductor having brought the candidate to the door of the Lodge, gives the usual alarm.]

Inside Guardian. Who comes there?

Answer by Conductor. I conduct to the Lodge a brother who, having been duly elected, is desirous of obtaining the degree of Remembranee.

Noble Grand. Admit him.

Conductor brings candidate in and presents him to the principal chair.

Noble Grand to candidate. To what have you advanced in Odd-fellowship?

A. To the Royal Blue Degree.

Noble Grand to Worthy Warden and Conductor. Examine the brother(s).

[They examine the candidate(s) and, if such be the fact, report] All right.

Noble Grand to Candidate. Have you studied well the prinples intended to be plauted in your mind by the degrees you have passed?

A. I have.

Noble Grand. Then, in rembrance of the obligations by which you are bound to this order, repeat after me another, suitable to the degree upon which you are entering.

OBLIGATION.

I, [name], in the presence of the brothers of this degree now assembled, do solemly promise, declare and say, that I will hold in secrecy, the signs, password and grip of the degree of Remembrance; that I will neither give nor reveal them. or any of them, or allow any person to give or reveal them, or any of them, except when legally authorized so to do. To the performance of which I pledge my most sacred honor.

Noble Grand to Candidate. Brother, in this, the Fourth Degree, we wish to impress upon you the great principles of universal love; that goes behind the distinction of sect, party and nation; recognizes all men as brothers and bids us do unto others as we would that they should do unto us. The neglect or violation of this principle, is the source of all the social evils that afflict mankind and disturb the general harmouy. Persecution, fraud, illiberality, oppression and countless other wrongs, all issue from a prevailing selfishness, which locks up man's affections in his own breast, paralyzes the nerve of sympathy that should bind him to others; makes him careless of all interests but his own; causes him to forget the demands of the social law upon him, and even blinds him to the fact that his own comfort and welfare are interwoven with the well-being of the great aggregate of man. Man needs a closer association with man the world over.

Of social ideas we may be tenacious. These in their legitimate operations are right, and even sacred, but when they seal our visions to other and more comprehensive truths, we should remember that our relations are exceedingly broad and far-reaching. The love of family, of country, and of party is a natural and beautiful sentiment. It holds us to obligations of a peculiar character that should never be disregarded. But we must not stop with these; we must not array them in direct conflict with other and more comprehensive duties; we should not forget that all men are of one family; that there is but one country, the earth; but one nation, the human race. All men are one, from the monarch on his throne, to the beggar in his rags; all have one nature, all are immortal, and in the soul of the least and the poorest are the signs of human equality.

Circulate the Documents.

MR. EDITOR:—About a year ago Merchant Kelly and I bought nearly five hundred copies of Finney's work on Masonry and distributed them among the people. The Masons said that it would help their cause.

Not long since a man by the name of Frank Reed, of Connersville, sent up seven dollars to the Masonic Lodge in Connersville for the initiation fee. Soon after he mentioned the fact to Mrs. Springer, of C———. She handed him a copy of Finney which I had lent her and requested him to read it before he joined them. He complied with her request, and then sent for his seven dollars. The lodge, after mature deliberation, concluded it best to disgorge. Mr. Reed is a man of great bravery and independence of character.

Previous to this I lent Mr. Peters, the Catholic priest at Connersville a copy of Finney, and also lent his brother a copy. Since the priest died, and a Mr. Wolfrom who lately came to the place officiated in the priest's stead, until the church members found out that he was a Mason, and then they repudiated him.

The case of repudiation and the one of disagreement above mentioned, came off about two months since, and I understand that it made a great flurry among the wearers of the sheep-skin aprons.

ALBERT HONEYWELL, SR.

HARRISBURG, Ind.

[Merchant Kelley adds a note to the above that from the nominations in their county, Fayette, he hopes there will not be a Mason elected to a county office. This is a further result of circulating documents.—ED.]

A single Cynosure tract has saved a young man from the lodge and probably from eternal ruin. Can not you spare a small sum for the tract fund?

The labor of distributing one thousand pages of tracts, if paid for at a fair rate, is usually worth two or three dollars, yet, although a new contribution of fifty cents completes the payment for 1,000 pages, our tract fund is exhausted.

For every five dollars contributed to the tract fund a friend adds another five, so that for every five dollars received, we now send out ten thousand pages of tracts. We have calls for one hundred thousand pages per month for gratuitous distribution. Who will help sustain this fund?

TEN DOLLARS FOR THE TRACT FUND.

Since the above appeal for the tract fund was set up, and just as the Cynosure was going to press, we received TEN DOLLARS from Wells Springs, Esq., of Rochester, N. Y., accompanied with earnest words of cheer and orders to "use it in any way it will do the most good." We know of no way of doing more good with it than to pay it into the tract fund to send out TWENTY THOUSAND PAGES OF ANTI-MASONIC LEAFLETS. "Who speaks next?" Orders for free tracts are in order now.

Every contribution to the tract fund helps the Cynosure because those tracts prepare the way for the Cynosure. For every additional ten dollars sent to this fund we send out twenty thousand pages of tracts. Who sends the next ten?

In this Cynosure is the conclusion of the exposition of the first five degrees of Odd-fellowship. We want a correct exposition of the Encampment degrees, and will pay a liberal sum for the same. Can you furnish it? or do you know of any one else who can and will furnish it? If so, please write to us at once.

Topics of the Time.

HOW CAN IT BE DONE?—Dr. Schaff, in a late address, said the state was bound to maintain four things based on Christianity, viz, monogamy, Sabbath, Bible in schools, and untaxed churches. We believe the state bound to do more than this, but for a starting point, take these four things. In regard to them, most civilized people will agree. We ought to have laws prohibiting polygamy, desecration of the Sabbath and neglect of the Bible in our national schools. We should not tax benevolence; and almost all the churches in the United States are built and maintained by laborious, benevolent self-sacrifice. But we ask, how can the state maintain these things "based on Christianity," when the supreme law of the land declares there shall not be laws prohibiting the free exercise of religion, and that Congress may not declare what is and what is not religion. As we stand at present, whatever any set of men choose to call religion, is religion, and they may practice it freely in any part of the United States. If state laws interfere an appeal to the Supreme Court will declare them unconstitutional. Where, but in this fact, can you find an explanation for the inability of Congress to pass an effective act against Mormonism? While all religions are tolerated you can claim no pre-eminence for Christianity. We must be Christian or heathen. Which shall it be?

SO AS BY FIRE.—If there is one thing more strongly insisted upon in God's word than another, it is that he will certainly punish those who transgress his law. This is a lesson that men are slow to learn and unwilling to heed. After the first stun of the Chicago fire in 1871 was over, newspapers and men in general went on in the old way of bragging and money-worshipping. It was not a judgment for sins but for shingle roofs, we were told. God had nothing to do with it. Mrs. O'Leary's cow did the business. Well, right soon, as an apparent answer to these wicked and profane denials of God's providence, a fire started in a granite and iron store in Boston and burned ninety to a hundred millions of property. And now a fire costing from three to five millions occurs in Chicago again. What lesson is to be learned? The lesson of penitence and humility. Just so sure as the respectable people of Chicago keep on in their mad race after money, just so surely they will be disappointed by a just and angry God. It is better to worship in small churches and old clothes than to insult God with empty forms and magnificent hollowness. No one asserts that the people of Chicago are worse than others. All through our land to-day we are cursed with a formal religion that is useless to men and offensive to our Maker. God can easily destroy Chicago by fire and, if he choose, cause an earthquake to swallow her up. He has destroyed nations that forget him. He says that he will do so and will keep his word. It is vain for us to fight against God.

BEECHER'S DEFENSE.—Theodore Tilton has charged H. W. Beecher with the crime of adultery. He has sustained this charge by a series of letters written both by Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton. Mr. Beecher admits that the letters said to be written by him were so written, and only objects to the explanation made of them. He gets together a parcel of lawyers and several of his deacons, and after some hours comes out with a statement reading far more like the plea of an inferior lawyer, than the heartfelt answer of an honest man. We do not attempt to decide on the merits of the case till the evidence is all in; but if Mr. Beecher wishes the confidence of the Christian public he will deal less with lawyers and more with letters written by his own hand. He has said that he was "sitting on the ragged edge of remorse;" that he did not expect to be alive another Sabbath, and that he wishes he was dead. There may be some explanation of such expressions which will clear him of the charge now made. If there is such an explanation, let us have it. It answers no good purpose to get a lot of lawyers and deacons to consult in the matter. Mr. Beecher ought to know what he meant. If he does let him tell. To abuse Mr. Tilton until his accusation is disproved is an unprofitable thing. If Beecher and Mrs. Tilton want to prove Theodore Tilton an adulterer the divorce courts are open. Just at present Mr. Beecher is on trial.

ITS EFFECT ON THE CHURCHES.—There are frequently expressed regrets for the effect of the Beecher-Tilton matter on the interests of religion. It seems to us that whatever the verdict that the public shall declare, the cause of true religion will not suffer materially. Mr. Beecher has never been the examplar or advocate of a self-denying, cross-bearing Christianity. He has preached a gospel of sentimentalism He has been an actor, doing in the pulpit as other men does on the stage, for effect. He was never known as an abolitionist until the danger was over; then none so brave as he. Muskets and cannon balls were a part of sermons, while dancing and billiards were the objects of his laudation in lectures to his own and other people. This combination of circumstances made him the favorite, not so much of Christians as of worldlings. The men who would applaud his "Manhood and Money" lecture, are not the men who support the Christian religion, but the religion called mammon-worship. His praises have been more often and more loudly sounded by papers making no pretense to Christianity than by others. Now, matters are reversed. The secular press which toadied him without stint, are beginning to curse him without decency or limit, and the religious press, showing, imperfect as it is, the spirit of the Master, speaks calmly, and hopes for the best. Henry Ward Beecher has deeply wronged the churches. He has watered and twisted the plain teachings of the Bible until avowed atheists, infidels and stock gamblers have been his warmest admirers. He has sneered at those who insist on nonconformity to the world, thus grieving those who believe that we ought to come out and be separate. But now that he seems likely to fail the Christian sentiment of the country walks sadly backward to cast the mantle of charity over what seems to be his shame, while his quondam admirers are delighting to proclaim it to the world. The Christian churches will not lose but gain if the charges are proved true, and yet they will sorrow. They will not give but lose if the charges are shown to be false, and yet they will be glad.

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.—This is the title of a book by Robert G. Ingersoll, better known as "Bob Ingersoll," of Peoria, Ill. We have read only the lecture which gives title to the book, "The Gods." Of it little need be said. It is valuable chiefly as showing what a hopeless, muddy thing the human mind is when without God and without hope in the world. Had the rage for authorship seized on some poor fellow withering in the grip of delirium tremens, a similar work might have resulted. He cannot satisfy himself by his denunciation of the Bible and its God. He seems to wander all over the dictionary to secure a good round cursing for the Christian church. Now the thought will occur to many persons, "Why does Bob Ingersoll stay in such fearfully dangerous company? There are about five-sixths of the human race who do not live in Christian lands, who are not troubled with the Christian's Bible or by the Christian's God. Cannot this worthy gentleman find congenial company some where outside of Christendom. Of course we should be sorry to spare such a man. One who labored so long for the elevation of the world, whose fame as a scholar, an inventor, a philanthropist and statesman is so wide-spread. If he should decide to settle among the free-thinkers of Patagonia or the Ashantee realm, we, of course, would miss him; but if he thinks his condition among Christian churches so fearful, we can let him go. Eulogizing Thomas Paine, he says, addressing the Christian church: "You have imprisoned the human mind; you have been the enemy of liberty; you have burned us at the stake,—roasted us upon slow fires,—torn our flesh with iron; you have covered us with chains,—treated us as outcasts; you have filled the world with fear; you have taken our wives and children from our arms; you have confiscated our property; you have denied us the right to testify in courts of justice; you have branded us with infamy; you have torn out our tongues; you have refused us burial. In the name of your religion you have robbed us of every right; and, after having inflicted upon us every evil that can be inflicted in this world, you have fallen upon your knees, and, with clasped hands, implored your God to torment us forever." When this good and great man has gone to eat roast missionary with his brother religionists in the South Sea, we will look at the vast libraries he has built, the homes for the poor and blind he has founded, and one small boy will say to another: Who is there to mourn for Bob Ingersoll? Not one. No, not one.

Belonging to Two Churches.

BY REV. N. CALLENDER.

Why do Masons seek the fellowship of Christians? Why desire a place among any than their Masonic brethren? What other religious sect beside the Masonic sect, ever think of belonging to more than one church at the same time? What if a Presbyterian should propose to hold membership at the same time in his own and in the Congregational church? Who could tell which would be his own church? But there would be such an absurdity in such a double membership that sober men would never think of tolerating it. It remains for Freemasons and such churches and church members as contenance this duplicity, to perpetrate this assault upon reason and sober sense.

Is the Mason afraid to trust himself exclusively with his own religion, and therefore seeks the benefit of two distinct and mutually antagonistic religions? As it is no credit to Masonry for a Mason to seek the aid of another religion which is essentially antagonistic to Masonry (as Christianity surely is), so it is an insult to Christ, the Author of the Gospel, bordering upon profanity, for a professed disciple of Jesus to seek the aid of the Masonic religion. Is the Gospel of Christ insufficient? As he who joins a Christian church after he becomes a Mason, betrays a want of faith in the saving efficacy of Masonry, so he who joins the Masons after he professes to be a Christian shows a want of reliance upon Christianity bordering close upon apostacy. We are by no means sure that every such man is not gone into apostacy from the hour he forms his Masonic purpose. As we view the subject, we would not for a thousand worlds take the peril of such a position. Once we saw about a score of souls deliberately vote against the church for the lodge. The issue was fairly made. It was the saddest sight to us we ever beheld. Was it an apostacy? This we must leave to the judgment of the great day. May God grant repentance unto life, is the prayer of our heart. Perhaps they knew not what they did, but to us the lesson was one of a life; burned by the deepest emotions into the very soul for all time.

If it would be an inconsistency too great to be thought of, for men to belong to two churches of the same faith, fundamentally, then it is supremely inconsistent, if not absolutely absurd for men to belong to two religions which are radically and essentially antipodes, as are Masonry and Christianity.

As strongly analagous to the folly we are exposing take the following anecdote, headed "A Vagabond:"

"Where do you go to Sunday-school, Jimmy?"

"Why, marm, I goes to Baptisses and the Methodisses and the Presbyteriums but I've been trying the 'Piscopals for the last two or three weeks."

"You don't seem to belong anywhere then, Jimmy?"

"Why, yes marm, don't you see? I belong to 'em all exceptin the 'Piscopals, but I'm to jine them too, now."

"Well, Jimmy what is your idea in going to so many?"

"Why, you see, I gets a little of what's going on at 'em all, marm, I gets libraries, and hymn-books, and all that; and when they have picnics I goes to every one of 'em."

"A sort of religious vagabondism" not confined to poor Jimmy but too often seen with full grown and highly educated men and women, including pastors and deacons.

Should Lodges be Ruled from the Church.

BY W. M. GIVENS.

From the very commencement of the United Brethren in Christ, they as a church opposed secret societies and refused to receive members of such societies, however unexceptional their character in other respects, except on condition that they severed their relation with secret orders. This position was taken before the abduction and murder of Morgan, which occured in September, 1826.

The adoption of this rule in our church discipline was not the result of the murder of one of its members by the Masonic fraternity; nor of the social, political or religious excitement that grew out of said murder. But it was the result of honest and mature deliberations, coupled with the experience of some of the fathers of the church, who in their younger days became entangled in its deceitful mashes.

For a number of years no one thought to say, why do you oppose secret societies? The reason of our opposition was apparent to all. But within the last twenty years, Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship have made rapid advances in numbers and influence, while numerous other secret organizations of a minor character, have, as if by magic, sprang into existence, thus popularizing secrecy by numbers. Men of every rank and station, in life, from the President to the meanest rough of the brothels of death and sinks of vice, together with many churchmen, such as bishops, elders, preachers, exhorters, class-leaders and laymen, have become members and abettors, all of which has had a tendency to popularize those secret orders of darkness. And to-day, the world, the church, and those minions of darkness, demand of us to erase or modify our position upon secrecy, or show some good reason why we retain it. The latter they demand, however, with an air of triumph as much as to say, You are old fogy, you have no good reason for retaining the rule. You do not, and cannot know anything about these orders.

Poor dupes, they think that because they have had to learn at the school of experience that everybody else who may desire to know must go to the same master for light.

But I propose to present a few good reasons why we ought not to lay down our rule on secrecy of these orders.

First. The claim of the orders to antiquity is an abominable fraud and an offense to God and man. But how far back do Masons trace the existence of their order? If we believe their traditional history, their institution is an old wrinkled, gray-bearded man, yet retaining all the life and vigor of manhood. Hear the testimony of one of their own accredited witnesses, Thomas Webb, who wrote his "Freemason's Monitor," about the year 1779, when Masonry was just sixty-two years old. He prepared his book from Mr. Preston's" "Illustrations of Masonry," which was doubtless written soon after the organization of the institution of Masonry in 1717. Mr. Webb says, "From the commencement of the world, we may trace the foundation of Masonry. Ever since symmetry began, and harmony displayed her charms, our order has had a being." (Monitor, pages 17, 18).

Does Mr. Webb mean to say that Masonry had its origin before man was created? His language implies that, nay, asserts it. Can any living, sane Mason believe that Webb uttered a truth when he made the above declaration? But such is the credulity of man, that when once fully in the clutches of the mystic demon of Masonry, he is ready to believe any dogma that the fraternity may require. I and remember hearing the Master of Prairie Lodge, No. 77, Paris, Illinois stated in open lodge that Christ was a Mason, and that he was in a Freemason lodge when twelve years of age, and that the astonishment expressed by tha lawyers and doctors was occasioned by his ability to answer their questions (Masonically) having never learn-learned, i. e., never been initiated. I afterwards heared some of the abominable sycophants assert publicly that Jesus was a Mason, and they could prove it. Why are men so inconsistent? so dishonest?

Let us put Mr. Albert G. Mackey on the stand and interrogate him in regard to the antiquity of speculative Masonry. He says, in the beginning of the eighteenth century, an important change was made which had a remarkable effect upon the character of the grand lodges. "A proposition was agreed to that the privileges of Masonry should no longer be restricted to operative Masons, but extended to men of various professions." (Mackey's Masonic Jurisprudence, page 414.) Again In 7 7. and very soo after, we find such men as Anderson and Desaguliers who were clergymen and philosophers, holding high position and taking active part in the order, and the society from that time devoted itself to the pursuits of speculative science, leaving the construction of cathedrals and palaces to operative workmen, (see Mackey's Masonic Jurisprudence, page 415).

Thus Mackey tells us that speculative Masonry had its origin in the beginning of the eighteenth century, but he tells us more. On the 24th of June, 1717, the four lodges of operative Masons met at the Apple-tree Tavern (whose name has been rendered famous for all time). They resolved themselves into a grand lodge. Here we have the organization of speculative Masonry, since which time they celebrate the 24th day of June as St. John's day, but in reality it is the anniversary of the origin of their order.

In the short space of four years this new organization, under the labors of such ministers as Anderson and Desaguilliers, (God save us from such!) had increased to such magnitude that its old place of meeting was inadequate to their demands; so in 1821 the assembly was removed from the Goose and Gridiron Alehouse to Stationer's Hall. (See Mackey, page 417). It will be seen that the former place of meeting was very significant, as an appropriate place to obtain refreshments for the benefit of the weary craft when called from labor to refreshments.

Again, we may set it down as a fact that speculative Freemasonry had its origin in an ale-house, and notwithstanding such were the environs of Freemasonry, yet within a few years after its origin we hear it boast of antiquity and of its honorable patrons; even ministers are found associated with it in its infancy. And now it is one hundred and fifty-seven years old it can count its ministers by the thousands, togther with it bishops, elders, laymen, drunkards, liars, gamblers, whore-mongers, and all grades of men mixed in on common brotherhood, bound by an oath with horrible, heathenish penalties. Thus forming one heterogeneous mass of men who, as Masons, dare not recognize Christ. A vast organization whose mouths are padlocked! What a fearful reckoning there will be when all this corruption is revealed! May God in his mercy save us from this terrible evil!

The Jewish Masons of New York.

The Hebrew Leader, New York, July 11th, publishes the following article which, from the fact that the editor is recognized as a leading Mason by Grand Master Fox, is a truly remarkable document to proceed from the bosom of a "fraternity" where nothing but harmony prevails. If 20,000 Masons in a single State can secede for a tradition, how many ought to for the unmixed wickedness of the order?

HAVE ISRAELITES ANY RIGHTS AS MASONS?

Nearly twenty thousand Masons under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of the State of New York, have been, and still are petitioners for justice at the hands of the rulers of the craft.

It has been denied them.

For seven years they have vainly petitioned, resorted to every tactic that ingenuity could devise, remonstrated with and urged upon the assembled wisdom of New York Masonry to give them a fair hearing.

It has been refused them.

For seven years they have appealed to the good sense, the fraternal feeling of their brethren, to the conscience of those pure-minded exemplars of Masonry who run the "Grand Lodge machine"—to do what? To make Masonry what it professes to be—a cosmopolitan and not a Christian institution—to make it a living truth, and not a bare-faced lie—to make Masons truth-seekers and not gospel-mongers.

Their efforts have been useless.

They have been sneered at and derided, and year after year, Masonic justice, pure and undefiled, liberal and enlightened, intelligent and progressive, closes her ears as well as her eyes, to the earnest demand of twenty thousand men for their Masonic rights.

Has one single Mason, among the thousands that are enrolled in the Grand Lodge archives, ever attempted to combat the position we have assumed? Has there been one among the wise Masters, whose large squares flash so brightly on their breasts, or even among those high dignitaries proudly seated upon the platform, and holding up their hands, year after year, "to lay upon the table," and chuckling at the momentary success their cowardly hypocrisy has achieved, who can offer a single argument in opposition to our propositions--

1. That the St. Johns never were Masons.

2. That the Saints John were unknown to Masonry prior to the year 1717.

3. That the introduction in t'e Masonic ritual of the Johns, either as "saints" or "holy saints," is a pious fraud upon the fraternity, and in direct conflict with the well-known cosmopolitan principles of the institution—

But who seeks to quiet his conscience by the soothing plea of "expediency," shelters himself behind the flimsy breast-work of "ancient land-marks," and trembles in his boots lest "Solomon's resolution" be not an entering wedge for further "innovations," creating confusion in the craft?

The action of the Grand Lodge upon the question of sectarianism, insulting as it has been to the intelligence and respectability of the Masons who support the measure, compels us to deduce the inference that justice is denied the Mason because he is an Israelite—that the shadow of the church crosses the threshold of the lodge, and though Masons may wear squares and jewels upon their breasts, they have forgotten the first lesson of the Apprentice, "to learn to subdue their passions"—the passions of bigotry and the hatreds it engenders.

Show us any other reason, ye worshippers of the Holy Saints John?

Be honest; confess the truth, and say openly and above-board that you wish to Christianize the Institution in all its workings. Is this your vaunted toleration? this your boasted liberality? this your pretended cosmopolitanism—your love of justice and truth?

If you wish to force twenty thousand Masons, good and true, out of the institution, your desire may too soon be gratified; but when the banner of Justice will be unfurled, thousands (Christians as well as Jews) will gather beneath its folds who are Masons, not for "expediency," but for "right," and who are now disgusted at the vacillating policy pursued by so august a body upon a question of such vital importance to the craft.

We are your superiors, for we say, "Convince us of our error, and we will forever hold our peace," but you know we are right, yet you dare to trample upon us and laugh at us, secure in the confidence of your bigoted majority.

The cloud is now no larger than a man's hand. Whether it shall continue to increase, until the whole Masonic horizon is darkened by the impending storm that follows it, is not for us to say.

Secret Societies in China.

The following is taken from an article on the Chinese in the London Quarterly Review of July, 1836:

"There exists certain secret associations, under various names, in spite of the vigilance of the government to whom they give considerable uneasiness. Like Freemasons they style each other brothers; and indeed they seem to be not unlike Freemasons in other respects. The oath of secrecy is taken before an idol and a sum of money given to support the general expense. There is a ceremony called kuo-keaou, passing the bridge, which bridge is formed of swords, either laid between two tables, or else set up on the hilts and meeting at the points, in form of an arch. The persons who receive the oath take it under this bridge, and the chief brother reads the articles of the oath, to each of which an affirmative response is given; after which he cuts off the head of a cock, which is the usual form of a Chinese oath, intimating, 'Thus perish all who divulge the secret' Certain motions of the fingers constitute a class of signs. They have a common seal consisting of a pen agonal figure, in which are inscribed certain characters in a sense only understood by the initiated. They are sworn to secrecy and though some of them have been detected and put to torture before execution, they have never been known to divulge their object or their associates."

Right and Reputation.

Most men possessed of any character or influence, have sometimes to choose between right and reputation. Two courses are open before them. To go in one of them will be to retain position, win respect, and acquire influence. To go in the other will be to sacrifice friends, forsake honor, and imperil worldly prospects. And at the parting of these ways, some stand hesitating until the hour of decision is past, while others promptly choose their course, whether for evil or for good. An honorable reputation is a precious treasure. A good name is better than great riches. It is the result of long and faithful labor, the fruits of a lifetime's work. It wins attention and respect, and gives to its possessor influence and position. As a means of good it becomes a sacred trust, to be guarded with unceasing vigilance. But it is an uncertain possession and may pass away like a dream. A single indiscreet word or act may sully or ruin a reputation that has been built up through many years; and no man has a right thus to waste his reputation, or from mere willfulness and wantonness imperil his good name. No man can afford to defy public opinion when public opinion is right; no man can afford to defy it unless it is clearly wrong. No man has a right to do as he pleases, regardless of the common-sense judgment of mankind. Men are to respect the feelings and wishes of others, and every man is bound to please his neighbor, for his good and his edification. When we say what we like, others will answer with something we do not like. If we move according to the law of selfishness and willfulness, others will do likewise, and that to our disadvantage.

There is, however, for the Christian, a higher law than the law of expediency; a loftier principle than the care for personal repute. High above the standards of public opinion and public propriety, rises the Christian's banner, on which is blazoned, "Holiness unto the Lord." Conscience is more stringent in her rules than society; and, in following the word of God, the Christian will keep his inner life more pure and spotless than the world will ask that his outward conduct shall be. He walks before God, and the consciousness that his fellowship is with the heavenly Father, gives to his whole existence an elevation which the world can never comprehend. The world's rebuke to such a man is for his fidelity rather than for his sin. They ask him to come down to their level, and to agree with their lower standard of propriety and mortality. And failing in their efforts to degrade him from his high estate, they, like Potiphar's wife, accuse him of the very crimes they have vainly tried to induce him to commit.

It is then that the Christian must choose between right and reputation. He cannot satisfy the world's demands. No matter what concessions he makes, its exactions increase from day to day. Each compliance is the basis of a new demand, and Satan is satisfied with nothing less than the whole. Somewhere this compliance must stop, and when it stops, reputation must suffer, and hurricanes of abuse and reproach may be expected. And the best place, the surest, and the easiest place to stop the whole, is at the beginning.

A Christian man can well defy public opinion in a righteous cause; he can brave public scorn, if he is sustained by a conscience void of offence towards God and man. Character is more than reputation, and what a man is, is of more importance than what he is said to be.

He who has given himself to the Lord, has not held back his reputation. Though he would not willingly do anything that should bring reproach upon his fair name, yet when the great batteries of hell are opened upon the hosts of Immanuel, he expects to smell powder, and to be blackened with the smoke and grime of war. And between Right and Reputation it does not take him long to choose. He has a character written on high of which man can never rob him; he is but a pilgrim here; his life and his honors take hold upon the ages of eternity, and what cares he for the plaudits of a single hour; or for the reproaches that rise like a windy tempest, and die away like the murmur of a passing gale.

Man's judgment is a light thing, and man's day is very brief. And in a world like this, the Christian has little of honor to expect. The only faultless being that ever trod this earth, "made Himself of no reputation," was hated without a cause and hung between two thieves. And He marks out for His followers a path of shame and sorrow, of cross-bearing and tribulation. And the man who follows Christ has no time to turn back and see what the devil has to say about it. Let him keep on his way, careful of God's honor, and careless of men's reproach, earnest to do right, but indifferent to the clamor of those who impugn his motives, or condemn his acts.

"The Day" will reveal all things. High among the thousand conquerors who shall shine in the light of God in the great Hereafter, will be men of no reputation, who were unhonored and unsung at home, and whose acquaintances were hardly willing to acknowledge that they knew them. But their reward is sure. The book of God's remembrance records acts that never were printed, published, praised, nor acknowledged. The book of life holds names that have been expunged from sectarian church-rolls, that have figured in court writs and jail commitments, in prison records and in death warrants!

"A little while!" ah, how this brief hour will change all questions of reputation, and exalt all followers of right. How hypocrisy shall shrink, and self exaltation dwindle, before the glance of Him whose eyes are as a flame of fire. A few brief days will tell the story, and we shall see as we are seen, and know as we are known. Let us cling then to the right, no matter how reputation may suffer; and let us "judge nothing before the time, till the Lord come, who shall both bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and manifest the counsels of the hearts."—The Christian.

Recognizing Christianity.

At Syracuse, the following resolution being under discussion, Mr. Levington spoke as follows:

Resolved, That as ours is a Christian nation, that fact should be recognized in our organic laws.

Here John Levington expressed his astonishment and regret that any Christian man should hesitate to indorse the resolution under discussion, wondered that any man should exclude from the principles or platform of a Christian nation the name of the Christian's God; denounced the idea of consulting the poor idolatrous Chinese as to whether we should recognize God in the organic laws of our country; did (he asked) China or any other country consult us as to who their God, or what their laws should be? The Chinese, he added, are welcome to come here, but we are under no obligations to become heathens because they are. If they do not like our country and our laws, let them go back whence they came. You are strange reformers, he exclaimed. You have so far back-slidden in one year, that you now propose to exclude what you then adopted as a fundamental principle! You oppose the Masons because they exclude the name of our God from the lodge, and now you would exclude him from the nation! Take God from us and what have we left? Nothing. The very distinction between right and wrong is annihilated!—Meth. Free Press.

"Changes are constantly going on, but they proceed in an orderly progression. Like the bodily organism, whose constituent elements are incessantly being ejected and replaced, so human life is in no two periods precisely the same. It varies with the external conditions by which it is environed; it is also subject to change by progression incident to its very nature from infancy to old age. The common idea that old age is a mere decline, a wasting away of vigor, with no new accession to character by later experience, is a misconception. It would make it a negative existence, in which what had been previously acquired is merely sloughed away; or like a tablet abrased by past attrition, and becoming daily more indistinct."—Dana.

Editor Cynosure: — Please say, through your columns, that I have consented to visit the friends of our cause in Ohio, spending the first two weeks of September with them. My charge has kindly given me a leave of absence for a few weeks; and, as I have had calls from time to time to visit in several of the Western States, I will say to those needing or wishing my services that I will be at liberty to attend to their call during the latter part of September and first of October by having my expenses borne to and from the different places where I may be called. Those desiring my labors address me at once at Lisbon Centre, St. Lawrence county, N. Y.

—Friends in the West will notice Elder Rathburn's letter. We learn that there is an effort to have him go so far as Northwestern Missouri before he returns to his charge in New York.

—A State lecturer for Iowa has been suggested to members of the Executive Committee. An earnest effort should be made to secure a good man for that important field. What say the Iowa brethren?

From the Illinois Agent.

Farm Ridge, Ill., July 22, 1874.

Dear Bro. K.:— Odell, Livingston county, Ill., is a beautiful village on the Chicago & St. Louis railroad, about one hundred miles southwest from Chicago. Like most such villages, it is abundantly supplied with secret orders, of which the Freemasons are most prominent. There is a lodge and chapter, including nearly all the business men, but, I am glad to say, none of the ministers. I lectured in the Congregational church on Saturday evening, July 18th, to a good audience, including a large number of Masons. Good attention was paid, though the wrath of the fraternity was very apparent. I spoke briefly, and gave opportunity for reply. A lawyer, who informed us that he is "high priest of the chapter," responded in a speech of some length. He told us that the Bible affirmed the existence of Masonry in the time of Solomon, and that he had taken the first three degrees as they came from King Solomon. I called his attention to the fact that the Entered Apprentice and Mark Master's degrees contained quotations from the New Testament, and that the legend of Hiram Abiff was in conflict with the express teachings of the Bible, besides being self-contradictory and intrinsically absurd, and therefore the professed historical basis of Masonry was but lying absurdities. He admitted this, but said it did not make any difference whether Masonry was ancient or modern. A spirit of inquiry was awakened which will not sleep; and copies of nearly all the Anti-masonic publications were purchased and placed in a circulating library, where all may have access to them.

I have recently met a Royal Arch Mason, who told me that, while he had not renounced Masonry openly, yet he viewed it with perfect abhorrence; that its obligations were blasphemous, and that he did not see how a Christian could take them. He took Morgan's Exposition and read over the first and third degrees, commenting on them as he went along. He pointed out some slight verbal changes, but affirmed that in every essential particular it has remained unchanged. He bid me a hearty God speed in my work, and said he meant to quietly drop out of the institution. Yours for Christ,

H. H. Hinman.

Grant County, Ind., on Politics.

At the county Anti-masonic Convention held in Marion, Ind., June 24th, last, a clear and honest declaration of principles and the following platform was adopted. The latter reads:

Resolved, 1st. That we pledge ourselves that we will support no man for any office of trust and profit, nor will we support any man to represent us in the State or National Legislatures, who cannot give us sufficient evidence that he is decidedly and sincerely on the side of Temperance, Anti-secrecy, purity of Morals, the Bible, and the Christian Religion, with all the natural sequences that follow therefrom.

2nd, That in our opinion it is unwise to send (as has been too much the custom) young upstarts of petifogers to legislate for us in our State Legislature.

The third and fourth sections are a demand that the inflated salary of State and county officers and the Legislature be properly reduced.

5th. That we heartily endorse the temperance cause, and we hold that the licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquors to be drank as a beverage, as being wholly wrong and that such sales for such a purpose should be prohibited by law, and the violation thereof punishable with fine and imprisonment, and we pledge ourselves to use our utmost endeavors to bring about said result.

6th. That while we heartily extend the hand of sympathy to the oppressed foreigner of every nationality, and bid him welcome to our shores and a home among us, and to partake of the blessings of our Republican Government, and to worship God according to the dictates of each individual conscience, yet we are unalterably opposed to such foreigner bringing the vicious habits of the country from which they have fled, and engrafting them upon our free institutions; in short, we are opposed to free whisky, free lager, free Sabbath, free love, Freemasonry, with all their concomitant abominations.

Around the Lakes.

Lake Michigan, off Milwaukee,
July 16, 1874.

We are just leaving the beautiful bay of which Milwaukee is justly proud, and are about to cross the Lake. Some interesting recollections related to by an old time abolitionist (none of your modern patriots who so exultingly shout "we killed the bear") have prompted me to converse for a few minutes with my old friend the Cynosure, as I have no acquaintance on board.

It was my privilege to call on uncle, aunt, and cousins at the home of A. H. Bielfeld, Esq., one of the early residents of Milwaukee, and a prominent citizen during the time that, as he said, "tried the souls of men." He was always a friend of the oppressed, and the old fire re-animated him as he spoke of the scenes of '54. A slaveholder had claimed as a runaway slave, Joshua Glover, a colored man who had been living in Racine Co., Wis., for several years. Mr. Glover was arrested, brought to Milwaukee, and confined in the Milwaukee county jail. S. M. Booth, a liberty editor of the city, received a despatch from Racine stating the facts; and after assuring himself that the man was really in the jail he mounted a horse and galloped through the streets of the city shouting at the top of his voice, "To the rescue." Before night 5,000 men had gathered around the court-house, among them a delegation of one hundred men headed by the sheriff of Racine Co., determined to free Mr. Glover if possible. The citizens organized by electing Dr. E. B. Wolcott. chairman, and Mr. Bielfeld, secretary. Speeches were made by Mr. Booth, Mr. Paine and others, and lastly Mr. Bielfeld made an enthusiastic appeal to the liberty-loving Germans. He closed with these words,

"Der Mann muss gerettet sein ehe die Sonne untergeht"—the man must be freed before the sun goes down. The masses caught the inspiration, and before Mr. Bielfeld could reach the ground, a modern battering ram (a large piece of timber), in the willing hands of stalwart freemen, with their souls on fire, burst the prison door. Mr. Glover was again a man, and by men was soon carried out of the reach of the slave hounds.

Mr. Booth was arrested and kept in confinement for many months, but so great was the excitement, and so thoroughly were the Germans aroused, that it was not deemed expedient to molest Bielfeld very much. He was arraigned before the Grand Jury, and when asked if his hands were on the battering ram, he said, "No; but they would have been had I reached the ground in time." He was also asked why he accompanied the carriage which took Glover away; his answer was, "I wanted to see how a man looks when taken from the right of slavery into the light of freedom." Notwithstanding these bold utterances he was acquitted.

It unnecessary to say that Mr. Bielfeld is opposed to secret as well as public despotism, but alas! he has not learned the great lesson that "He is free whom the truth makes free." Thy word, O God, is truth.

Detroit, Mich., July 20, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:—For a number of hours I have been indulging in the luxury of waiting for a boat. I took a Woodard avenue car, and went as far as it would carry me and back, enjoying the sights of the magnificent dwellings and pleasant yards that line the street on both sides, while the driver and conductor entertained me with a relation of names, occupation and financial "worth" of the owner. I then started off at right angles on a Fort street car, which landed me at Fort Wayne, where a boy in blue paced up and down before the gate without interfering with any one who wished to pass in or out. I sauntered over the grounds enclosed in the walls for some time, then strolled through the officer's barracks, examined some mounted guns and empty ammunition boxes, wondered much how the soldiers manage to spend their time; then I returned to the city and am finally wielding the sometimes potent pen.

The trip around the lakes affords some beautiful scenery, and a good opportunity for studying the proper study of mankind, according to Pope. The scenery at Mackinaw straits is quite pretty; the shore at the right is lined with lofty pines and at the left green islets delight the sight. At Glen Haven our boat stopped long enough to let us examine several saw-mills briefly one of which interested me very much.

It seemed like a single machine with a diversity of gifts. The lake on one side of it was covered with pine logs about 16 to 20 feet long; a man with a hook was walking about on these, dragging them one by one to an inclosed plane, over which they were drawn into the mill by steam. Here several gang saws, and several circular saws sliced them into boards about an inch thick, these were passed through the planing mills, and through a machine cutting off the ends so as to make them of equal length, then they were piled up on a one-horse cart on rails leading to the dock. One man was setting saws by steam and another filing them. In passing through the St. Clair and Detroit river the passengers have an excellent opportunity to compare our own with a foreign shore, but I must confess that I was either not observing enough or not imaginative enough to notice any striking difference, except that close to the Canada shore there were a number of Catholic churches, and on our side no churches of any kind near the shore.

On board I was interested in studying the effects of Catholicism, Masonry, wordliness, on the one hand, and a little of Christianity. The most interesting representative of the former was an intelligent Irishman who had been a sort of a wanderer for some years. He spoke German quite readily, and understood some French. He seemed well educated in other respects, but for all that was entirely dependent on the Pope for his hope of salvation. One of his most remarkable statements was something like this: "The Pope may in his prinate capacity be a very bad man or a very good (we happen to have a very good one just now), yet when he speaks from the altar it is im possible for him to ear." After bringing to bear, as I thought, argument enough from Scripture and common sense to crush him unless he yielded the position, he said, "There we have it again; you may convince a man's judgment a thousand times a day that the church of Rome is the only true church, and unless God's grace works in his heart he will not believe." I yielded to this argument, and thanked him for telling me that he had a great deal of charity for a man who never was a Catholic, but that he once cut up an apostate terribly who rewarded him for his fidelity by two glasses of brandy. I was aided in this contest by a member of the Christian church at Cleveland, who was once a Mason, but finding it altogether unnecessary had not attended the lodge for ten years.

A Campbellite Preacher Riding Two Horses.

Indianapolis, Ind., July 20, 1874.

About three weeks ago the corner-stone of the Chamber of Commerce building of this city was laid according to the ritual of Freemasonry. In the absence of the Grand Chaplain, Thomas H. Lynch, (Methodist), the duties of the office were discharged by W. F. Black, pastor of the largest and most fashionable Campbellite church in this city. Mr. Black is not a very consistent Mason; he characterises as deistical the prayers of the lodge, and refuses obedience to that law or principle of the order which requires the name of Christ to be excluded from its devotions. His course on the occasion of laying the corner-stone secured him the following notice in the People, of the 5th instant. It appears in their answers to correspondents:

"Jew—In reply will say Grand Chaplain W. F. Black's ignorance of Masonic jurisprudence is truly refreshing. The fag end of his invocation to the Diety, delivered at Chamber of Commerce ceremonies, the other day, was as much out of joint as a Fourth of July oration would be on Christmas. Will the Grand Chaplain hereafter construct his invocations on such occasions so that all present will respond, "So mote it be."

Mr. Black is by far too candid a man to make a first-class Mason. He voluntarily acknowledged in presence of the profane that he knew all about Masonry before he joined the lodge. He evidently had been reading Morgan or Bernard. An excuse assigned by Mr. Black for connecting himself with the order is the facility for missionary labor among a wealthy class. He illustrated his argument in nearly these words: "There is brother Smith, a member of my lodge, a whole-souled, generous fellow, a wealthy and influential citizen, but an infidel; I told him he would certainly be damned unless he changed his belief. Now I would not have taken this liberty, only he is a Mason."

When brother Black joins a band of counterfeiters, or a Credit Mobilier, or the Mormon church, for the purpose of converting them, the readers of the Cynosure will hear from me again, especially if he accepts a chaplaincy in connection with his missionary labors.

Grangerism in Iroquois County, Ill.

Wellington, Ill., July 15, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

The grange in this vicinity is not mov ng along as smoothly as its friends would perhaps desire, and for the purpose of healing up dissentions with the object of strengthing their cause, they imported a lecturer who is a Methodist preacher. In his lecture in the grange he asserted (as I am told) that the Odd-fellows could date their origin far in the past, the Masons back to Solomon's time, but that the grangers dated their origin as an order clear to Adam! We think, perhaps, the reverend gentleman was slightly mistaken in dates as well as in some other minor matters as we should suppose the Masons have a better claim on Adam and Eve than the grangers, from the simple fact that Adam and Eve wore aprons fashioned somewhat, perhaps, like the aprons that Masons now wear.

The grangers in this vicinity usually have their meetings of Saturday nights and stay out so late that the next day they are unfitted for church. I heard Rev. Mr. Seals give them a good round scolding for sleeping in church. It looks simple for a preacher to preach to a lot of men and women sound asleep every Sabbath, and it would annoy preacher and hearers less if they would take their naps at home.

It seems that Fountain Creek Grange had some trouble of late getting a lady to join them. A committee was first appointed to wait on her and persuade her to come in, this lecturer and preacher being one of the committee. And if reports are to be credited, the grange took a vote to dispense with the hoodwinking, as she positively refused to be hoodwinked. She is a fine lady and sensible woman, and the poor grangers while in iating her had to drop all their tom-foolery and pow-wow. This much should be credited to the anties in the neighborhood. The grange in this community is fast becoming a hiss and a by-word. The Masons and Odd-fellows are initiating few if any, and they are not the ones they want, but the ones we are willing they should have, as the more of them they get the better, as such accessions will only hasten the early down-fall of the secret orders.

A Question of Fellowship.

Pine Run, Mich., July 15, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:—In May last I came to this place bringing a letter recommending myself and wife to the Congregational church of Pine Run, but before I had an opportunity to present said letter I was notified by a deacon, who had formerly known me as an opposer of secret societies, that if I came into said church I must stop harping about secret societies. At this time this church was without a minister, and a society meeting was called to decide whether to hire Mr. Kidder, an anti-secret Congregational minister, or Mr. Thompson, a Methodist preacher and chaplain of a Masonic and an Odd-fellow lodge, both in this village. Said meeting was mostly composed of Masons and Odd-fellows, who with said deacon agreed to employ this double chaplain, who at a Congregational church meeting held last Friday, on presentation of a paper from the M. E. presiding elder, certifying that he was in regular standing in the M. E. church, was received into said Congregational church.

I now ask wiser heads than mine, is it my duty to present my letter to said Congregational church? Besides this church and two lodges in this village, there is a Disciple church with a lodge man for minister. At Celis, one mile west of here, is a Congregational church ruled by Freemasonry, and an M. E., church ruled by Odd-fellows. One mile north-west of here is a Free-will Baptist church with a Freemason minister, and a Free Methodist church, where I have been invited to go and speak and act in opposition to the "image of the beast," and they say they will stand by me. We want a lecturer here, and I have got the promise of the Congregational house for lectures, if I can get a speaker. Can one be had with but small prospect of pecuniary pay? Yours,

Walter M. Beden.

[The advice of the Cynosure to the brother might be anticipated. Let him join the church that does not fellowship the devil and his works. For these reasons: The Free Methodist brethren may differ in some respects from his ideas of doctrine, but they hold with him the fundamental truth of separation of truth from falsehood, and he will find differences of doctrine fading away if Christ dwells in him and them. Opposition to this anti-Christ is more effectual in a community if it is not fellowshipped. So long as we live in a world of imperfect men and imperfect Chistians, we can best serve the Kingdom of Christ in connection with those who fear him and hate sin most. This is a safe rule; the application of it in various cases must be left to the individual conscience guided by the Holy Spirit. As for lectures an effort will be made to help Bro. Beden in his battle for truth.—Ed. Cynosure.]

From Henry County, Ohio.

Liberty, O., July 23, 1874.

Bro. Kellogg:—We are much pleased with the Cynosure in its new and improved form. Long may it live to battle for the right!

As I have not seen anything in your paper from Henry county, O., permit me to say there are a few here who are not "bowing the knee to Baal," and do not propose to worship the creature instead of the Creator. We earnestly desire "more light," but do not propose to go into the dark corners of the earth in quest of it. What the people very much need is more light, as many, especially young men, are induced to enter the lodge without a knowledge of its real character. Members of the fraternity do willfully misrepresent and mislead. Why will Masons persist in saying "they do not try to persuade men to enter the lodge"? It might be thought impolite to call them liars, but if the truth be told in relation to the above it is simply this: More or less of them do tell what they know to be false. An acquaintance, who resides in the county of Steuben, Indiana, a man of truth and veracity, though not at the time a professed Christian, stated to me that a certain minister had repeatedly tried to induce him to enter the lodge. Said he: "He did not ask me to become a Christian, but he did ask me to join the Masons." Shame on such ministers!

I was glad to see in the Cynosure the name of C. Cogswell, of Williams county, who, at an advanced age, is helping to carry forward the work of reform. He has long been a staunch advocate of the anti-secrecy cause. He has some personal knowledge of the "Morgan tragedy," having lived in the vicinity at the time. He, too, was duped by Masons, who induced him to enter the lodge, assuring him that Morgan's statements in regard to it were false. But in taking several degrees, he found that those Masons were guilty of falsehood, and Morgan's statement true to the letter. He left them in disgust.

We have a great work to do in Ohio just now. We are engaged in a warfare with the cohorts of rum. The liquor-dealers and their minions are rallying. The battle will be sharp. It

OUR MAIL.

James H. Berryman, of Thompson, Jo Daveiss Co., Ill., writes:

"The sentiments of your paper and its supporters in their noble attempts to suppress the evil influences of all secret orders meet my hearty concurrence; but we must lay aside those fond delusions of hope in which mankind is so apt to indulge; and 'with malice toward none and charity for all,' work with untiring energy to impress upon the hearts of our countrymen the evil working of secret orders. To accomplish these ends you have labored long and hard, but do not despond. You have more friends than you know of. The cause is growing stronger and brighter around here; let us keep the ball in motion, and multitudes who now regard Antimasonic truths as an idle tale will ere long help on the noble cause which is no other than right."

We shall not lose our faith in this cause, for it is God's; and the indications of his hand in it would condemn all doubts. There are many no doubt who cherish the sentiments of the Cynosure in secret. They should be using their influence for God's truth. Search them out, friends, and get them interested.

Rev. J. W. Raynor, Uniondale, Pa., writes:

"I would sooner part with all my other papers than with the Cynosure."

Geo. Raynor, Jessup, Iowa, writes:

"I think the Christian Cynosure the best paper published in defense of the truth."

W. H. Smylie, Cadiz, Ohio, writes:

"I cannot think of doing without the Cynosure. I wish that it was in every family in existence, and Freemasonry and all other oath-bound societies abolished from our land."

Rev. Joel Martin, Lambertville, Mich., writes:

"I wish you might have a hundred thousand subscribers. The paper is worthy of a very liberal patronage."

John Morrison, Mt. Palatine, Ill., writes:

"I want to see some others that I think will take your paper. . . . I like it better than any paper I have seen since William Goodell stopped printing the Abolitionist."

John A. Dodds, Mt. Chestnut, Pa., writes:

"Send me your 'burning, flying Roll' for another year. I did not know my time was out till I received the last number. I hardly see the tab on the wrapper from one year's end to another. Wife and children are so anxious to read the Cynosure, it is torn open on sight."

He jocosely adds that a penalty is in store for us if the paper is stopped without express orders, such an one as was the dread of school-boy days, and the recollection of it secures to the brother a faithful promise to obey.

Mrs. C. B. Hall, Paw Paw, Mich., writes:

"I remember Southwick's papers, and was interested in them, and was taught to abhor works of secrecy and do still. I was met by a doctor a few days ago in Paw Paw, and asked if I took the Cynosure. I told him, yes. He had seen one at our Baptist minister's. I give them to him to read and circulate. The doctor said he had been a Mason, but did not meet with them now; although it was a good thing, it saved so many in time of the war."

Mrs. Hall is a daughter of Moses Woodward, whose death was noticed last week. Faithful instructions were not lost to her.

P. J. Martin, Crawfordsville, Ind., sending a subscription, writes:

"I will subscribe for myself again soon, I think. Have been without nearly a year. Will do what I can. Success to you."

Francis Hull, Lenoxville, Pa., says:

"The Cynosure is a good Christian paper. I have taken it when it was small. It is now a first rate paper. I shall take it myself as long as it opposes wrong and advocates truth and righteousness. I am a farmer and very busy, but will try to help the cause. . . . I can't vote for men of the craft if I don't vote at all."

Thos. Barland, Eau Claire, Wis., says that with the co-operation of other friends he hopes to have lectures again ere long in that place.

Rev. C. Helper, Clyde, O., writes:

"I do not want my paper stopped. I expect to take it as long as I am able to pay for it. I not only expect to take it myself, but I do and shall try to get others to take it, as I do believe that every man should read the Cynosure, whether he be a Freemason or not: for I verily believe that there are hundreds of men who have been entrapped in the cursed institution who would come out if they knew just how to get out and save their lives. I think if they could read the Cynosure it would help them very much in getting free from the terrible slavery under which they are living."

This is undoubtedly the case, and those who help circulate the paper and other documents are truly "co-workers with God" in bringing men into true soul-liberty. It is a now great honor, even among men, to have suffered and labored to free the colored race from the bondage men had placed on their bodies; how much greater honor shall we have before God and the holy angels for rescuing a soul from the chains of hell!

N. B. Blanton, Coffeyville, southern Kansas, writes:

"The signs of the times are better here now for our cause. The great trouble is that money is very scarce and our friends as a general thing are among the poorer class. There is more inquiry for tracts than I have ever had before. The Masons have lost ground here and at Independence by reason of their parades."

J. A. Conant, Willimantic, Conn., sent some time since a large list of three months subscribers. He has lately written to them all, explaining how the paper came to be sent them, and requesting a renewal. Such efforts for the cause will have their reward.

He says:

"I am anxious that there should be an organization in this State, but it is hard, up-hill work, and I must make use of all the facilities I can obtain in accomplishing the result; not forgetting that God reigns and will finally bless all earnest and honest labors for the advancement of his cause."

Briggs Alden, Fontanelle, Iowa, writes:

"I long to see the day come when all secret combinations, religious heresies and priestcraft come to an end; yet I am sorry to see you work with such blunt tools, when there are so many that are sharp and good, and if properly used would make much shorter work of what you have begun. If you want to know what tools I recommend I will say use the new translation of the Bible and the Book of Mormon and you will learn that the first murder that was committed upon the earth was done by a secret oath made with the devil. It was by Cain who slew his brother. The Book of Mormon informs us that secretism laid the foundation for the drowning of the world, and that the same curse was on this continent and has always been on the earth; that secret combinations will be among the Gentile nations, and they get into the lodge by being led by a flaxen cord around the neck."

It is interesting to know that the Book of Mormon mentions secret societies. The will of God revealed in the Old and New Testaments are tools which we prefer, however, for through the help of the Spirit we know their use. They are truly "a two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of the soul and spirit," and discerning "the thoughts and intents of the heart." Do we want anything better?

Forty Years Ago.

The Early Semblances of Masonry.

[From an address by Dr. Waterhouse, Jan. 1, 1878, before an Anti-masonic convention at Dedham, Mass.]

There was a combination of great influence and celebrity in Greece, that generally met at Athens, denominated the Eleusinian Mystery, conducted with deep solemnity and secrecy. If any of the initiated revealed the secrets of it, it was thought unsafe to live in the same house with him, lest it should, by the wrath of the gods, be struck with lightning, and the wretch was put to death. Yet the sagacious Socrates, that wonder of his age, that light shining in a dark place, denounced that secret Masonry of the Greeks as impious toward heaven and mischievous towards the community at large; and it is well known that for this attack on their secret society he was condemned to drink the fatal hemlock.

It is remarkable that Masonry commenced in that early and dark period of the world, when the priest, the conjurer, and the physician were united in the same person. It was so among the Egyptians, Babylonians and people of the East generally. It grew up in like manner among the ancient Grecians and the French. It was so among the ancient Britons, but chiefly among the Druids. It was so among the Mexicans and Peruvians, and the like sort of Masonry prevails at this day among our savage Indians; so prone are men of a certain cast of mind to wrap themselves up in a cloud of mystery, that they may more easily govern their fellow creatures, a striking instance of which may be seen in the history of the first Popes of Rome, who, during several hundred years, bound in chains the human understanding, till Martin Luther and other reformers broke the spell, and freed the human mind from a degree of slavery and thralldom that is scarcely credible. Reason was confounded by mystery, image-worship, awe, dread and ignorance, while the most degrading superstition and priestly violence upheld for ages a debasing system of mental oppression.

If we recur to the oldest book we have, the Bible, we shall find that the Jewish system was made up chiefly of ceremonies, types and figures, denoting intellectual things and moral duties. This mode of teaching morality was at that early period of the world necessary, absolutely necessary; and why? Because then not one person in ten thousand, beside the priesthood, could read. The people were not then able to exhibit thoughts to the eye by means of writing; hence the necessity arose of teaching by signs and symbols, that when these struck the eye they should raise corresponding ideas in the mind, and thus convey moral truths and duties by the sight and by the operation of tools and mechanical instruments.

This is the fulcrum on which rests and turns the most fascinating part of Masonic instruction, which, from its simplicity and manifest adaptation, delights a young and uninformed mind predisposed to wonder.

The pleasing analogy between things material and intellectual strikes with admiration the imperfectly educated mind, and Moses was permitted, if not enjoined, to use it in governing the six hundred thousand Jews whom he led out of Egypt; and modern Masons have imitated the lighter parts of it. I say the lighter parts of it; for the Persians, if not the Egyptian, mode of teaching the most weighty and important truths was of a higher standard and of a more sublime nature. This was the secret literature of the ancient kings, taught them in strict confidence by the Magi, or "wise men of the East," who were the masters of the symbolical school. While modern Masons make a structure or temple the symbol or emblem of society, the Magi made the order and government of the material world a mirror or looking-glass for the political government of a state.

But all this typical or mechanical morality was swept away by Christianity, which substituted intellect in its place. Instead of tangible and visible things, it made the Christian heaven, not a material structure, the work of a slowly progressive architect, laying one hewn stone upon another (which the Bible forbids, Ex. xx 25), but a temple "not made with hands," and therefore "eternal."

We neither censure nor deride those who are enraptured with a system that addresses itself, like the worship of images, to the eyesight. Yet we may, I hope, be allowed to express surprise and wonder, and even astonishment, that clergymen, ministers of the Christian religion, should be so attached as some are to a system of ceremonies, forms, types, figures and instruments, and be aiding in getting up a sudden, theatrical contrivance to effect amazement, instead of exhibiting the inward man of the heart. We lament that any teacher of the spiritual religion should take up with the husks and the shell instead of the meat; or that he should ever mix the words of Christian worship with the jargon of Masonry, since it is forbidden in the Bible to mix linen with woolen, or to plough with an ox and an ass.

35 And the same day, when the even was come, he saith unto them, Let us pass over unto the other side.

36 And when they had sent away the multitude, they took him even as he was in the ship. And there were also with him other little ships.

37 And there arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full.

38 And he was in the hinder part of the ship, asleep on a pillow: and they awake him, and say unto him, Master, carest thou not that we perish?

39 And he arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still. And the wind ceased, and there was a great calm.

40 And he said unto them, Why are ye fearful? how is it that ye have no faith?

41 And they feared exceedingly, and said one to another, What manner of man is this, that even the wind and the sea obey him?

GOLDEN TEXT.—"He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still."—Ps. cvii. 29.

TOPICAL ANALYSIS.

The Stormy Voyage, verses 35-37.
The Sleeping Lord, verse 38.
The Great Calm, verse 39.
The Wondering Disciples, vrs. 40, 41.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

What is the first topic? Jesus and his disciples were going across the lake from Capernaum to Gadara, about seven miles. What had Jesus been doing? What time was it when they started? How many boats were there? What happened on the voyage? What occasioned the danger?

What is the second topic? Do you suppose the disciples were good sailors? What was their business before Jesus called them? Did they know the lake well? How did they feel in the storm? Where was Jesus? The pillow was probably the boat cushion. What did they say to the Lord? Was there any danger of Jesus being drowned? If they were with him would they not be safe?

What is the third topic? What did Jesus do? What did he say? Repeat the Golden Text. Read Ps. cvii. 25-28. This is illustrative of our voyages; if Jesus is with us we are safe. Did you ever take a journey? Were you ever afraid? Are we not often afraid when there is no real danger? If we had more confidence in the Lord would we not escape fear? What is the fourth topic? What did Jesus say to them? Why ought they to have felt safe? Where had he told them they were to go? (verse 35.) Would he fail to bring them there? Where has he promised that his own shall be? (John xiv. 2, 3.) Will he surely bring them across? How did the disciples feel? They did not fully know Jesus, and were amazed at his power.

Lessons. The world is like that sea of Galilee. The church is like the little ship which held Jesus and his disciples; there are many winds and storms, but he will bring us safely to land. Our hearts are like the sea; even when we are Christians, winds of temptation and storms of trial sweep down, and in a moment the waters are troubled, and the waves rise. Let us remember Jesus is near, and careth for us (1 Pet. v. 7.) He can speak peace, and there will be a great calm.—National S. S. Teacher.

The Gospel by Mark.

Matthew sets forth our Saviour as a New Testament King of the Jews, in whom the Old Testament has been completely and throughout fulfilled; Mark, on the other hand, exhibits him in his independent personality, as that new and absolute manifestation of the Deity in Israel which the whole Old Testament was designed only to pre-announce and make ready for. The first evangelist delineates for us the life of Jesus in its theocratic aspect and as bearing upon universal history; the second shows that, besides this human bearing, the life of Jesus, both in its nature and working, carries the direct impress of divinity. Thus the Gospel of history is followed by the history of the Gospel; the Gospel which details mighty suffering by the Gospel which delineates mighty achievement.

The deeds of divine heroism which he describes find, as it were, an appropriate body in peculiarities of expression, whether by an accumulation of strong negatives and by rapid transitions, or by rapid succession in the narrative. In fact, the word straightway may be designated as the appropriate watchword of our Gospel. While Matthew transports us gradually into the events of his time, as he relates what "came to pass in those days," the peculiar expression "immediately," "forthwith," "straightway," employed by Mark, hurries us from one event to another. But while the evangelist rapidly sketches his great picture, he also greatly delights to dwell on those particular events which form its essential features.

The second Gospel may be characterized as that of a rapt beholding of the Son of God manifesting his divine power by his divine working. The victorious work of Christ passes before us in a series of great life pictures, rapidly succeeding each other. His mission of pardon and grace is accomplished in a few great stages, each the result of deepest energy and zeal, and the manifestation of his inmost life. It is as if the heavens were rent asunder, and were eternally pouring down their richest showers of blessing.

Mark was the son of an influential Christian matron of Jerusalem, called Mary, in whose house the disciples were wont to meet for united worship, according to the custom of those days. (Acts xii. 12.) Mary had wholly devoted herself to the cause and service of Christ; for at a time when James the Elder had just fallen by the sword of Herod Agrippa, and Peter lay in prison awaiting a doom from which he was only delivered by a miracle, she risked her all by converting her house, so to speak, into the principal church of Jerusalem. Indeed, so well was this understood, that, after his miraculous liberation from prison, Peter at once directed his steps to her house, as the great center and meeting-place of the disciples. The son of such a woman—a worthy companion of the other heroic Marys of the Gospels—could not but be early acquainted with the blessed truths of Christianity.—Lange.

Home and Health Hints.

Dr Hall says that in the absence of fruits or berries, butter-milk is a good substitute; its acid affecting the liver healthfully; also that all root beers are pernicious.

Eating freely of asparagus is said to be a good remedy for rheumatism and gout. Every farmer should raise it. Select one year old roots, dig a trench 18 or 20 inches deep. Into this, heap well rotted compost, throw on sand, press the soil well around the roots, which should be placed at right angles with the plant; heap high the surface soil, so rains will not make the row lower, as water is detrimental to a large full stalk. Cut carefully; do not hit or injure the young shoots.

To Cook Poultry.—All kinds of poultry and meat can be cooked quicker by adding to the water in which they are boiled, a little vinegar or a piece of lemon. By the use of an acid there will be a considerable saving of fuel, as shortening of time. Its action is beneficial on old, tough meats, rendering them quite tender and easy of digestion. Tainted meats and fowl will lose their bad taste and odor if cooked in this way, and if not used too freely no taste of it will be acquired.

All vegetables may be cooked much quicker if a small piece of soda is dropped into the boiling water.

Apple Fritters.—Sour milk, one pint; saleratns one teaspoonful; flour, to make a batter not very stiff; six apples pared and cored; three eggs. Dissolve the saleratus in the milk, beat the eggs and put in, then the flour to make a soft batter, chop the apples to about the size of small peas, and mix them well with the batter. Fry in lard as you would doughnuts. Eaten with butter and sugar.

Custard without Eggs.—Boil a quart of milk, except a teacupful in which to put four tablespoonsful of flour. When it boils put in a very little salt and stir the flour just as for starch. Add two tablespoonsful of sugar and such spice as you like.

To Prepare Wooden Pails.—If a common wooden pail receives three coats of common copal varnish on the inside before being used, it will never become water-soaked, nor will it give any disagreeable flavor to water that may be allowed to stand in it for any length of time. Thus its usefulness and durability are greatly increased.—Hearth and Home.

Education of Horses.

The education of horses is going to characterize an important epoch of the nineteenth century. After the benevolent Creator had told father Adam to have dominion over the beasts of the field through love, Adam's depraved decendants began to tyrannize over the poor horses, so that the primeval domination remaining has been maintained only by cruel brute force. Horses have been knocked and whanged about as if they were foot-balls.

Such a thing as educating horses has scarcely been thought of. The rule has been when a young horse was first harnessed, if he did not move right along before he had been taught where to go and what to do, to whip him. If he acted awkwardly, the lash was laid on. If he sprang at the unceremonious abuse, the cruel driver repeated the abuse. If the horse ran, he was whaled. If he trembled with fear the driver would lick him. If he failed to start before he had been taught to go, a severe cut was given him with the lash. If he stumbled on a rough ground, he got licked for it. If he slipped down for want of being properly shod, he was licked. If he fell exhausted beneath a cart-rung, he was cracked over the head. If he whoaed too soon when told to whoa, he got licked again for it. If he manifested any resentment to cruel treatment, he received abuse without measure. But the day of millennial glory will soon dawn, when our horses will be educated to render service for affection; the miserable bridles, bits and cruel winkers will be thrown aside and without lines or whip, even the children may sit in the carriage and direct the spirited Charley or Jack by gentle words, with safety and confidence. The day is about to dawn when schools will be established all over our country for preparing competent instructors to educate our horses. It is a philanthropic enterprise and all good people will hold up both hands for the coming of that eventful day.—N. F. Rural.

The Destruction of Our Forests.

Thirty years ago in the valley of the Genesee, New York, village merchants were in the habit of receiving pine lumber from customers at the rate of $5 per thousand feet, and giving therefor "store pay" as value received. To-day, in some portions of the Genesee valley, there are a few acres of pine yet standing, and single trees are worth from fifty to one hundred dollars each as they stand. The present development of the West is as rapid, proportionately, as that of the East has been during the past thirty years. Owners of pine lands in the West have been anxious to realize the greatest immediate profit from their valuable acres rather than adopt measures whereby a reasonable return would result from labor and investment, and at the same time fully utilize the timber cut.

Profit in Poultry.

It is often asked if there is any profit in poultry keeping. In keeping ravenous flocks of from forty to fifty fowls, which lay no more than that number of eggs during the whole winter, there certainly is no more profit. But a flock of some twenty to thirty well-cared-for hens, laying summer and winter, will more than pay their way, as any skeptic will be convinced on trial. Nor is there any doubt that large numbers of fowls may be kept with proportionate profit, if no more than thirty are confined in a single house and yard. Every family having the use of a plot of ground of sufficient size, should keep a few fowls for the children, under whose charge they should be; and no matter if they are a dead loss pecuniarily, the advantages of the care-taking habits thus gained, will be incalculable to the children.

George Tweedle, President of the Albany County Agricultural Society, calls attention to the fact that there are in a standard legal barrel only one hundred quarts, while the ordinary flour barrel most in use among the farmers in the sale of potatoes and apples, contains nearly one-eighth more.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

WHEATON COLLEGE.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Some years since, your readers will remember I appealed for help to build the new and beautiful buildings of Wheaton College. The appeal was not in vain. A beloved, dying brother, (Mr. W. C. Willard) then at the Rochester Water Cure, saw Bro. Post's Cynosure, and sent us one thousand dollars. Good brother L. Foster sent us a like sum from Blue Island. He, too, is gone home. And while others, living and departed, gave larger amounts a multitude of smaller sums came from equally large hearts. They were duly acknowledged and paid over, and the buildings are up, and everybody is pleased with them. But there is the old story of expenses exceeding estimates. The building has left us in a debt of twenty thousand dollars, and I am abroad asking help to remove this debt. I meet friends wherever I come. I have never asked aid in a single church and been refused. But I am, of course, not admitted to churches controlled by Freemasons. At Princeton, Wyanet, Malden, and Moline, I have received aid and the most friendly reception. But to raise twenty thousand dollars, in small sums, and keep down two thousand dollars annual interest is a long road in this hot weather. Who will abbreviate my work by sending contributions to this debt, so that I can meet our students Sept. 10th? Write me at Wheaton.

THE WOMEN'S TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT—REV. MR. STOUGHTON—THE CORRUPTION OF SECRET CEREMONIES—A FEW WORDS TO REV. MR. COLLINS.

CAMBRIDGE, Ill., July 21, 1874.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I spoke in Moline last Saturday evening from a stand, to people in the streets, by request of the ladies' "Temperance League." The crowd was respectable and respectful, with some minor exceptions arising from the natural ignorance and bad manners of the saloon. On the next day Dr. John Hall, of New York city, took occasion to endorse very handsomely the woman's temperance movement, in his plain and popular address on Sunday-schools.

The chief promoters of the women's temperance movement, both at Sterling and at Moline, are members of secret societies. Rev. Mr. Stoughton, who had been speaking at Sterling before me, while pastor of the large Methodist Episcopal church at Freeport, Ill., some years since, told me he had left the Masonic lodge eight years before, because he saw that it endangered and was almost certain to destroy the souls of unregenerate men who trusted in it for their religion, as the unregenerate Irish rely on popery and the mass. Within a few years the same Rev. Mr. Stoughton invited and took Mr. Freeman, of the south part of Du Page county, Ill., with him to a Masonic lodge in the city of Aurora.

Now had the Rev. Mr. Stoughton changed his mind concerning the tendency of the lodge to destroy souls? Or had he become indifferent to the salvation and damnation of men? Or, is his conduct to be set down to the sorcery of the lodge, whose Grand Master was "a liar from the beginning?" So Gen. Sam. Carey, of Cincinnati, who had just preceded me in addressing the ladies at Sterling, has made a very indifferent record as a Christian, and a worse record as an Andrew Johnson politician. But he has a fine person, good voice, and speaks well on temperance. These are all "Good Templars."

But secrecy, and ceremonies intended to be solemn and impressive, instead of reforming men corrupt them. This is their nature and their history. Jesuitism and popery are nothing but secret oaths with priestly "orders," titles, regalia, and human rights, added to the Christian religion, whose author, Christ, "in secret said nothing." A very child in reasoning can see that secret ceremonies, though originally intended for good, to-day befool and enslave the old nations. Loyola, the founder of the Jesuits, was one of the sincerest of men. So is Brigam Young. He prays in his Harem, and believes, like other spiritualists, the devils whom he consults. Mormonism was, and is, what is technically cal'ed "Clandestine Masonry." This Major Powell admitted in conversation with me when he was fresh from Salt Lake. Jo Smith was a Mason, and made the Mormon lodge "clandestine" by a stop-degree, which kept other Masons out of Mormon lodges. And yet, in the face of these living facts; in the face of history, which with one voice, through the countries, proclaims that simple secrecy and solemn ceremonies are Satan's "strongholds," which Christ's open and equal religion is to "pull down," experiments which have ruined Asia we are repeating here in Illinois,

Rev. Mr. Collins, Methodist preacher in charge here at Moline, is a pleasant and agreeable man. He had charge of the ladies' open air meeting last Saturday night, which he conducted remarkably well; and he politely and earnestly invited and urged me to preach to his large congregation at night. This I would gladly have done, but for two reasons: The first was, my strength was not sufficient. The second was, I must have taken up a labor with my brother Collins, for whose eye I am writing this. For the man that "brothers" blacklegs and rowdies in a lodge cannot properly "brother" me in the church of Christ. Because the church worships Christ, while the prayer and creed of the lodge exclude him.

When Dr. Forrester, at the laying of the corner-stone of the Chicago Custom-House, prayed to God through Christ, he was a hypocrite, and deceived the people. For he knew that a multitude of Chicago Jews belong to the lodge, as members in full; and those Jews hate Christ and will not worship him. Masonry ignores Christ.

Now I was told that this brother Collins, Methodist preacher in charge at Moline, is not only a Freemason, but a member of several other lodges. If he is not, his brethren in the ministry are mistaken. If he is, I beg him to consider, prayerfully, the following:

1. Is it right and fair, as between you and your brother ministers, for you to take secret advantages of them by joining lodges which they cannot conscientiously join. Is it not what is called "running with the hare and barking with the hound?"

2. Do you not destroy and profane God's meaning of the word "brother" by giving it to the members of a secret lodge which excludes Christ from its creed?

3. When a young man sets his face towards success by taking secret advantages of his fellow men, does he not "go beyond and defraud" them, and so disobey the injunction of Christ by Paul?

4. If you know the nature of the lodge, do you not know that it is idolatrous?

I write this for the benefit of the ladies of Sterling, who appeared to me to be clear-minded and capable women, as well as for the earnest and Christian women of Moline. I am sure they will yet "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." May God reward their candor and kindness. Yours in Christ,

J. B.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO WHEATON COLLEGE—DESPERATION OF OF THE LODGE—THE "NATIONAL HOLINESS" MEETINGS AND THE M. E. CHURCH.

MALDEN, Ill., July 24, 1874.

I have found, besides smaller subscriptions, eighteen persons, within about a fortnight, who have subscribed or paid $25 each to liquidate the debt of Wheaton College, all of whom have given because they are opposed to secret "orders"; and in several instances parents are purposing to send their children to be with us at the opening, September 10th. I am encouraged by this, but far more by the cheerfulness and, in some instances, by the eagerness with which they do it. The lodge, on the contrary, is GROWING DESPERATE.

Instead of the jolly greeting which used to meet me in every village, the lodge-leaders look wild, and concerned, like the shrine-makers whose craft is in danger. And their violent and desperate efforts to proselyte are like the reckless throws of ruined gamblers. An old Knox College student, who is a thriving and rising man, told me he had almost concluded to go behind their curtain, just to see what there was there to keep such a multitude, many of whom are good men and patriots. I told him I could send him the whole thing for 20 cts., revealed and resting on just such evidence as hangs men. He instantly pulled out the money, and said: "That information is what I want; send it." He subscribed $25 to our College buildings.

I went from him to a neighbor of his, who stopped in the harvest-field to subscribe. He said: Since I came out of the army with my leg drawn up, they have been urging me to go in, and assured me I should "stand a good show for a county office if I would join the lodge." The same bait is thrown out to one hundred others, perhaps, though there are not above half a dozen offices; and they belong to the people, one would think, not to the lodge. I found that the Masons had lied to this friend and told him that his neighbor from whom I had just come had joined the lodge. This they doubtless told him to get him to send in his application, when the lie would have done its work and he would have repented too late. This I call "growing desperate." Such infamy cannot last long.

Yesterday, at Galva, waiting for the cars, I conversed with Rev. Mr. Brown, Methodist Episcopal preacher at Victoria, Ill. He told me he was a Knight Templar, had gone up to that (12th) degree to please his brother-in-law, Col. D. D. Irons, of Peoria, now dead. But he was sick of it; and he assured me many others were, and had forsaken it. He was at the national camp-meeting at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, last year, where two ministers renounced "the hidden things of dishonesty," by name, saying: "I mean Masonry and Odd-fellowship!" and the camp rang with the loud "Amen!" "Amen!" from all sides. This "holiness" will do, if it separates from the world and its dark religions. I believe this brother is a sincere man and minister, and that when enlightened on the true nature of the hateful sorceries through which he was dragged, he will loathe as well as forsake the lodge.

While we sat conversing a brother Methodist Episcopal preacher came up to us, who is stationed at Burlington, Iowa. He joined in the conversation; said he had been in early life fooled into almost every secret society but the Freemasons; had become disgusted with and forsaken the whole, and was rejoiced that he had escaped the Masonic lodge.

Both these brethren lamented the growing weakness of spirituality in a portion, and rejoiced in the increased spirituality and desire after holiness of another portion of their church. I was rejoiced and comforted by the interview. They both agreed that the "Inskip National Holiness" movement was hostile to the secret orders. They will be mistaken in the hope that the lodge will let go its hold of their church without first rending it. But it is a comfort to find good men. Yours ever in Christ,

J. B.

HINTING AT REFORM.

"MASONRY VS. THE CHURCH.—This is brief, but to the point:

A home missionary in the deep interior, making his quarterly report, states that in their thriving town the Masonic members outnumber the male church members five to one; that many openly claim that Masonry is better than religion; that those who do not go so far are not prepared to go to meeting on the Sabbath after having spent a large part of Saturday night in the lodge-room; and that one who was himself a Mason of high degree, had stood up in the last prayer-meeting, and, referring to his experience, had said that he had sought to benefit himself by association with good men in different societies, some of them secret, and last of all he had become a Christian and joined the church, and found this society the best of all, embracing all the good of the others and a great deal more. This now was sufficient for him, and he wished that he had embraced it first, and it only."

J. E. R.

The above from Dr. Roy in the Advance (July 16,) is very suggestive. The following for instance:

1. Is it not plain on the above showing, that the lodge is, in the words of John D. Caldwell, "Grand Secretary" of "Select Masters" in Ohio, "DISINTEGRATING THE CHURCH."

2. The brother who "wished he had embraced it first, and it only," might have added: 'But my pastor, my religious paper, even home missionaries, said nothing on the subject, while I paid them both to warn me against whatever was hostile to Christianity. My friends who joined the lodge had their lips oath-sealed, as mine now are, and were silent. And I shall be persecuted and proscribed for this present cautious and feeble utterance.

I saw my rivals in business prospering and was advised to join the lodge. I joined; as many Congregational clergymen had done, including the Secretary of the "National Congregational Council," who was a Freemason chaplain; known to be such, when voted for by good men to that all-controlling office in and over our denomination! Yes; I joined. I paid fifty dollars for being hazed through the degrading first three degrees; which, as I swore away my manhood, I dare not now reveal, even to save my son who is now being drawn into the lodge as I was! And, as no effectual means is being taken, or likely to be taken to save our children, girls as well as boys, from being sucked into the secret whirlpools of recruiting orders, I see nothing but ruin to our churches and destruction to the country ahead.'

THE REMEDY.

Let us now, dear brethren, look this anti-Christ firmly in the face, as Christians and as MEN. Let us request our theological seminaries to give us their learning on the subject as Andover once did when the lodge went down. Let us meet it with means of enlightenment commensurate with its terrible importance. Let Gen. Howard and Rev. Mr. Chamberlain, committee for the purpose of procuring an essay, secure a full, frank and fearless discussion on the subject before their next State Association, and let the young men who are being swindled and sworn into the lodges know what they are, and shun them as caves of death.

"For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverence" arise to God's people from some other place; "but thou and thy father's house shall be destroyed: and who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" Esther iv. 14.

PROOF AT LAST.

It has long been conjectured that, in spite of its opposition, the Romish church was at headquarters closely related to Freemasonry. The grounds for this conjecture have never amounted to positive proof until now. A lodge journal, The Voice of Masonry, publishes the following action of an Italian Grand Lodge:

At the semi-annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of Masons, Scottish Rite of the Orient of Palermo, Italy, on the 27th of March last, Pope Pius IX. was expelled from the order. The decree of expulsion was published in the official Masonic paper at Cologne, Germany, and is preceded by the minutes of the lodge in which he was initiated, and is as follows:

"A man named Mastai Ferretti, who received the baptism of Freemasonry, and solemnly pledged his love and fellowship, and who afterwards was crowned pope and king, under the title of Pope Nino, has now cursed his former brethren and excommunicated all members of the order of Freemasons. Therefore, said Mastai Ferretti is herewith, by a decree of the Grand Lodge of the Orient, Palermo, expelled from the order for perjury."

The charges against him were first preferred in his lodge at Palermo, in 1865, and notification and copy thereof sent to him, with a request to attend the lodge for the purpose of answering the same. To this he made no reply, and, for divers reasons, the charges were not pressed until he urged the bishops of Brazil so aggressively towards the Freemasons. Then they were pressed, and, after a regular trial, a decree of expulsion was entered and published, the same being signed by Victor Emmanuel, king of Italy, and Grand Master of the Orient of Italy.

The Pope evidently believes in but one secret society, and that is the papal church; but he will not lack for information of them all, even the grange. There is no doubt the prohibition of the grange by the Catholic bishops of Wisconsin and California is understood and endorsed at Rome. A few years since Pius IX. signed a letter excommunicating Victor Emmanuel; the latter now has his petty revenge. If both these systems were not filled with falsehood, the lodge from its very base, these acts of excision might be of some importance; but it is pitiful to see personages of the world's regard bandying about these mock-solemnities with the gravity of fate. There is nothing like the simulation of a false religion to destroy all perception of the true. It bewilders men into hell.

Notes.

—Dr. Curry, editor of the Christian Advocate, New York, lately had an interview with Parson Brownlow, of Tennessee, and thus reports his opinion of the grange.

"At Knoxville I called upon and had an hour's interview with the heroic ex-Methodist preacher, ex-Editor of the famous Knoxville Whig, ex-Governor of Tennessee, and now U. S. Senator, 'Parson Brownlow,' whose failing health has compelled him to come home for recuperation. I asked him of the political feeling in East Tennessee. 'Some rebels left here, but they are down, never to rise,' was his answer. I then spoke of the indications of feeling I had noted farther South. 'Overpowered but not subdued; rebels at heart now as much as ever,' was the reply. 'How about the grange movement?' 'A political machine—Democracy in disguise—organizing powerfully for resuscitation and victory at every cost of principle.' 'How is the movement regarded at Washington?' 'Understood perfectly; watched closely, but quietly.'"

—The Masons are everywhere this year manufacturing the bread of popularity from the corner-stones of public buildings. Our Indianapolis correspondent tells of one elsewhere; the same kind of performance was made at the new court-house of Richland county, this State, July 4th; and a friend has sent a flaming poster announcing a Masonic ceremony over the corner-stone of a Methodist Protestant church in Roxbury, Pa., July 15th. Masons, Odd-fellows and Red men are invited by the committee of arrangements, but simple Christians are left out.

—A California correspondent of the Free Methodist says the Governor of that State, and Senator elect of the Anti-monopoly party, Newton Booth, is one of the largest liquor dealers in the State. He was lately visited by a delegation of ladies to secure his influence for temperance, but he declined, saying he could not work against his own interest. This is the man over whom so great trumpeting was made last fall as the man of the people, who had rescued the State from the grasp of rings, and is now prominently talked of for the next Presidency. May God save the nation from such Presidents!

—G. W. Needles, editor of the American Freeman, of Albany, Mo., and well known as among the leaders of the reform in that State, is engaged in a controversy with some of the editors of his locality, and plainly not to their advantage, except by fixing in their memories some wholesome truth. They spread the dictionary of vituperation over their pages at the remarks made by Mr. Needles in the Syracuse Convention on the frequency of murders in northwestern Missouri, the escape of criminals through Masonic connivance, and the prostitution of women by the grange, of which he has information from parties who should be reliable. (The mention of this authority was inadvertantly omitted from the first report in our columns.) The last item is especially grievous to the defenders of female virtue in the lodge. These parties affect not to know that, after filling the pockets of the leaders, the grange has in reality no object but to popularize Masonry, which in principle upholds prostitution. And he is ignorant or unscrupulous who can say that the ritual of the grange, its grips signs, and secrecy have not a direct tendency to break down the modesty and virtue of the female character.

—The Jewish Chronicle, an English paper, mourns the decline of Judaism and especially the negligence manifested in the instruction of Hebrew youth in the language and forms of that effete system. The better culture and broader and more rational views of the religion of Jesus is supplanting its first and most bitter antagonist. An American Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews is located in New York city, Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, President. This society is striving, through the efforts of missionaries and by distributing tracts in German, Hebrew and English, Bibles, Testaments and other reading matter, to bring the Gospel of Jesus Christ to the remnant of the ancient and chosen people. In New York alone there are 60,000 Jews who have ten more synagogues than even in London. Pecuniary aid for this work may be sent to the treasurer, Wm. H. Jackson, Box 1729, New York city.

—Another disbanded grange is reported by the Peoria Transcript—the Good Hope Grange, Good Hope, McDonough Co., Ill. The reason given for the action are the expensiveness of the order, and the fact that there is a disposition among the higher officers in this State to make their organization a political party, contrary to its original spirit and design. Concerning the first named cause, the members say that their grange has only been in existence about one year,, and that during that time it has collected as dues from members $522,66 and has paid out $454.-31, besides having about $250 dues as fees from delinquent members. The grange decided to divide the amount in its treasury among the Sunday schools of Good Hope township.

—Gov. Hartranft of Pennsylvania, is reported in a stage of seige by the lodge, which wants him to pardon the criminal in the Udderzook murder case, the law having failed to set him free. A Norristown paper says it is all to make good the saying, that "no Freemason ever gets hanged."

The German Evangelical Lutheran Synod, of the West, comprising four districts, with over five hundred ministers, all opposed to secret societies and their Theological Seminary, numbering over two hundred students, soon to enter the ministry, is a force for God and his truth not to be overlooked. The General Conference, composed of 860 ministers, publishing five papers, also takes a decided stand against the secret orders. The Cynosure's opposition to these is warmly noticed and approved in the German church paper, the Lutheraner. Says one of their strong men: "All true Lutherans who stand to the Bible and their confession, are with heart against secret societies." Let us thank God and take courage. "They that be for us are more than they that be against us." M. A. B.

CONVENTION WORK.

Two State and other county conventions are soon to be held. In all these it should be a great work to arrange for the wider circulation of Anti-masonic literature. Books, papers, and tracts are often as convincing as the living speaker and can be taken anywhere.

HARVEST HELP.

The publishers want to engage ten thousand harvest workers, not to gather sheaves of grain, but subscriptions for the Cynosure. There is a great deal of circulating around among neighbors at this time of the year although the busiest. Farmers exchange work and hire extra help. In many ways opportunity occurs to present this reform and enlist honest men for the truth. It is not by great occasions that this battle is to be won, but by continual and repeated use of little opportunities, pressing home on individuals the facts of this reform and circulating the paper. Don't miss one of them.

—A great falling off in railroad building in this country appears in the figures presented in the annual report of the Iron and Steel Association. The number of miles of new track laid in 1873 was 3000—a decrease of fifty per cent. in one year. In 1870, when the highest point was reached, 7,779 miles were laid.

The Home Circle.

Home Missionary Hymn.

Hark! the sound of angel voices,
Over Bethlehem's star-lit plain;
Hark! the heavenly host rejoices,
Jesus comes on earth to reign.
See celestial radiance beaming,
Lighting up the midnight sky;
'Tis the promised day-star gleaming,
'Tis the day-spring from on high.

Westward, all along the ages,
Trace its pathway, clear and bright;
Star of hope to Eastern sages,
Radiant now with gospel light.
Angels from the realms of glory,
Peace on earth delight to sing;
Christian, tell the wondrous story,
Go, proclaim the Saviour King.

Where the woodman's ax is ringing,
Where the hunter roams alone,
Where the prairie flowers are springing,
Make the great Redeemer known.
While, from California's mountains,
Pure and sweet the anthem swells,
Oregon's dark wilds and fountains
Hail the sound of Sabbath-bells.

Like an armed host with banners,
Terrible in war array,
Zion comes with glad hosannas,
To prepare her monarch's way.
Unto him all power is given,
All the world his sway shall own,
And on earth, as now in heaven,
Shall his will be done alone.

The Furnace.

Somewhere on his path, be you sure, the man who will live godly in this world shall find a furnace heated for him. There will be times with every conscientious soul when fidelity to the right must pay a price. Such a crisis will face a young man's honesty in a business career, and if he fail to keep his honesty he must forfeit the favor on which he is dependent, or his reverence for the divine name will be outraged, and if he will protect his filial sensibilities he must walk the gauntlet of mocking lips and pointed fingers of scorn. Or his regard for the sanctity of the Sabbath will be tested, and if he will do homage to the old, unrepealed statute, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," he must give up for his conscience his daily trade. He walks with young companions not in sympathy with his notions of purity, consistency, and good morals; if he will be true to these convictions he must forego the friendships of years. He is the only witness for God in a godless home; if he would screen the light and use the common wordly dialect in that circle, all would be peaceful and pleasant; but if he will obtrude his fealty to his Master, and make his devotion a working force in that sphere, contravening the currents of wordliness, he shall speedily and continuously find himself in rough waters. He is associated with his fellow-men for the prosecution of various interests pertaining to this life; if he will oppose unscrupulous measures and uncandid demonstrations, he must submit to social ostracism. He stands in the society of his peers on festive occasions; if he will breathe out around him the element which is the continual atmosphere of his spirit, gathered upon him in the closet and in hours of converse with heavenly themes, he must become conscious of the constraint his presence carries about, and the "attraction of repulsion" which flows from his person.

How endlessly may these situations in life be multiplied, and how surely in some of these manifold ways as a pious parent, or partner, or child,—as a pious friend, companion, and yokefellow,—as a pious man of business and man of society, will the furnace be encountered, its flaming mouth opening right in the path of sincerity, trueheartedness and Christian fidelity.

But don't fear the furnace! Though it be heated seven times hotter than it is wont, don't be afraid of it! It will not burn you,—no, not a hair of your head. It may purge away your dross, but you, yourself, your true life, your real treasures, it cannot consume. Let them bind you and cast you in; the flames have lost their power, and that which you dreaded will produce no smart. All those penalties for Christian faithfulness, loss of favor, and of patrons, and of income; the mocking and ridicule; banishment from place, from friendship, from good fellowship, and social popularity, will seem to you trifles light as air, compared with that great burden of conscious falsehood which would have crushed you to the earth. And in your destitution and solitude a shining one will come to you. You are really plunged into the furnace,—you are alone, unbefriended and unprovided; and before you have learned the meaning of words, you are no longer alone, unbefriended or uneared for. Christ is with you,— his friendship, never in longest life so palpable, so sweet, so assuring; his promised interventions and providential bestowments never so signal and rich.—Rev. A. L. Stone.

"Revealed to Babes."

There now resides in Paris, associated with Pastor Fisch in his church labors, a minister widely known as a university professor in that city, a celebrated journalist, and author of a volminous history of Spain. He is ever found unweariedly among the poor, the sick and the dying, teaching that faith which he once sought to destroy. His history, written on the basis of an infidel in the four volumes published previous to his conversion, was completed from the standpoint of a Christian. His case not merely proves the insufficiency of the human intellect to find out God, but that he often selects the humble taught by the Spirit to teach the proud taught by science.

This man, some years ago, went to Pastor Fisch with his skeptical objections. The good pastor, to prove to him that, under the illuminations of the Holy Ghost, the illiterate often understood the Bible better than the scientists, referred him to a cobbler in Lyons for conversation on religion. The professor of history in the first university of Europe is found for one forenoon in the poor cobbler's stall conversing with his humble instructor on Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews. He listened with astonishment, and he came away with new ideas on the mysteries of redemption. He told Pastor Fisch, with an emotion he could not conceal, that he had a lesson on theology that day such as he had never had before. The Romanism and skepticism of his intellect lay prostrate before the faith of the cobbler. From that hour a new light broke in upon him, and he went forth to extend the discomfiture of error through the streets and squares of the godless city.—Am. Messenger.

Etiquette Toward the Poor.

A circle of richly-dressed young people were gathered about a stove in a ferry-house awaiting rather impatiently a delayed boat. A shabbily-dressed old man, who was standing back in the cold, volunteered some civil remark in a pleasant tone, but his only reply was a cold stare and an occasional sneer at his rags from one or another of the group. Oh, how those glances pierced through the worn coat, to the very depths of the old man's heart. More cutting than the fiercest blast of the north wind are the shafts of ridicule. The old man quickly drew back with a hopeless, dejected air, shutting back the mystery in his own bosom which the thoughtless, unfeeling conduct had occasioned.

A youth, sitting apart from the rest, had read with a glance of his honest eyes the whole story. He saw the pain which was traced on the furrowed brow and an answering throb was awakened in his own bosom. Drawing nearer, he gave him a suitable remark and drew him into a little further conversation.

It was delightful to see the quick and glad surprise which lighted the old man's eye at this attention. The unkindness of the moment before was forgotten, so were his age and infirmities, and he seemed to feel that he was not so wholly shut of from the sympathies of the world as he had just now seemed.

In all our books of behavior for young people how few directions they ever get about proper etiquette in their conduct toward the poor. All seems to refer to their intercourse with equals or superiors in rank or station.

Not so did our divine Master walk among men. He laid down a very different class of directions from these which the world gives, when he gave rules about making feasts.

He who haughtily sends his charity by the hand of another, and disdains to speak to him on whom he bestows it, will not reap the reward of him whose "prayers and alms came up for a memorial before God."

Let us teach our children, from infancy, respectful behavior toward the poor and the aged, and the lessons will stay by them when they have gone out from under our roof.—Arthur's Home Magazine.

What Harm?

It is often asked, what harm is it for a lady to wear a modest flower? The manner in which the question is put, implies that it is unanswerable. To oppose the practice now become general among professing Christians, is denounced as narrow-mindedness and bigotry. A secular paper furnishes us with one answer. It states that fifteen millions of dollars are expended in this country annually for artificial flowers. Is there no harm in spending this enormous sum every year, for that which can possibly answer no other purpose except to minister to vanity and pride?

What should a denomination, professing the self-denying religion of Jesus, think of their piety, when the men spend more money for tobacco, and the women for artificial flowers, than they can raise by every possible effort, for the conversion of the heathen? Is this a mark of spiritual life? "Where shall the line be drawn?" Where the Bible draws it. There can be no mistake. Pass over this line, and who shall say where to stop? "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel: but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible; even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." 1 Pet. iii. 3, 4.—Living Epistle.

Instrumental Music in Church.

Dr. Adam Clarke, in his comment on Amos, vi. 5, says: "I believe that David was not authorized by the Lord to introduce that multitude of musical instruments into the divine worship of which we read; and I am satisfied that his conduct in this respect is most solemnly reprehended by this prophet; and I rather believe that the use of such instruments of music, in the Christian church, is without the sanction and against the will of God; that they are subversive of the spirit of true devotion, and that they are sinful. If there was a woe to them who invented instruments of music, as did David under the law, is there no woe, no curse to them who invent them and introduce them into the worship of God in the Christian church? I am an old man, and an old minister; and I here declare that I never knew them productive of any good in the worship of God; and have had reason to believe they were productive of much evil. Music, as a science, I esteem and admire; but instruments of music in the house of God I abominate and abhor. This is abuse of music, and here I register my protest against all such corruptions in the worship of the Author of Christianity. The late venerable and most eminent divine, the Rev. John Wesley, who was a lover of music and an elegant poet, when asked his opinion of instruments of music being introduced into the chapels of the Methodists, said, in his terse and powerful manner, "I have no objection to instruments of music in our chapels, provided they are neither heard nor seen." I say the same, though I think the expense of purchase had better be spared."

CHARACTER IS CAPITAL.—What you can effect, depends on what you are. You put your whole self into all that you do. If that self be small, and lean, and mean, your entire life-work is paltry, your words have no force, your influence has no weight. If that self be true and high, pure and kind, vigorous and forceful, your strokes are blows, your notes staccatos, your work massive, your influence cogent,—you can do what you will. Whatever your position you are a power, you are felt as a kingly spirit, you are as one having authority. Too many think of character chiefly in its relation to the life beyond the grave. I certainly would not have less thought of it with reference to that unknown future, on the margin of which some of us undoubtedly are at this moment standing; but I do wish that more consideration were bestowed upon its earthly uses. I would have young men, as they start in life, regard character as capital, much surer to yield full returns than any other capital, unaffected by panics and failures, fruitful when all other investments lie dormant, having as certain promise in the present life as in that which is to come.—A. P. Peabody.

The fact is, work is the best thing we have got, and the more we can do, the better it is for us; not in a money point of view alone, but from a moral and intellectual point of view. Work is not a hardship; it is the want of it that is the hardship.

How good work is to us! how many good things it brings us! It lightens our griefs, soothes our disappointments, and brightens the darkest day as nothing else can. It gives us home, friends, good things to eat, clothes to wear, pleasant objects for the eyes to rest upon. It makes us able to gratify the wishes of those nearest and dearest to us, and it constantly makes the world better to look at,—better to live in.

Let us magnify work, then; love and honor work, not whine over it and complain of it. Let us sing its praises, rejoice over it and show our real appreciation of all it is and all it does for us, by doing our share of it well, by putting the best that is in us into our work, and leaving it as a memorial of which we shall not be ashamed.—Hearth and Home.

The Religion of the Laplanders.

The church was full of Lapps, and although I saw here and there as fine a young fellow as I would wish to meet, the major part of them were little, brown, weather-beaten figures, standing about five feet nothing, all clad in real Lapp costume. Has it ever been the reader's luck to attend a benefit at a low fighting-house in London, and to take a note of the countenances of the smaller class of fighting men who form the principle actors in the scene? If so, he can form a very good idea of the general character of Lappy physiognomy. One and all seem to have been cast in the same pugilistic mould,—bullet heads, high cheek-bones, low foreheads, bright, sunken eyes, and flattened noses. In fact, if they had only been cropped close, and dressed in tight trousers and Newmarket coats, I would have challenged all London to pick out a bunch of more thorough-paced little blackguards than I could have collected from this congregation. The women were ranged in pews on one side, the men on the other (and this is the fashion in all Sweedish churches), and, except that the former kept their high-peaked sugar-loaf caps on during the service, you could see little difference between the two. None of these ladies could boast of much personal attraction, their countenances being exactly like those of the men, and quite as brown and knotty. But there was one face which peeped down from the gallery, from which I could hardly take my eyes, and which even haunts me to this day. It was that of a little flaxen haired Lapp girl, about seven years old; and a sweeter or more cherub-looking face I never set my eyes on; and the little blue-peaked cap, braided with silver, perched jauntily on her head, gave a lively kind of expression to perhaps the sweetest face I ever saw in my life. I never yet saw a child so beautiful as this wild Lapp, and a painter might have made his fortune if he could only transferred the expression of that countenance to his canvass. Certainly there can be no truth in breeding if such a little angel came from the rough stock that filled the body of this church. The service passed off quietly enough; the communion began and a curious sight it was to see these little vagabonds run along the tops of the pews, like so many rats on a plank, in hot haste to reach the altar; and now commenced a scene such as I never witnessed in the house of God, and trust I shall never witness again. It seems that within the last few years a kind of fanaticism has crept in among these Lapps, and the word of God instead of "pouring oil upon a bruised spirit," as every one is taught to believe who will read the Scriptures aright, only fills them with imaginary terrors; and, far different from the creed of the real Christian, they seem to think the best atonement they can make for their sins lies in outward show. I have seen a little of this kind of humbug in other churches in Sweeden, where at certain parts of the service the women all commence groaning and sobbing so loud that you can scarcely hear the clergyman. This, however, soon passes off, and is scarcely worth notice. These Lapps, however, must have been far more susceptable, or far more wicked, for all at once, when the communion service began, two or three women sprang up in different parts of the church, and commenced frantically jumping, howling, shrieking, and clapping their hands. I observed one middle-aged female particularly energetic, and who sank down in a kind of fit after about five minutes, two-thirds of the congregation "joined in the cry," and all order was at an end. Five or six would cluster around one individual, hugging, kissing, weeping, and shrieking, till I really thought some would be smothered. One old patriarch in particular, who sat close behind me, seemed an object of particular veneration, and the Lapps crowded from all parts of the church to hug him. How he stood it I cannot imagine; but he sat meekly enough and at one time I counted no less than seven "miserable sinners" hanging about the old man, all shrieking and weeping. The religious orgies of the wild aborigines in Australia round their camp fire are not half so frightful as this scene, for they at least do not desecrate a place of worship with their mad carousals.—Shilling Magazine.

Children's Corner.

Father Snip; or, Coals of Fire, and how they Burned.

Even if we were to tell you whereabouts in England the village of Locksken was situated, you might still fail to find it on the map; so we will say nothing about it, except that it was a good-sized place, not quite so straggling and old-fashioned as many English villages, and with a few neat little shops, as well as a street or two of cottages.

In one of these cottages there lived a laborer and his wife, and their only child, a boy of nine or ten years of age.

Tommy Ruffhed was, we are sorry to say, a most troublesome fellow. His saucy face, with his apple-cheeks and twinkling eyes, was known—not alone in his own village, but for several miles around—as the face of the most tiresome, naughty boy in the country.

Even the dumb animals knew Tommy, and this not at all in a flattering way. Widow Brown's cow, that grazed so quietly on the green, and never looked up when other folks went by, became quite angry and active when Tommy appeared; and she frightened him on one occasion terribly by galloping after him half-way down the street.

The cocks and hens ranaway as quickly as they could as soon as they saw Tom. The ducks took to the water, the dogs ran to their kennels and growled until he was out of sight; and even the geese stretched out their long necks and hissed as he went by. So, from all this, we may see that Tom was not a favorite in the village; but that, in fact, he was reckoned the greatest tease and torment of the whole place.

Now, not far from Mr. Ruffhed's cottage, stood a small shop kept by a barber, a good old man, who commonly went by the name of "Father Snip," and who did a pretty fair business upon the thriving heads and beards of the villagers and farmers.

The barber had a neat little garden at the back of his house, and a fine apple-tree that grew there had long been a great attraction to Tom. Autumn drew on apace, and the fruit with which the tree was laden began to turn rosy, and to glisten in the red sunset whenever Tom came out of school and glanced up with longing eyes. The temptation grew stronger every day, as all temptations do when they are not resisted, and soon the boy felt that he could not rest until he had secured some of the apples.

One day, when he was quite sure that the barber was busy with a customer, he went to the back, climbed over the low fence into the garden, and, in a moment more, was under the apple-tree and filling his pockets with the fruits. His pockets held a good many, and he was so busy stuffing them in a little bag he had brought with him, he did not notice that he dropped his handkerchief, a smart printed one, and marked with his full name across one corner. When Tom had picked as many as he could carry, he saw that he had nearly stripped the lower branches. "The barber will never find out who took them," said the boy to himself, as he got over the little fence and started off towards home. But Tom had forgotten how many secret things are brought to light through the overruling power of God, and how many faults are suffered to lead to their own detection.

"Tom, my boy," said Mrs. Ruffhed, one morning a week or two after Tom's visit to the apple-tree, "your hair is growing very long and untidy, and you had better step in at the barber's on your way home from school, and have it cut." Tom, of course, made some objections; but his mother insisted, and so there was nothing for it but to put a bold face on the matter and do as he was told.

He had not courage, however, to go alone, but after school asked a small boy, a friend of his, to go with him. "I needn't be so afraid," said Tom to himself, as the two boys entered the shop together; "no one saw me take the apples."

Father Snip's manner was just as usual; he was as pleasant and chatty as ever; and Tom breathed more freely, as the old man clipped the untidy ends of hair, and talked so kindly to him.

"Just one moment," said the barber, as Tom, with his neatly cropped head was making for the door after paying his two-pence; "I have something for you." And, opening a cupboard, he took out a little basket and put it into Tom's hands, saying gently: "I have lately come to know that you are fond of apples; please take these home and enjoy them."

Tom stared a minute; but he managed to say "thank you," and then ran out of the shop and home as fast as possible.

He carried the basket up to his room, emptied the apples upon the bed, and with them out fell his handkerchief, of which he had never once thought since the day that he had taken it out.

A good thrashing would have hurt Tom's feelings far less than this kind action. As it was, he was quite overcome, and, sitting down on the side of his bed, he fairly cried with shame and self-reproach.

"There's only one thing I can do," cried he, at length, starting up and drying his eyes; "I must go and tell him what a kind man he is, and how sorry I am!'

Tom did not wait for second thoughts, but seizing his cap ran down stairs and out at the door, and in a few moments he stood on the threshold of the shop. The old man was alone, and, looking up as the boy entered, he saw the flushed, wet cheeks and eager eyes, took in the whole story of repentance and softened feeling which tongue could not express, held out both hands to him.

During the quarter of an hour which followed, the barber talked to Tom as the boy had never been spoken to before.

We cannot repeat what passed; but it may be well to state that Tom never forgot the lesson of the apples, and that a change began in his character and conduct which, after a while, made every one love instead of dislike him.—Christian Weekly.

PLATFORM OF 1872, REVISED.

The following revision of the Platform of 1872 was reported to the Executive Committee by a sub-committee appointed for the purpose and published July 17th, 1873.

PREAMBLE.

Viewing with deep concern the corrupt and unsettled condition of American politics, and witnessing with alarm the fearful prevalence of caste and clannishness by which our citizens are being arrayed in hostile bands, working secretly to compass political ends, a method directly and powerfully tending to increase corruption, to destroy mutal confidence and hasten disruption and bloodshed; and having no hope of adequate remedy for these evils from existing parties, and believing the foundation of a new party based upon the fundamental principles of the Declaration of American Independence, both inevitable and indispensable ;

We, therefore, a portion of the American people, believing with our fathers that we have our rights and liberties, not from men or parties, but from God ; believing in the Christian marriage, and not in Mormonism ; believing in the religious democracy of the New Testament, and not in the despotism of Jesuitism, of priestcraft, or of the lodge ; believing, also, with our Scotch and English ancestors that civil government though ordained of God is "founded in nature, not in grace," and therefore that all have equal civil rights, while we abhor the idea of enforcing religion, or controlling conscience by human laws and penalties, as calculated to make hypocrites, not Christians, and savoring of the days of priestism, the fagot, and the stake, we, at the same time, as firmly believe that atheism and priestcraft are twins, and both alike foes to human liberty and welfare.

We further most firmly believe that a government without God has none but lynch power, and is destitute of all legitimate authority to maintain civil order, to swear a witness, to try a criminal, to hang a murderer, to imprison a thief ; and, while we consider government without God as mere usurpation, we regard all religions and worships invented by men, and so having no higher than human origin, as mere swindling impositions and cheats.

We, therefore, solemnly adopt and present the following, as containing a brief synopsis of the principles of our government, by which we intend to be governed in casting our votes :

PLATFORM.

We hold : 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen government, and that this fact should be recognized in its organic law.

2. That God requires, and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. That charters of Masonic lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures must be withdrawn and their oaths suppressed.

5. That all secret lodges, orders or clans, affecting independence of our Government and practically claim that their principles and rules are more sacred and binding that the laws of the land, are treasonable, dangerous and destructive of our liberties, legislatures and courts.

6. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

7. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

8. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make them mere adepts and experts ; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

9. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced ; and that, sympathizing with the industrial masses in their effort to escape the extortion of secret rings, we regret to see them controlled and led, through the intrigues of designing men, in the lodge and grange, by the very power against which they struggle.

10. The maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. That reciprocal free-trade is the true basis of commercial interchange among nations, and that a gradual approach towards free competition in all the marts of trade, is the true policy on the tariff question.

12. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice-president of the United States.

—William and Mary College, Virginia, is next to Harvard, the oldest college in the United States. It has given the country four signers of the Declaration of Independence, two Presidents of the United States, one Vice-President, one acting President, Cabinet officers, Senators, Judges, officers of the army, including Gen. Scott, and of the navy. In its national character and services it has exceeded all literary institutions.

—During the reheating of the furnaces of an iron establishment in England, says the British Journal of Science, the men worked when the thermometer, placed so as not to be influenced by the radiation of heat from the open doors, marked 120 degrees. In the Bessemer pits, the men continue a kind of labor requiring great muscular effort at 140 degrees. In some of the operations of glass-making, the ordinary summer working temperature is considerably over 100, and the radiant heat to which the workmen are subjected far exceeds 212 degrees. In the Turkish bath, the shampooers continue four or five hours at a time in a moist atmosphere at temperatures ranging from 105 to 110 degrees. In enamel works, men labor daily in a heat of over 300 degrees. On the Red Sea steamers, the temperature of the stoke hole is 145 degrees. And yet in none of these cases does any special form or type of disease develope itself.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Cincinnati Gazette says there are now five Episcopal churches in New York which use the confessional and teach penance as one of the sacraments.

—The Second Baptist Church, of Chicago, has about 1,340 members, 240 of whom were added the past year.

—Rev. Joseph Travis, superintendent of the Illinois Free Methodist Conference, assisted at the dedication of a Free Methodist church in Ridgeway, Mich., on Sunday.

—Twenty-two different missionary societies are laboring for the redemption of China. They have established more than 300 mission staitons and outstations, and the number of church members is variously estimated at from 6,000 to 10,000.

—The American Wesleyan has interesting reports of camp-meetings at Iona, Iowa, and in Vernon Co., Wis., which were attended by manifestations of God's presence in the conversion of many souls and confirming the faith of the churches. The anti-secret principles of the church were vindicated.

—The following notice in a religious journal is indicative. Such things are less strange every day, and the churches will ere long learn that they are of the right kind: "PASTORS DESIRED.—By the First Baptist church, Stillwater, N. Y. No friend to secret societies need apply."

—Ex-President Finney's health is somewhat restored and he is delivering a course of lectures on revivals in the Oberlin Seminary this summer. Although in the eighty-second year of his age, he seems no less vigorous in the lecture-room than formerly; and his discourse is listened to with interest.

—Rev. Mr. Bevan, a successor of Whitfield, in Tottenham Court Road Chapel, London, is now preaching in the Congregational Tabernacle, Brooklyn, to the united congregations of Dr. Scudder and Dr. Duryea. His preaching, says the N. Y. Witness, is of the spiritual order, so much needed to correct the glittering but popular generalities of the day that have misled many, and especially the young.

—Unitarian journals are rejoicing at the lately reported decision of the Bible Revision Committee for the rejection of part of 1 John v. The words as they are to be found in King James' version, are the latter part of the seventh verse, and the beginning of the eighth, thus: "in heaven, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth." This passage has the authority of the Latin Vulgate and was almost unquestioned until 1777, when Griesbach rejected it on the authority of the oldest and best Greek manuscripts. Almost all scholars since that time have not considered it genuine.

—A Methodist missionary writing to the New York Witness from New Mexico gives a gloomy view to the religious character of the masses of the people there and especially of the natives. He says: "We need a very great reform here in New Mexico; the people are very ignorant and superstitious, and a good deal like those in Mexico who murdered Rev. Mr. Stephens. Only God can change their nature and make them like lambs. The people along the beautiful valley of the Rio Grande are all Mexicans, true sons of Montezuma. They have not got rid of savage nature, but are Indians both in color and practice. The only difference I see is, that formerly they worshipped idols, now they worship Virgin Mary and the saints."

—The woman's temperance movement in Chicago is being carried on in a quiet but effective way. Certain streets are chosen and districted and the ladies, two by two, visit every saloon, even the lowest. A small sheet has been printed, both in English and German—upon one page is an appeal to licensed saloon-keepers, on the other a number of statistics concerning the liquor traffic. Sometimes they simply ask the proprietors to read the sheet carefully. If there is an opportunity they talk with them in a kind and quiet way. The effect of this work is sometimes remarkable. One of the ladies, a teacher of some celebrity, thus relates an instance: We had in our meeting, a few days ago, a saloon-keeper who has given up his business. He was visited by two Quaker ladies. After handing him the leaflet, one of them felt moved to say something to him, and asked him this question, "Friend, dost thou know what thou art doing?" He said, after they left, their words came to him with still greater meaning, and every one who came into the saloon brought up the question, "Dost thou know that thou art destroying souls?" He closed his saloon and went home early in the afternoon, and during the night was so troubled he could not sleep. The result was that he closed his saloon not to open it again, and says, by the help of God he will never again engage in this unholy traffic.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'FREEMASONRY DEVELOPED.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

FOURTH DEGREE CONTINUED.

If these truths were universally received and acted upon, the state of society would be changed, its sounds of discord would die away, its ancient wrongs would disappear, and its millenial glory arise. Brothers, we call this the Remembrance degree, because we wish it in the first place to remind you of those truths which we are taught to in other degrees, as well as to impress upon your understanding those duties which are enjoined by the spirit of universal love. Attend now to the voice of divine wisdom.

[PAST GRAND READS.]

Hear ye children, the instruction of a Father, and attend to know understanding; for I give you good doctrine, that ye may keep knowledge. Forsake ye not my law, for length of days and long life and peace shall they add unto you. Let not mercy and truth forsake you; bind them about your neck, write them on the tablets of your heart. So shall ye find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and man. Hear, for I will speak of excellent things, and the opening of my mouth shall be of right things. For my mouth shall speak truth, and wickedness is an abomination to my lips. All the words of my mouth are in righteousness. There is nothing froward or perverse in them. They are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to him that findeth knowledge. Wisdom is better than rubies, and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared with it. The fear of the Lord is to hate evil. Pride and arroganee, and the evil way, and the froward mouth do I hate. Counsel is mine, and sound wisdom. I am nnderstanding; I have strength. The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning or ever the earth was. When there was no depth I was brought forth, when there was no fountains abounding in water, before the mountains were settled, before the hills, was I brought forth. While as yet He had not made the earth nor the fields, nor the highest parts of the dust of the world. When He prepared the heavens I was there, when He set a compass on the face of the depth, when He strengthened the foundations of the deep, when he gave to the sea His decree that the waters should not pass His commandments, when he appointed the foundation of the earth, then I was by Him, as one brought up with Him, and I was daily His delight, rejoicing always before Him, rejoicing in the habitable parts of the earth, and my delight was with the sons of men. Now, therefore, hearken unto me, O, ye children, for blessed are they that keep my ways. Hear instruction and be wise, and refuse it not. Blessed is the man that heareth me, watching daily at my gates, watching at the posts of my doors, for whoso findeth me findeth life, and shall obtain favor of the Lord, but he that sinneth against me wrongeth his own soul. All them that hate me love death.

[ONE OF THE ASSISTANTS READS.]

All things whatsoever ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment, and the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you, that you may be the ehildren of your Father which is in Heaven, for He makes His sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth the rain on the just and unjust. For if you love them that love you, what reward have ye? do not even the publicans the same? And if ye salute your brother only, what do ye more than others? do not even the publicans so? Be ye therefore perfect as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect.

NOBLE GRAND'S CHARGE.

Such, my friends, are some of the instructions of divine wisdom which inculcate the great principles of love, in the spirit of which you will remember that you have certain duties to perform and discharge to yourself and to others. Be just, be temperate, be loving to yourself and connections. Be just to your neighbor, be just to all men, be considerate of your duty to the common weal, and strive according to your knowledge and ability to promote the general prosperity, remembering that in all labor there is profit, and that an idle soul is a cumbrance to the earth. Be temperate in the enjoyment of all good things with which Providence may favor you; be temperate in the exercise of all the passions of the body and mind; be temperate in the exercise of any right, prerogative or influence you may possess. Be temperate in forming your opinions, in expressing your thoughts and in attempting to gain your wishes. Be temperate in your appetites; wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whoso is deceived thereby is not wise. He that loveth pleasure shall be a poor man, and he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich. Be not among wine-bibbers, among riotous eaters of flesh, for the drunkard and glutton shall come to poverty, and drowsiness shall clothe a man in rags. Who hath woe, who hath sorrow, who hath contentions, who hath babbling, who hath wounds without a cause, who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine, they that seek mixed drinks. Better is a little with the fear of the Lord, than great treasure and trouble therewith. Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith. Be loving, relieving the wants of the distressed and of your brethren, and by cherishing this sentiment of affection for all in every relation that it indicates, and the whole circle of duties which it enjoins. For this is that charity of which it is said: Charity suffereth long and is kind. Charity vaunteth not itself and is not puffed up, does not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things, and charity never faileth.

PASS WORD.—Re-cord.

GRIP.—Thumb lock, by putting inside of thumbs together and bringing fingers in form of a grapple.

Remembrance Degree.

SIGN.—Close hands except fore finger, bring that up in front and place the ball of the finger on the organ of remembrance, between the eyes.

Noble Grand to Candidate: Brother, having now been instructed in the Remembrance degree, the emblematic color of which is green, I pronounce you, in the name of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows, to be duly received as a member of said degree.

The Regalia of the Fourth or Remembrance Degree is a white collar trimmed with green ribbon or fringe. It may be ornamented with a rosette of white, pink, blue and green, usually worn in front at tha point of the collar.

FIFTH OR SCARLET DEGREE.

The candidate, clothed in a white robe, is brought from the ante room to the lodge room door, when the Conductor gives the signal,—five loud raps.

Guardian: Who comes there?

Conductor: A brother who begs to receive the honor of being initiated into the Scarlet degree.

Guardian:—Has he proved himself worthy in the degrees he has already passed, and is he one that is likely to perform with fidelity the duties of the Scarlet degree?

A.—I find him in all respects worthy of our confidence.

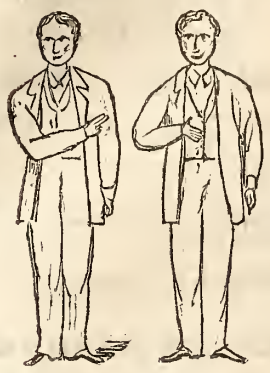
(Guardian opens the door saying:) They come; be serious and listen to the charges about to be given to you.

[The Conductor leads to the Vice Grand's chair.]

Vice Grand to Conductor:—Have you carefully examined the brother in the preceding degrees?

A.—I have, and find him correct.

Vice Grand to Candidate:—Brother, you are now entering upon the last degree of a Subordinate Lodge—that which crowns the fabric—and we devote it to the principles of truth, which is appropriately introduced in this portion of our work, for it follows close after love, and has an intimate connection with it. It is the spontaneous result of genuine and constant love. If you are faithful to the duties enjoined in the last degree, truth will appear in all you say and do, as an intrinsic ornament of your character. If love is the fundamental element of all morality, truth is the imperial virtue. It is the treasure for which the candid mind ever seeks, the consumation for which we apply in all our investigations; it is the sanction of every appeal that is made for the good and the right. It condemns the wrongs, the sins and the falsehoods of the world. It may be long in achieving the victory, but it is omnipotent and must triumph at last. The man of truth is the best and strongest man; his soul, like a spring of clear water, reflects the light of heaven and is full of life. His speeches and his actions are always just; he wins involuntary respect; he blesses and purifies all around him; he is a solid land-mark amid the waves of faction, the storms of passion and the conflicts of error. Conduct him to the Noble Grand.



Noble Grand to Candidate(s):—Brother(s), in view of what has been intimated of this degree by our worthy Vice Grand, are you willing to enter into an obligation with us?

A.—I am.

OBLIGATION.

I [name], in the presence of the members of the Scarlet degree now assembled, do most solemnly promise, declare and say that I will conceal and never reveal the signs, secrets and mysteries of this degree to any person or persons, unless it be to a just and lawful brother, in a just and lawful Lodge of brothers, whom I shall find, on due trial and examination, to be legally authorized to receive the same; and, furthermore, I promise that I will never wrong a brother or see him wronged without apprising him of approaching danger, if in my power so to do; and that I will attend every legal summons unless prevevented by sickness or absence. To the true performance of which I pledge my most sacred honor.

Sign Scarlet Degree, P'p'l sign Scarlet Degree.

PASS WORD.—Aaron.

SIGN.—Place the two fore fingers of right hand on left arm, nearly half way from elbow to shoulder.

PRINCIPAL SIGN.—Place right thumb on pit of stomach, then span down, then span to left side.

GRIP.—

Press third knuckle of right hand with ball of thumb, taking hold of hands as if to shake hands, but no shake should be made.

NOBLE GRAND'S LECTURE.

You are now admitted to the fifth degree, which you have already been told is devoted to the principles of truth. You are robed in white; this represents the purity of truth; but the emblematic color of this degree is scarlet, implying that truth is a cardinal or royal virtue. In accordance with this, I present you with a scarlet badge. Also, in reference to this a scepter was put in your right hand—he who goes forth with the truth upon his lips and in his heart is a king, and is entitled to dominion. You are now placed in a position among us to gain rank, the highest in the Lodge; it therefore becomes your duty to enforce by example, as well as precept, the tenets of our order. Its mysteries are confided to your charge; you are to preserve them inviolate. Duty and honor, your own solemn vows, all require that you be faithful and that you also guard your brethren against any breach of fidelity. Be true and steadfast in this as well as in all other things, and thus demonstrate that merit constitutes the great title to our privileges, and that on you they have not been undeservedly conferred. Thus much by way of admonition. I will now proceed to explain the propriety and significance of the various colors of the degrees through which you have passed. White, the color which represents the first degree, has ever been regarded as emblematic of purity and sincerity. Thus in the Apocalypse it is said, I will give him a white stone, and in it a new name written which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment. Near the capitol of Rome stood the the Temple of Fides. When the priests offered their bloodless sacrifices to her their faces and hands were shrouded in white clothes, thereby intimating that faith or fidelity should be alone and secret. She is called by Virgil, Cana Fides, because candor is essential to fidelity. One of the symbols of this goddess was a group of two young virgins, clad in snowy vestments, and joining hands, which act signifies a pledge of faith for future friendship. In physics white is the result of a union and refraction of all the primary rays of light. Hence it is metaphorically used to signify a collection and reflection of the graces and virtues which adorn and dignify the character.

Pink, which distinguishes the second degree, was the hue by which the ancients represented youth and modesty. It denotes in poetry the spring time of life, when faith is the most confiding, the affections most vigorous, and friendship is the most constant. Nature herself seems to have dictated the choice of this hue, as figurative of those very qualities with which the imagination has coupled it. In the prismatic spectrum the red ray (of which pink is but a modification) is the most calorific, and the least refrangible of all the parallels. Our Covenant love should be ardent and never turn from its purpose.

Blue is the characteristic color of the third degree. Popular usage has assigned to it the representation of that which is true—faithful. Beautifully apposite with its ideal use is the chemical effect of the blue ray; when it is made to fall sometime on the needle, the rod acquires polarity, and points true to its mysterious attraction in the chambers of the north.

Green is the enlivening shade that appropriately represents the fourth, or Remembrance degree. It is the most widely diffused of all the tints which adorn the material world. Nature has clothed herself in this rich garniture throughout her solid domain. Yet, although it is lavishly spread before us from mountain-top to dell, the eye never rests upon it without a sense of refreshment and delight. In very remote ages green was happily chosen from all its sister rays to be the symbol of memory and eternity. As an oasis is never forgotten by a traveler who crosses the arid plains of Sahara, so we are accustomed to speak of those scenes and associations on which the mind lingers with peculiar fondness as things dwelling greenly in our memories, or as verdant spots in the desert of our days. The evergreen which lifts itself over the grave of some loved one, seems to respond to our sighs with an instinctive language, he is not dead but sleepeth; thy brother shall rise again.

We have already spoken of truth as the imperial virtue. You will, therefore, see the application of scarlet as the emblematic color of the fifth degree,—as a token of glory, rank and power. It was worn not less extensively by monarchs than the purple. It was also used among the garments Moses was commanded to make for Aaron.

Searlet was ordained to be a constituent part of the girdle of the ephod—the curious girdle of the ephod and of the breastplate of judgment.

Such is the significance of the various colors which you are entitled to wear. Let them never be false colors with you. Let them represent the moral sentiments of your mind and the affections of your heart.

You will also observe that in this order, and especially in this degree, you are surrounded by various emblems.

This is appropriate, because truth is taught through symbols; we never see it in its naked essence; it lies behind some form and needs expression. Language is fossil poetry; words themselves are but symbols. The natural word is full of emblems; it utters no articulate voice, it writes no legible alphabet. Yet the human mind understands, and the human heart appreciates the meaning of its myriad forms. Symbols constitute a universal language. They are older than Babel, and survive its discord; they are the representation or signs of something by images or properties of natural things, and should always represent what is really behind them. But they may be made to convey false intelligence; they may counsel evil under the garb of good; so with men, they often speak and act as if they were virtuous, and give to the world merely the semblance of a righteous character; but alas! the symbol in this instance is deceptive; the heart holds out false signals. Let not this be your case. Let hand, and heart, and speech harmonize in the consistency of a sincere and upright nature. Be ever what you seem.

Our time will not permit us now to explain the truths contained in each emblem that should decorate a Lodge room. Some have been explained in your progress through the degrees, and much more you must learn for yourself. They will make a profitable study for you, in which it will be our pleasure to assist you. Each of them either illustrates some duty of man, or inculcates some lesson of virtue or morality; and amongst them are some which forcibly proclaim the mysteries of man's destiny: for instance there is a most significant symbol,* teaching with solemn eloquence, that great truth which is too little heeded, but which underlies and terminates all the vanities—all the circumstances of life; it tells the end of all that live—how all the distinctions of life are leveled—how the rich and the poor—the proud and the humble sleep together. The King with his crown—the warrior with his banner and spear—the wise man in his wisdom, and the fool in his folly—they are all there, nor have they part or lot in all that is done beneath the skies. In a few more years at most, you shall be with them—your voice shall be as silent—your arm as powerless as theirs. Then all that shall remain of you on earth, will be the good or evil you have done. If you have done your duty, your name shall be embalmed in many hearts, and your example exert an influence on others yet unborn; but if you prove recreant to your duty, your name shall be despised.

Another thing may require a little explanation. Moses was the voice or agent of God, in the olden-time; he was the oracle of truth—so should you be—your words, like his should be true words. Never be swerved from this duty by any temptation. To speak the truth in love, is the cardinal distinction of a good Odd-fellow. As to your brothers of this order, feel that you are authorized by the high position you now occupy, to correct their errors and irregularities. As to your brothers of the human race, be true everywhere and to all.

Thus should you manifest the attention you have given to the lessons of this order—thus shall you show to the world that ours is an institution of true moral influence, rising upon the broad basis of universal brotherhood—opening its doors on the right hand and on the left—imparting the beautiful and sacred sentiments of friendship and love, it sends forth its initiates, clothed with the dignity of truth, without which, all professions are uncertain and insincere, in which they become harmonious and effectual.

Brother, you have now been instructed in your duties and privileges as a member of the Scarlet Degree, and in conclusion, I declare you in the name of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and by its authority duly promoted to the fifth or Searlet Degree.

The Regalia of the Fifth or Scarlet Degree is a white collar, trimmed with scarlet ribbon or fringe. It may be ornamented with a rosette of white, pink, blue, green and searlet. Usually worn at the point of the collar in front.

*The Death Scene.

RUM AND TOBACCO.

The old idea that alcohol is food has been utterly exploded, and the Prtish Medical Journal says that it is simply eliminated as alcohol from the body, and retards the process of digestion. Political economists declare against the monster alcohol, and aver that instead of increasing the national wealth, it sinks it by the million every year. The penal, reformatory and charitable institutions of the country are filled with the victims of the drinking custom, and honest men pay the taxes.

The progress of temperange has made the liquor-venders and the liquor-drinkers ashamed of the appropriate names of their resorts. No one hears, in this country, of an ale-house, a porter-house, a gin-shop, a dram-shop, but only of restaurants, offices, saloons, sample-rooms, etc. It would be half the battle if we could compel the liquor sellers to put up truthful signs; if, where there are license laws, a man was required by law to have in large letters, on the front of his house, "Licensed Liquor Store," or the words, "License to Sell Intoxicating Liquors!" Why not? It would be simply the statement of the truth; as when, in some States, we see signs, "Licensed to Sell Gumpowder." And it were no more than the truth, could the liquor-dealer be made to see, whenever he looked up to his sign, some such announcement as "Tipping Hall" "Drunkard's Resort," or "Gateway of Hell." But men hate to look truth in the face about their evil practices.—Advance.

News of the Week.

The City.

The excitement about fires does not quench so easily as the flames, for no sooner is one fire out than another kindles. Two days after the last great fire, over a block of buildings in the north-western part of the city was burned. They were all of wood, and chiefly small cottages or stores of wood occupied by foreigners. On Wednesday last, the large jewelry store of Giles Bros., and Hollister's carpeting establishment on State St., near Madison, was totally destroyed, and only the stability of the walls on either side prevented the destruction of a large wholesale dry goods house on one side, and the book store of Jansen, McClurg & Co., on the other. The loss was near half a million. On Sunday the oil ware-house of the Michigan Southern R. R. took fire, it is supposed by incendaries, and was totally consumed, all that the fire department could do being to save elevators and factories near by. On Monday morning a fire was discovered in a store on North Clark St, and was extinguished; when it was discovered that preparations had been carefully made to burn and blow up the building. The owner is under arrest. The National Board of Underwriters has recommended all insurance companies to withdraw from Chicago after October 1st, unless the city authorities take further measures to prevent conflagration. Eleven companies have already temporarily withdrawn.—Two of the Chicago morning papers have commenced sending their Sunday editions to the country by special trains. This wholesale Sabbath desecration began with a train to Milwaukee last Sunday.

Country.

A fearful calamity visited the vicinity of Pittsburgh on Sunday last. A terrible storm burst over the western and northern portions of the city, and especially over Allegheny and suburbs. The abrupt and narrow defiles between the hills on which these cities are largely built were gorged with the flood which swept houses, bridges and all things in its way. The loss of life was mainly among the poorer portion who lived in the lower lands. One hundred and six dead bodies were recovered Monday, and the loss is supposed to be between two and three hundred. —Heavy and destructive storms swept over Milwaukee on Friday last, and over Michigan during the night and Saturday.—Much damage was done in various localities. St. Joseph, East Saginaw, Ann Arbor, Ft. Wayne, Ind., by wind and lightning. A severe storm visited portions of northern Illinois on Sunday doing great damage. The loss of property from storms along the Ohio in the vicinity of Cincinnati is great from a storm on Sunday night. The Ohio rose nearly five feet in a few hours.—The Beecher-Tilton scandal is yet undecided, although the report of the committee is expected this week. The opinion of the press generally is that Beecher's letters and actions in the case indicate guilt.—Gen. Custer, who is leading a military expedition westward through an unexplored portion of Montana has sent back his first report. The expedition is progressing finely with plenty of grass and water on the way. The Indians are hostile in that section, but have not yet opposed the march.—A waterspout burst over the town of Eureka, Nev., Friday, killing twenty persons, destroying a great deal of property, and washing out the Central Pacific railroad track. Thirty houses were swept away, the flood lasting half an hour.

Foreign.

—Despatches from Vienna dated July 27th, tell of destructive storms on the borders of Moravia. The town of Azall was overwhelmed by a torrent. Sixty-four houses were demolished, and but few of the inhabitants escaped with their lives. The railroads were badly damaged in every direction.

MADRID, July 26.—A terrible landslide occurred at Alarra, in the Province of Navarre. The overhanging rocks fell upon and utterly destroyed the village. The disaster was so sudden that few if any of the inhabitants escaped. Two hundred corpses have already been recovered. A Carlist magazine exploded last week at Quisa. Thirty men were killed and a large number wounded.

—Advices from India represent that there are fears that the cholera has broken out among the 50,000 pilgrims who are assembled in Poore for the Juggernaut festival.

TILTON'S ARREST FOR LIBEL.—The fearful case in Brooklyn drags its slow length along. Mr. Beecher still maintains a silence that ought to be very painful to his friends. He says that he may have given bad advice to Mrs. Tilton, but never did or said anything wrong. His friends say he may have insulted her but never committed adultery. Oliver Johnson of the Christian Union, the New York Herald and World, with a few religious papers, are down on Tilton in the most approved fish-woman style. A few newspaper correspondents are very much concerned for Christianity if the charges are proved true. Frank Moulton won't testify because the Committee have pre-judged the case. Frank Carpenter gives the lie direct to Oliver Johnson. Tilton is now under arrest for libel; and chaos reigns. Meantime, the whole country is sick and tired of the awful story and longs for its definite proof or disproof.

COLLEGE BOATING.—Now that the betting, drinking and swearing attendant on the College Regatta are done for a year, it will do no hurt to spend a moment in considering the relation of such sports to education and religion. Young men in college need exercise. Boating and ball play are forms of amusement where interest is excited, muscle developed, and the general effects are good. Let them be continued. College regattas, base-ball matches and other like things take too much time from books, make animals instead of men, promote drunkenness and ill nature, are generally demoralizing. At Worcester, Mass., on the regatta week the Bay State House used to be filled with a crowd of drunken rowdies from Boston and New Haven, whose conduct would have been a disgrace to a parcel of Modoc Indians. What can be done? Colleges can prevent these things just as they can wipe out college fraternities, if they choose. Why don't the faculties do it then? Because people patronize them while they continue their shamefully inefficient management. What shall we do? Send your children to Wheaton, Oberlin, Otterbein, or some like institution where Christianity and education go hand in hand.

PATTON VS. SWING.—This case is still attracting public attention, the latest developments being an article in the Evangelist and a rejoinder in the Interior. The whole case, as it seems to us, is a very plain one, and the division of sentiment respecting the matter seems strange. Mr. Swing was in a church that has standards affirming that certain things are, and certain others are not taught by the Bible. To these standards Mr. Swing has pledged himself by his ordination vow, which is a solemn oath. His preaching seemed inconsistent with these standards to one of his brother ministers, and he asked presbytery to decide whether they were or not. At the trial the defendant saved the presbytery the trouble by asserting that he did not believe what the standards asserted, and that other members of presbytery were in the same boat. That is, Mr. Swing don't believe that the Confession of Faith teaches Bible truth; though in order to get into the body that tried him he must assert that he did, and his defense was that they didn't believe it any more than he did. Synod is now to decide whether presbytery did right in acquitting a man of any wrong who told them to their faces that the Book of Discipline they affirmed to be founded on and consonant with God's Word was a lie, and that they knew it. Of the parties to the case we know but little. We heard Dr. Patton's inaugural and it seemed like an ambitious attempt to say a great many words. He seemed, however, to be candid and to suffer most for lack of a definite object. Prof. Swing we have heard preach several times, and have read some sermons that we did not hear. We think him a dangerous man. Dangerous not because of his abilities, which are not likely to cause alarm, but because he preaches a gospel of sentiment, flowers and pictures, and art and goodishness that is perfectly welcome to the carnal heart and entirely hostile to the Gospel of Christ.

THE WAR OF RACES.—The Governor and Lieut. Governor of Mississippi have asked for United States troops to control the next election; they say, in order to make it just. The people of Vicksburg protest against the request. Say they don't want any United States soldiers there and never did. If outsiders don't interfere there will be no trouble. The press of the country is of course divided in sentiment. Those that believe we have no reason to complain of the Republican party, and something dreadful will happen if the men who stole four or five thousand dollars apiece are not all sent back to Washington, want the soldiers sent down. The opposition seem to think it unnecessary. There is a lack in the South of a proper feeling toward the freedmen. This is proved by the wild outcry against the Civil Rights bill and mixed schools. The intermingling of blacks and whites is a fearful thing, and one that cannot be permitted. If attempted it will break up the whole educational system. This is the talk of men who were nursed by black women, hundreds of whom have children whose yellow skins prove that their fathers have been able to endure at least the remote presence of Africans. For such people to bawl out about persecution because they are required to treat black men with common decency sounds very much like the yells of a cross pup when well whipped. The northern States paid the bills for the South in times of peace, protected them in times of war, and got such men as Ben. Butler and John A. Logan to look up their slaves when they ran away. As the fitting return for this contemptible dough-face-ism, the South made a rebellion and killed five hundred thousand men. They were whipped; lost their slaves, and had to go to work. Now they are in mortal fear lest the "niggers" get too close to their children. It is about time such nonsense was stopped, and if Federal troops can accomplish the end, send them down.

The Corner-stone Laid, and What Came of It.

[A DREAM.]

BY J. L. BARLOW.

All past was St. John's day! It's daylight was gone!
Completed the farce, and the actors withdrawn;
And sweetly a quiet was nursing the air,
Late shaken by drum and the trumpet's rude blare.
I sought for my couch, and as swiftly, it seems,
My spirit passed on to the valley of dreams,—
Where, struggling and noisy, were gathering together,
The kings and the knights of the apron and feather;
Who now, as matter of import, seemed weighing
The probable end of that corner-stone laying;
For yet upon some pressed the troublesome thought
That little of good to their craft had been wrought,
By this reckless endeavor to strengthen their sway
O'er a free, thinking people, by pomp and display.
And true, 'twas a sight, then and there to behold
The weaker ones swagger and try to look bold,
As Past Master Reynolds spoke up and said—
(While all the soul in him was shaking with dread,)
"Hurrah for our craft! The stone we have laid,
In spite of all efforts the cowans have made.
Let Carpenter plead—the Blanchards look sad—
Stoddard, and Stratton, and others feel bad;
Let now their petitions like snowflakes flow in—
Papers and lectures all add to the din;
Yet, though the people as one should agree,
Nothing can stay what the craft shall decree.
We've a half million men, all sworn to obey,
And never a secret to cowan betray;
And knights by the thousand, all armed and all drilled,
Awaiting the edicts their masters have willed.
Our men now the best of the offices hold:
The rest by our cunning and skill are controlled.
Ours be the task all the leaders to lead;
Each one's strong passion to culture and feed;
With a 'good place' bait the minister's soul,
While a 'fat brief' shall the lawyer control;
Give the physician his coveted 'ride';
Set the politician an 'office' astride;
Let the editor's subscription list grow;
And the merchant brother's 'coffers' o'erflow;—
Look well to these, and the masses will be Pliant as wax in our hands, and——as free."
Thus to the craft did the brother declaim,
Striving the Grand Master's zeal to inflame;
But he like a statue sat still in his place,
And vacantly smiled in the Past Master's face;
Till, rousing at length, he spake out on this wise,
And much, I perceived, to the other's surprise:
"Brother, give me your attention,
And a thing or two I'll mention
'Bout the work we've just now ended
And the craft you've loud commended.
Your strong zeal is quite inspiring;
And we know you've been untiring
To make—in and out of season—
Th' worse appear the better reason.
We've had, 'tis true, our nice parade,
And beautiful the show we made;
Rousing much the rabble's wonder,
And, too, something much like "thunder."
And the 'Antis'—Yes, we've beat 'em;
Or, at least, we tried to cheat 'em;
But we meanly tried to dodge it
By our use of Justice Blodgett.
May the fiends all blow their blast on't,
For we ne'er shall hear the last on't,
Then, the prayer of our Grand Chaplain!—
Bend we like a youthful sapling?—
Stupid!—Let a panic seize us,
When we pray in name of Jesus!
Shall the cowan's din, though awful,
Make us do what's so unlawful?
Much I fear their profane barking
Is gaining fast the people's harking.
List you, brother, and be weighing
All the words to you I'm saying;
Though my thought your spirit soften,—
Don't we come to light too often?
We forget the maxim taught us,
And the 'Antis' nigh had caught us.
You know the strength of Masonry
Lies in the deepest secrecy;
So, we'll backward now be reaching
To sublime and ancient teaching.
Though you've spoken well and truly,
There are many yet unruly;
Still some pastors we can't euchre
With position or with lucre,
Who, nor man nor devil fearing,
Will not turn for threat or sneering.
There's more conscience than we thought for,
When the thing is fairly sought for;
And very much we are surprised,
The Press is not all subsidized.
Churches, too, have broke th[illegible]

Binding them to our bell-wether;
And, my brother, I'm suspicious
That these signs are unpropitious!
We are troubled, as the seas are;
While the "Antis," as the bees, are Busy with their type and presses,
Prin ing off their sharp addresses.
Long we've laughed, and tried to flatter,
But 'tis now no laughing matter;
For our foes are having feeders—
Fast are growing through seceders.
None can tell our real number,
Counting out the useless lumber.
We may strut and crow like bantics;
Still, each meeting of the "Antis"
Finds, despite our execration,
Some to break their obligation.
Shall we take this thing in season—
Nip in bud the growing treason?
Or in weakness and submission
Let profanes push on their mission?"
Thus the Grand Master, half fiercely, half sighing,
Ended at once, and for all, his replying.
Then I turned me to hear what the other would say;
And waking, the vision fled swiftly away.

From the Pews to the Pulpit.

AN ADDRESS BY DEACON SILVANUS TOWNE, AURORA, ILL. BEFORE AURORA CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

Beloved Brethren:—We recognize in you a class of men called of God, as was Aaron. We believe that God the Father and Jesus Christ gave you the responsible and solemn charge of watching for souls as they that must give account. We feel that it illy becomes us to dictate to you, as you are to preach the preaching that God bids you, and to your own Master you stand or fall. Yet it can never be a matter of indifference to us how you fulfill your solemn charge. For it is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth of which you have the oversight, and when you so preach the word that God's law and character are vindicated, and the Gospel is so unfolded that sinners are convinced of their guilt and danger, and are led to the Saviour for refuge, we can but rejoice, and are led to exclaim with the prophet: "How beautiful upon the mountain are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings of good; that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth."

As you, through your committee, unsolicited and unthought of by me, have given me this appointment, it may not be presumptuous in me to make a few suggestions in regard to the advancement of the Kingdom of Christ.

And, first, we think that the law of God, which is a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, is not sufficiently unfolded. God the Father is in a measure shorn of his justice and judgment while his loving kindness and mercy are unduly exalted. The consequence is, that the convert of to-day does not experience that deep sense of guilt, and does not find that relief in the Gospel which will lead him to exclaim:

"Oh! what mercy flows from heaven,
Oh! what joy and happiness,
Love I much, I've much forgiven,
I'm a miracle of grace."

And hence they go more readily to the beggarly elements of the world for enjoyment. They get up clubs of jolly sisters and introduce into church, sociables, theatricals and other vain amusements.

Second, when you address the pews we think you sometimes unnecessarily burden the conscience. You are apt to quote the example of a Moody or Burnell or a Whittle for us to imitate. Now we do not say that these brethren are out of the path of duty. We certainly rejoice in all of the good they are accomplishing, but we do believe that it will be a sad thing for the church and especially for the ministry, should their number be greatly mulitplied. We think the tendency of the age is to undervalue the settled ministry; the sanctuary where God forever dwelleth, and the church which Christ has purchased with his own blood.

Our opinion is that Christian associations and even Sabbath-schools should be kept in subordination to this institution. If the children of the church cannot attend the sanctuary and the Sabbath-school both, they should abandon the latter, and leave them as mission schools for those who have no other instructions. We also believe that the true condition of the church is to be set in families, which, under the blessing of a covenant keeping God, shall rear and train a holy generation, and thus cause the church to grow within, instead of spending all their energies in making conquests without. There are needed Christian farmers, mechanics, merchants and manufacturers to sustain the institutions of God's house. In order to be successful they must devote much thought and labor to their employments, and have capital to carry on their business. True, there are times and seasons when God calls his children to spend labor on his spiritual vineyard, but we serve the Lord by being diligent in business, as well as by being fervent in spirit.

Third, We are constrained to feel that you err in not leading the church in the reforms of the day. Here let me say, that it is not true that these reforms have been, or are carried on outside of the evangelical church. So far as my experience or observation goes, all reforms have been commenced and mainly carried on by evangelical Christians, ministers as well as laymen. But it has been a Gideon's band. It was so at an early day in the cause of temperance. Especially when we abandoned the old pledge that excluded only distilled spirits, and adopted what was called the teetotal one in its place. It was so in the early anti-slavery struggle. In the city of Troy, N. Y., Dr. Beeman was the only minister who stood up with Theodore D. Weld, who was lecturing then, and received the peltings of the mob. Here in the northwest at a later day, we had more help from ministers because we had a strong infusion of Oberlin men, whom we could always count on as true reformers. Here I would say that I could not agree with Pres. Blanchard and others, who criticised the meeting of the council at Oberlin. I thought that God had sustained Oberlin and brought the council there. In anti-slavery times, an Oberlin minister could with difficulty, if at all, be received into any association, East or West; and at this council, the men who had opposed Oberlin principles came and did honor to them in the hour of their triumph.

I am sorry that the cause of peace is not advocated by you, as the subject seems to demand. The successful termination of the arbitration of the difficulties between our own country and England appears to me to be one of the greatest triumphs of Christianity in modern times, and yet, the man to whose influence more than any other we are indebted for this success received very few votes for President, while the man who never would have been thought of for any high office had he not been a successful warrior, was elected.

Nor can we understand how it is that you have so little to say in public against secret oath-bound societies, when their influence is so pernicious. They are drawing our young men into their lodges by scores, and once in, they are rarely ever converted. There is just about religion enough to satisfy the carnal mind, and, as they purposely exclude Christ from their worship, there can be no salvation in them though they profess to go from the lodge below, to the lodge above. We believe the time is coming when we would no sooner allow one of the members of our churches to frequent a lodge and assist in degrading the manhood of others by denuding them of most of their clothing, hoodwinking and cable-towing them, administering to them their horrid oaths and then playing the ridiculous farce of raising Hiram Abiff after he is dead and rotten, and then slaying his murderers,—I say, I believe the day is coming when we will no sooner allow our members to do these things than we would permit them to enter an idol's temple and worship a senseless God. I know you say that the lodge cannot be so bad because some good men, and even ministers belong to it. Why, brethren, there never has been an evil under the sun since Aaron made the golden calf, that could not have been justified in this same way. Our fathers, and some of us, used to drink and sell intoxicating liquor. John Newton was engaged in the slave trade. Dr. Nelson came from a meeting where he was weeping over sinners and went into his back yard to whip a female slave; so blind and inconsistent is poor human nature when partially enlightened and sanctified. Now brethren, what we devoutly desire is that you should lead on the sacramental hosts of God's elect to battle against all sin of faith and practice, in and out of the church, until the peaceable Kingdom of the Redeemer shall be established on the ruins of Satan's empire, and then shall nothing be left to hurt or destroy, in all God's holy mountain. Amen! amen!

Not the Christian Deity.

The religion of Freemasonry is a compound of paganism, Judaism, natural religion and a great number of idolatrous symbols, such as the gavel, square, compass, level, plumb, trowel, bee-hive, hour-glass, scythe, etc. This vile compound is about as far removed from the religion of Christ as hell is from heaven, and all who put their trust in it may look for an eternal residence in the blackness of darkness.

The god of the Freemasons is not the God of the Bible. They recognize and worship a phantom of their own imagination called by them an "Architect," a singular without a plurality, which was unknown to the inspired writers. Whereas the God of the Bible and of the Christians is a plurality in unity; so revealed throughout the whole Scriptures. The first verse in the Hebrew Bible contains the name of the Supreme Being in the plural form. The Hebrew name Elohim, translated God, is a masculine noun plural, regularly formed from its singular Eloah, and occurs about 2,500 times in this form in the Hebrew text, and is frequently constructed with verbs, adjectives and pronouns plural. All which being written by inspiration must necessarily convey the true idea of the Supreme Being.

The plurality is most clearly and indisputably revealed in the New Testament by the names, Father, Son and Holy Spirit three persons in one God. Now the Son and Holy Spirit are ignored, dishonored and discarded in the religion of Masonry, and, whatever indignity is cast upon any one person of the adorable Trinity, is most assuredly cast upon all. If one is rejected all are rejected, as the three are one. All who thus blasphemously insult their Redeemer, and deny the Lord who bought them seem to be in the broad way to the damnation of hell. —.Spectator

The Compromise Line.

While standing on the platform in front of the depot, in the beautiful city of C———, a few days since, I saw the passenger train bound for a distant city roll majestically up and halt for a few minutes for the accommodation of passengers. As the train halted the engineer jumped to the ground, oil can in hand, to oil up the machinery. I approached him saying, 'I see on many of the cars the word 'Compromise.' You are a railroad man, I wish you would tell me what it means." "It means," he replied, "that those cars are so arranged as to run either on a broad or narrow track." We began to reflect, and as we looked around we could almost see the letters compromise written on everything that man has had anything to do with. There is one thing, however, that has no compromise in it, and that is salvation. An uncompromising hostility to the devil and all his works is the glory of the gospel of the Son of God. The broad-gauge track on which the devil runs his compromise cars, freighted with a liberal, popular, spurious Christianity, begins with, and ends in hell. . . . The compromise tobacco car (there isn't any on the salvation track) is fairly jammed full, and O! the stench is terrible. These D. D.'s are the pastors of those costly churches on the rear of the train. See them with compromise written all over them. It is seen in their "memorial windows" of stained glass, in the costly furniture, in the organ, in the kitchen, in the dining hall, and in fact it is everywhere. The Young Men's Christian Associations with their rooms for pious gambling are on this line. There is one in Cincinnati, where mere boys congregate and take their first lessons in gambling and games of chance. The gambling shop is within a few feet of the room devoted to prayer, and as both are under the control of the Y. M. C. A. of this Christian city, we may look for the time soon to come that a Rev. Doctor wished for in making a speech before this same society, namely, that we should soon have "regenerated bowling alleys, and baptized billiard tables."

I would suggest to the managers that they put up over their doors the following

NOTICE.

"The way to hell made respectable and sanctified by prayer."

Not long since I saw a young man brought before the police court and fined $200, for keeping a gambling house. His gaming implements were before the court and looked as innocent as those furnished by the Young Men's Christian Association of Cincinnati. It appears a little singular to some that these representatives of a progressive Christianity, under a president of national reputation, should so far degrade the name of Christian and step aside from their proper and legitimate work of saving men, as to do the dirty work of the devil by instilling into the hearts of young men and boys a love for games of chance. Wouldn't it be well for the Mayor to have his police look a little after the institution on Vine street.

However, this is an age of progress, and this is the "compromise line," and if a dozen young men and boys do go to ruin, why you know there are a good many who don't; and a good many of these managers have a reputation yet to make, and the thing must be made popular.

That preacher is on the compromise train who, in nearly a nude state, submits to be led around a lodge-room with a rope around his neck and then binds himself to observe and keep the Christless oath he has taken, under the penalty of having his throat cut across, his tongue torn out by the roots, and his body buried in the rough sands of the sea; or, his left breast torn open and his heart and vitals plucked from thence, or his body severed in twain and divided to the north and south, his bowels burned to ashes in their midst, and scattered to the four winds, or the top of his skull smote off, etc. . . . .

Finally, we want to say to compromisers of all grades; your conductor, the devil, has been deceiving you all along. Your train is not able to run the narrow track at all. Instead of taking you through the pearly gates of the New Jerusalem into the grand depot of glory, it lands its passengers in the blackness of darkness forever.—Free Methodist.

It is very often said that religious questions have never had a stronger hold upon men's minds than now, and that if unbelief be prevalent, it is not from indifference. President Porter, of Yale College, is not of this opinion. In his recent address to the graduating class, he says: "The real cause of the prevaling unbelief of thinking men, at the present time, is the want of moral earnestness—this and nothing more." We believe he is right in this. Of course the question of God, of creation, of immortality, cannot be wholly ignored by any one discussing the great problems which life and nature present; but the discussion is mainly of such a character as shows that only an intellectual or speculative interest is felt in them. Earnest men grapple with them as questions far more important than any other questions, questions of very life or death. But the light, airy, not to say flippant way, in which the gravest problems that can occupy the human mind are treated by those who claim to be the leaders of thought, shows that all real and deep sense of their importance is wanting. Men conscious of their spiritual need, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, seeking after God, penetrated with the majesty of an eternal existence, are never dilettanti delighting themselves with fine phrases and glittering theories. Sin and death, heaven and hell, God and eternity, are not matters to be played with, and in all truly earnest souls, doubts as regards them will fill the soul with agony. In ten thousand journals and magazines, men are talking about religion, but their easy self-satisfied tone is the best proof that it has no real hold on their spirits.—Churchman.

The Grange Promotes Worldliness.

The Constitution of America grants its citizens to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. When the grange or any other society resorts to indirect threats to startle those not favorable to it, it becomes every true citizen's and Christian's duty, spiritually to rally to the rescue of those who contend for our cherished liberties, and "fight a good fight with good faith," thus becoming entitled to the welcome plaudit, enter ye "into the joys of thy Lord," fearing "not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear Him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

The grange is looking forward to the day when it expects to control national affairs, suppress railroad monopolies and political rings. This it does not hope to accomplish by rendering good for evil. It is rapidly rising, and with its big "I," floating high in its banners it expects all arrayed against it to clear the track as it comes along.

It is said the grangers expect to establish their own schools and churches. It is acknowledged to be a secret society. They also claim not to be a political society, but in a recent article in the Cincinnati Times it is stated that "they finally expect to revolutionize a political world." Here is another conglomeration of truth and falsehood to which the devil resorts to allure, more successfully, those who are not steadfast and easily driven by every wind from a new doctrine.

I cannot see how one has renounced the world and put on the Lord and him crucified, can join the grange without crucifying the Lord anew and putting him to open shame. I have known brethren to prefer the grange meetings and festivals to church meetings. Alas! where the treasure is there will the heart be also, and where the carcass is, there will the eagles gather together.

The object of the grange is to enhance worldly interests. Therefore, those who lay up treasures in the grange, lay up treasures upon earth instead of in heaven where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal. He that is of the earth is earthly, and he that soweth unto the flesh shall reap of the flesh corruption, but he that soweth unto the spirit shall reap of the spirit life everlasting. O! "Go to, now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you."

Those who join the grange have erred from the faith and pierced themselves through with many sorrows. The great teacher said it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God. Ye grangers, know ye not that ye cannot regain one lost soul were ye to gain the whole world.

He that forsaketh not father and mother, etc., is not worthy of me. Take no thought saying, what shall we eat, or what shall we drink; wherewithal shall we be clothed? Wherefore be not too much concerned in temporal affairs, being fully assured that he heareth the ravens, and that a sparrow falleth not without his notice. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

To the mortification of many I have known brethren whose chief theme even before and after meeting was the grange. Alas! of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh, and how can a fountain yield water both bitter and sweet.

The grange is highly esteemed among men, and that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. Now how can his followers belong to that which is an abomination. Be not deceived, God is not mocked.

In latter days perilous times shall come. The love of many shall wax cold. Many shall give heed to seducing spirits. Cyrus Bucher asks, "Do those that join the grange become better according to the word of God?"

As soon as a member begins to sympathize with the grange there is a falling away, and the minute church members join the society they manifest a spirit foreign to that possessed by the Lord. The grange has a seal by which they buy and sell among themselves, and those who have not the seal cannot transact business. Mark! The grange surely is the beast spoken of in the Revelations, that shall rise and all those who have not the mark, or the name of the beast, can neither buy nor sell.—J. C. Yoder in the Christian Family Companion.

ROMANISM.—The church of Rome is the same everywhere; elastic in form, unbending in aim. There is a dream on our soul when we imagine there is a Romish church different from that to-day amongst us. It is no different here from there. Its priests are largely imported; its increase is from abroad; its liturgy of another time; its spirit as foreign to that one of this country as death to life. It may talk about protection or recognition, it means lordship. It is cunning enough to wait the best opportunity. It means to defeat self-government whenever it can. Its attacks upon our public schools show its hatred toward enlightenment of the masses, and were we to "feel" the public sentiment toward its policy, with nothing but desires for the purification of popery, we must cry an alarm to America. We are in peril! The same influences are operating here as there. With a cunning that has grown shrewder for centuries of practice, this enemy of progress has planted itself here to create its deathly influences. The quiet of the past has been on account of feebleness. Know ye not that its agents have hovered about our legislative halls, greedily gathering the larger share of all donations to charity; that priests have amassed millions by assessments on day laborers and housemaids, showing what they could get if they had the wealthy to beg from, that they are building everywhere for future victories?—Rev. C. M. Griffin.

PEACE AND WAR.—Sydney Smith describes, as only Sydney Smith could, the consequences of being too fond of "glory." And by "glory" he meant war with all the attendant and consequent evils. He says:

"We can inform Jonathan what are the inevitable consequences of being too fond of glory. Taxes upon every article which enters into the mouth, or covers the back, or is placed under the foot; taxes upon every thing which it is pleasant to see, hear, smell, feel, taste; taxes upon everything that comes from abroad or is grown at home; taxes on the raw material; taxes on every fresh value that is added to it by the industry of man; taxes on the sauce that pampers man's appetite and the drug that restores him to health, on the ermine which decorates the judge and the rope which hangs the criminal, on the poor man's salt and the rich man's spice, on the brass nails of the coffin, and the ribbons of the bride, at bed or board, couchant or levant, we must pay. The school-boy whips his taxed top; the beardless youth manages his taxed horse with a taxed bridle on a taxed road; and the dying Englishman, pouring his medicine which has paid seven per cent. into a spoon that has paid fifteen per cent., flings himself back upon his chintz bed which has paid twenty-two per cent. and expires in the arms of an apothecary who has paid a license of a hundred pounds for the privilege of putting him to death. His whole property is then immediately taxed from two to ten per cent. Besides the probate, large fees are demanded for burying in the chancel; his virtues are handed down to posterity on taxed marble, and he is then gathered to his fathers to be taxed no more.

The man whose heart is set on an office will find an opportunity at every turn and corner to throw his lines around a voter. So the man who sincerely desires to bring men to Christ will find his chance to talk to men, without cant and without whine, in the field, at the forge, behind the counter, in the court-room, on the street, wherever he is thrown in personal contact with them. Only let him follow the Spirit's leading and he will be surprised how frequent are the opportunities too sow good seed when one really wants to sow it.—Advance.

State Convention for Missouri Sep, 1st, 1874, at Brashear, Adair County.

Annual Meeting of the North-east Pa. Association, Nov. 3d, in Free Methodist Hall, Wilkesbarre, Pa.

WANTED.—More men to go and do likewise. Samuel Hale, of Medina County, Ohio, has been an indefatigable worker in our good cause. Among other commendable deeds, Bro. H. secured a number of Cynosure tracts on the grange, and distributed them in several townships in this county, and as a result, where the tracts went in advance, not a single lodge of grangers, so far as I can learned, has been formed, although efforts have been made to do so. It is only necessary to give the farmers a few facts in advance and they will escape the snares of these sharpers and swindlers.

J. P. STODDARD.

State Convention in Missouri.

After consulting with many of our most earnest co-laborers, in the field of reform, we have decided to call a State Convention to be held at Brashear, Adair county, Mo., commencing Sept. 1st, 1874. This Convention is auxilary to the National Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, and we solicit the co-operation of all persons throughout the State of Missouri, in sympathy with this movement, to aid in making this convention a grand success. Let every county throughout the State, send one or more delegates to the convention, and in counties where no action is taken, let some one come that is in favor of reform. The convention will immediately succeed the session of the annual conference of the U. B. Church. Some of our National renowned lecturers will be present. G. W. NEEDLES.

Vice-president for the State of Missouri.

Convention Work, La Salle County, Ill.

We, the undersigned citizens of La-Salle county, Ill., believing that secret societies, and especially those bound by oath, are contrary to the principles of Christianity and subversive of republican equality; and believing that the time has come for an earnest and united effort to resist the influence of the secret orders, both in church and state, do hereby call a convention to meet in Ottawa on —— day of ——, 1874, to devise means to effect this object, and to transact such other business as may come before the convention. To the Cynosure subscribers, and all ohers opposed to the secret orders in La Salle county.

It is proposed to call a county convention to meet in Ottawa some time during the coming fall. We wish the names of at least a hundred citizens of the county signed to the above call before the time and place are fixed, and the call published. Will all those who favor such a convention send me their names, and such other names as they can procure, to be signed to foregoing call. Direct to H. H. HINMAN, Farm Ridge, Ill.

Reform News.

—Rev. Joseph Travis, delegate to the National Convention at Syracuse from the Illinois Conference, lectured in Brooklyn on the Relation of Freemasonry to American Civilization to a good audience, many of whom were Masons.

—The General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, is attending the Ohio State Convention, which began on Tuesday in Darby Chapel, Union county.

—Bro. Kiggins will confer a favor by sending to this office his present address.

—Bro. Stoddard writes that he has been speaking constantly since the Syracuse Convention. Successful meetings have recently been held in Ohio at Brunswick, York, Lodi, Chatham, River Styx, Berea, Wadsworth, Strongsville and Dover. There are many items of interest and encouragement which he has not time to repeat, but mentions a vast change for the better in Medina county.

Lectures in Middlebury.

CENTER POINT, IND., July 27, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosyre:

Rev. W. M. Givens, of Center Point, Ind. has delivered three lectures against secret societies in Middlebury, Clay Co., Ind. His first lecture on Odd-fellowship was well arranged, and proved that this secret organization of a very late date, was unscriptural, not benevolent, and on a poor financial basis. He was fiercely attacked by some of the valiant young adherents of the lodge; but he showed them by their own books and reports that they were a Christless, lifeless, and bankrupt organization, detrimental to the social, political, and religious progress of the American people.

His second lecture on Freemasonry was principally devoted to the subject of the religious, social, and political bearings of the hydra-headed society. His quotations were entirely from their own authors and lecturers, wherein he showed that they positively exclude the name of Christ from their books and organizations. His third lecture revealed the initiatory ceremonies of the first, second and third degrees. The initiatory of Master Mason, is especially barbarous, cruel, and unbecoming in an enlightened age. Mr. Givens understands his business as a lecturer, and knows whereof he speaks, having been in his younger days a member for twelve years in this craft. He was favored with large audiences and good behavior, with the exception of last lecture, an old Mason behaved in an unbecoming manner. Middlebury is a hot bed of secrecy, but the lodges found the lecturer firm and resolute.

Great Granger Demonstration in Gentry Co., Missouri.

ALBANY, Mo,. July 22, 1874.

Yesterday was big granger day in Gentry county, and all the faithful attended—and more of the unfaithful—to hear what T. R. Allen, the state's great talker had to say about the middleman.

THE DAY

Came, and was all that could be wished, being cloudy enough to keep the atmosphere cool and comfortable, and with it came Allen, so, also, came the various grange organizations. Banners trimmed with flowers, others decorated with agricultural impliments, painted by home artists, carrying us back full fifty years to the days of wooden mould boards and pruning hooks, before the inventer, manufacturer and middleman had brought utility and comfort to the granger's door, were held aloft by men and women who looked flat—yes highly flattered, by the conspicuous positions they occupied in the procession. The morning was consumed in processioning through the public streets of this village, and thence to the grove, where a basket dinner was jumped through without ceremony, most of the grangers being hungry enough to eat a middleman without salt or pepper. Then was and the crowd assembled about the speaker's stand to the number of full one thousand, when T. R. Allen was introduced to the audience, who found him to be a seedy looking individual. of rather an easy manner, but no address, sporting on his vest the Masonic skull and cross-bones. Under the efficacy of his voice the concourse soon dwindled down to about two hundred. For three long hours the occupant of the platform continued to harrangue the ever changing, tired-looking, weary-acting members of the grange, who felt they must hang on or leave their State speaker without hearers. The address was a mere repetition of the cry we read in every granger paper and hear from every granger mouth. He advanced nothing new, except it was to urge the members of the grange in that sly Masonic manner all observers can easily discover and appreciate, telling them it was their duty to act in politics all together, but at the same time to keep political discussions outside the grange door. Now this simply means—grangers must all support the ticket "put up" for them, and that those who object will be made to feel the pressure of the institution bearing upon them to a degree that will keep them outside the lodge door, where discussion can take place. Like Masonry in the church it is those who object that create all the trouble and who are to be "brought to the block."

TO POLITICAL ACTION

THE SYRACUSE CONVENTION

and the gentlemen there assembled gave Mr. Allen a great deal of trouble. Immediately after paying a high tribute to the Masonic organization, he swooped down upon that convention with all the terror of his eloquence. Especially severe was he upon Mr. Greene, whom he stated he knew personally, and gave the following as his reason for knowing that gentleman can not be trusted.

THE AMERICAN FARMER'S CONGRESS

was organized in Tennessee a few years since and the organ of that congress, The American Farmer's Advocate, was published by Mr. Greene at Jackson, Tennessee. A movement was inaugurated to combine this association and the grange in that State, and while the matter was in debate Mr. Greene visited St. Louis and in the office of Coleman's Rural World met this fellow, Allen, and then and there he succeeded in drawing Greene into a statement that the consolidation was about to take place and that he, Greene, expected, in that event, to be made secretary of the State Grange, and his paper to be made the State organ of that institution. This is the amount of the indictment made by Allen against Greene. Now hear the latters exact words: "I did not either acceed to or oppose Mr. Greene's views while he was present, but immediately, on his leaving me, I turned to the desk and wrote to Gen. Vaughn, of Mississippi, who had been appointed by the National Grange to organize Tennessee, warning him against giving Greene the offices mentioned, and this is how the grange soured on Greene's stomach."

Now this unblushing scoundrel, Allen, as shown by his own statement, has the impudence to go about the country putting his name to his own infamy, and denounce the man to whom he played the part of Judas as untrustworthy, and at the same time he advances not one iota of evidence against Mr. Greene's honesty or integrity of character. The words of Dogberry should be changed by Mr. Allen to—"write me down a sneaking villain." "Oh, shame, where is thy blush?" Allen well knew Greene to be an Antimason. He and the Mississippi General are both Masons, and again the bond of brotherhood was used to destroy an honest man's character and business. This same organization, has, without doubt, followed Greene from place to place, for Allen continued: "Greene then continued to denounce the grange movement as he had done before, and was driven from Jackson to a little town in Illinois, out of the frying pan into the fire; for still continuing his abuse of the order he was driven from here and is now, I believe, located at Indianapolis, Indiana, where I suppose he will be permitted to remain, if he behaves himself and quits abusing his betters."

Could impudence go farther. A man going about the country, stirring up strife and discord among communities himself, dictating what others shall say and how they shall conduct themselves? Mr. Allen will find that any and all orders that cannot bear discussion will eventually go down, and that the blood and treasure expended so lately to secure free speech and protection to all men was not in vain. Certainly, Allen is the right sort of a man to preach, not to one, but to all secret organizations.

THE DUTY OF MOBBING

objectionable persons was indirectly urged upon the grangers by Allen, the object of his speech being Geo. W. Needles, one of the proprietors of the American Freeman, an anti-lodge paper published at this place. Said Allen: "It is a wonder to me the thing has not been done; but it speaks well for you as a Christian community that you permit this man to dwell in peace among you." Put this on top of the fact that this question of mobbing Needles has actually been discussed in grange meetings, you have the incitement to, and the spirit of mobocracy fully developed in the community.

But Mr. Needles is well posted in this same style of eloquence. A few years ago he stood up as in a slave-holding community and uttered his sentiments in spite of the same kind of threats that are now hurled at him. He was then almost alone, now he can depend upon a small army of supporters who neither fear to be seen or heard when occasion offers, and who will know how to make themselves felt if pressed to the wall. If a mob war is to be inaugurated we know of no better place in North Missouri for the trial to be made than Gentry county.

HE CAME AND IS GONE

and not a ripple remains to tell where the great gun of the State Grange fired his blank cartridges. All are disappointed, for all expected something extra fine from the long heralded Allen, and were regaled with the same "claptrap" every granger has at his tongue's end. On the grounds were several gentlemen who had left the order who denounced this thing as a piece of the same old humbug.

POLITICAL CONCUSSING

began immediately on the dispersion of the crowd, arrangements being made to send representatives to the Democratic State convention, and in local politics the fathers of the grange and leading Democrats have combined on a Democratic ticket composed mostly of grangers which the farmers of the lodge are expected to rally to. Last evening for the benefit of the South Methodist Church was given, in the expectation that it would be well patronized by the grangers from the county. Few of them however, attended, as a wag remarked, they evidently employed no middlemen, expecting to hand their contributions direct to the Lord, to avoid having it tolled by trustees.

A FESTIVAL

ZEKIEL HOMESPUN.

College Secrecy.

AMHERST COLLEGE.

AMHERST, Mass., June, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

DEAR SIR:—There are at present the following Greek-letter fraternities represented in Amherst: The Delta Kappa Epsilon, Alpha Delta Phi, Psi Upsilon, Chi Psi, Chi Phi, Delta Upsilon. All the first five are secret and the latter is an anti-secret fraternity. As a member of the latter, which has been ever at swords' points with all the former, my opinion must be taken with allowance.

In the first place, the Alexandrian and Athenian societies, the open ones, to which most of the students belong, have been nearly ruined by the diversion of the ability and interest of the college to the secret societies. Thus "Oudens" have little opportunity for improvement in debate, and this latter result is most cruel in its effects.

All the Greek-letter societies, the anti-secret among them, require only a few negative votes, two or three, to reject a candidate; hence you can notice the selfish and exclusive tendency of them all. Let a man be a little peculiar; let him be wanting in social standing; let him come undeveloped, or have the misfortune of coming from a country high school instead of a fitting school, and thus let his abilities be unknown, and the chance is that he will find himself throughout his course excluded from all opportunity for improvement and practice in debate.

The exclusive spirit thus shown at first becomes constantly more and more developed into a feeling of caste, which will do anything and everything for a brother, and anything and everything against a member of another society. Manhood and its demands for respect are ignored, and an aristocratic feeling developed, which is ruinous to religious interest and false to all true self-respect.

But if it stopped here we might be thankful. There has not been an election since I have been in college, four years, that has not been planned and run by secret societies. They have, though constituting less than one-half of the students and not two-thirds of the talent, absorbed nine-tenths of the important offices. A single one has had orator for three years. "Oudens" and "Delta Us," the anti-secret society men, are excluded from all positions that are elective. F. S. Hatch well said, in a speech on the college stage, "The Olio Board and editors of the Student should be chosen for ability. They ARE CHOSEN TO KEEP THE PEACE." Not a year but sees class-harmony destroyed by a clique in the graduating class. My own is no exception. At the election, Merrill, the "Ouden" and anti-secret candidate, received thirty-two votes (counted by six tellers from the different societies,) in succession. He was declared elected. The secret society men, whose slate had been broken by being discovered, were very angry. Some of their own men had gone back on them secretly, and some did the same openly in disgust at the trick and in hopes office might be saved them for their aid in electing Merrill. The secret society men bestired themselves and induced men enough to swear they had voted for the other candidate to invalidate Merrill's election; and though there had been two evident frauds on their side, the class declared the election void, and class day was broken up. There had been a revival interest. How long did it last?

It is an undoubted fact that the secret element favors making these societies "bumming" institutions. The secret oath, the absence of all witnesses, the natural tendency to use facilities for vice, the tendency of evil to the dark, explain. One secret society was deprived of its charter in my Freshman year for its excess. To-day two others stand before the faculty on a similar charge. At the "Psi Upsilon Drunk" last week, the men were noisy and threw bottles at the policeman's head, refused admittance to the faculty and probably some will be expelled. Only two societies in college work and do not "bum," the D-K-E. and the anti-secret society. The culture obtained in these, judging from the record of their debaters and writers and declaimers, is most invaluable. But I don't see but we anti-secret society men hold our own with any of them, and that without secrecy. Our fellowship is as close and we are as ready to drill each other as any of them. I know we work; that our debates are inspiring, and this for three years has given us the first Hardy prize in debate. The faculty are, says Prof. Snell, "convinced that the societies are an evil, but they feel powerless to meet it, and think they would exist clandestinely if they did not openly." Prof. Clark Seelye styled them a "nuisance," and Pres. Stearns says he "wishes there wasn't one in college." The younger men in the faculty feel differently.

Of course the oaths of the different societies are unknown. We sometimes hear of men roughly used at initiation. Most of them are very expensive. A D-K-E. from Yale, present at the D-K-E. initiation at Amherst, said their oath was too shocking for him to take; that he heard them promise to vote for each other and stand by each other through thick and thin. And they do it! There was a prize debate recently—a D-K-E. on the committee of award, and one on debate. Every one thought the D-K-E. spoke poorly, and yet this D-K-E. committee voted for him every time. They took advantage of a meeting recently to elect seven out of eight "Social Union Debaters." Such is the selfish spirit generated in men, unconsciously perhaps even to themselves. I have seen Christian men so blinded by society ties that they did the meanest things, and were not ashamed. Our own anti-secret society is exclusive and selfish, more than I wish, but it is open and cliques are forbidden in its constitution. Its numbers are full; there are forty members, and we mean business. But if all these pests of societies could go down I could see my own go without a regret, dearly as I love it.

Yours truly, GEO. Y. WASHBURN.

DENISON UNIVERSITY.

GRANVILLE, O., June, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

For the past two years there have been in operation in this institution laws forbidding students to join college secret societies. Strong efforts have been made for the repeal of the laws. At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees in June, 1873, the two fraternities here, the Sigma Chi and Beta Theta Pi, sent in a joint remonstrance to the Board. This might, perhaps, have helped their cause, had they not shown the "cloven foot" by adding a threat with the remonstrance. The trustees were given to understand that, unless the obnoxious laws were repealed, the combined influence of the two fraternities throughout the country would be used against the college.

Within a few hours, however, they concluded that to threaten was poor policy; so they sent in a request to have the threat removed from the paper. The request was granted, but the laws were not repealed.

The spirit of fraternity men and their sympathizers has been shown lately in another instance. Candidates to the Freshman class are required to sign a pledge not to join a college secret society. It has transpired that nearly all of the class which is to enter the coming year have signed an agreement to leave college rather than pledge themselves not to join secret fraternities. A desperate attempt was made by appeals to "class-spirit," by intrigue, by flattery and by brow-beating, to get the entire class to rebel; which might have succeeded but for the decided stand of a few men, who saw that the scheme was planned, not "to secure the rights" of the class, but to help the failing fortunes of the secret orders. Several who were seduced into the agreement are sick of it now. By its exposure and failure, the scheme bids fair to help rather than hinder the progress of truth in this college.

GEO. L. MASON.

Around the Lakes.

OBERLIN, July 25, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

In my last communication I mentioned a Master Mason who aided me in combatting Romanism. I had some talk with him regarding his Masonry, found that for ten years he had not attended the lodge, thinking it unnecessary; that during the war, Masonry did him good service, though he admitted that arguments drawn from the benefits received were based on the selfishness of men. He read the Cynosure I handed him through, and read the "College Secret Societies" until he was thoroughly converted, as he said. He thought it would hardly do for a man n his position to subscribe for the Cynosure. Altogether I found him a pleasant acquaintance and a man who will rejoice in the triumph of the cause for which we labor, but is not quite ready to deny himself sufficiently to bear his share of the burden. One of the two adhering Masons whose acquaintance I found was a bright, merry Irishman, a former student of Trinity College, Dublin, who had advanced to the dignity of Royal Arch in the Emerald Isle; but did not seem to care whether the Masonic "school keeps" in America or not. He played cards, danced, smoked, flirted, enjoyed himself, and, like a true Irishman, tried to make everybody else enjoy himself. I shared a three-foot berth with him without the least inconvenience. He never swore, and after I had once declined the offered cigar and the egg 'with a little brandy on it,' as well as the invitation to join in the dance or at the card table, he was too polite to annoy me with further solicitations of like nature.

I might have accepted the last two invitations without compromising my reputation with the boat's company as a Christian or gentleman, for cards and dancing seemed to be indulged in equally by saint and sinner, ladies and gentlemen, young and old. From observation and conversation with some of the church members, it seemed to me that when away from home on a pleasure trip, Christians are apt to throw off wholesome restraint together with their usual cares and perplexities. Pardon me for wearying your readers with such an extended account of my trip. I will close here and at some future time give some account of Oberlin

OUR MAIL.

James A. Clark, Prospect, Pa., writes:

"Let us encourage one another's hearts and strengthen one another's hands, believing and rejoicing that Jehovah reigns and must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. I will be pleased to forward subscriptions to your office. So far as I know we have no anti-secret association in our county, but we have thirty-three United Presbyterian congregations which may be regarded as anti-secret societies, whose session (the pastor and ruling elders) may be regarded as their executive committee, when no special committee has been appointed."

This is certainly a strong force, and if its works and faith are in proportion to its capabilities, Butler county and vicinity should be thoroughly converted to the evil nature of the lodge.

A. Bruce, Dillsboro, Ind., writes:

"In our village we have two small churches, Methodist and Presbyterian, struggling for life. When asked the reason, I point to no less than four secret societies, two of them to my knowledge loaning money by the thousands at ten per cent. And just so long as we worship God and Mammon, fellowship Christ and Belial, commune light with darkness, just so long the church must go to the wall, for the children of darkness are wiser in their generation than the children of light. Press on in your noble work, God is with us. I was an abolitionist in the good old days of rotten eggs and boulders, and never dreamed to see slavery destroyed in my days. Behold, what hath God wrought? Is it possible I may live to see the church in this land arise in her purity and might, and in the Master's name, shake off this other league with death and covenant with hell. Let us work on. Who knows how soon we may reap the victory."

David Mumma, Decatur, Ind., writes:

"I am doing what I can for the Cynosure. It's just the paper for the times. Let the banner against secrecy be unfurled."

J. H. C. Lowe, Ft. Branch, Ind., says on renewing:

"I thought I would not take it [the paper] any longer, but the men of secret lodges are so down on the paper I thought I would continue. It hurts their feelings every time they see it. I keep it lying on my counter free to all."

W. C. Day, Greenwood, Ind., writes:

"I hope to be able ever to assist in the good work in which the Cynosure is engaged."

Rev. S. H. Kellogg, Swansea, Minn., writes:

"Please continue the paper. I remember, with pleasure, your visits to Wayne, Ill."

Hiram Sears, Pearson, Coffee county, Ga., writes:

"I have taken the Cynosure two years and like it very much, and wish it could be circulated all over the world. I have been waiting to get subscribers to send with my renewal, but have failed to get more than one. This is a hard place to get subscribers, as it is a thinly settled part of the country, besides, Freemasonry has considerable influence here."

J. Beattie, West Zanesville, O., writes.

"There is not much light in this place in regard to the craft, but hope if we get your paper circulated we will stir up some of them."

James Squier, Trempeleau, Wis., says:

"I have no idea of stopping the Cynosure. I fully sympathize with you in your work against secret organizations, and, aside from that, I have no paper whose religious tone so fully harmonizes with my own views of Christianity. I like it because it is not afraid to speak out against the revelations which are eating out the vitality of Christianity, making it a social form."

Isaac Halsted, Johnstonville, O., writes:

"I find, many times, that it is very inconvenient to be poor, but still feel that I can hardly spare the Cynosure. I see, by the papers, that Chicago has again been visited by a terrible fire; hope you are not very heavy losers this time."

Poverty is truly an inconvenience often, but also a blessing to the humble and contented follower of Jesus. The fire did not come within half a mile of the Cynosure office.

S. Davis, Ansonia, Conn., writes:

"I should be glad to see in the Cynosure a paper so truthful, so temperate, so consistent with the word of God, and yet so convincing that I could not really read it myself but recommend it to others."

Rev. S. A. Gilley, Platteville, Wis., writes:

"The Cynosure is becoming one of the best family papers published. Every department is well supplied with good, profitable matter."

John Cassiday, Charleston, Iowa, writes:

"I should like to have about twenty of the twenty-five member's tickets. I think I could dispose of them, and if I succeed may call for more."

This request has been handed to the Secretary of the National Association. Correspondents will notice that it is a great convenience here to have such matters on different pieces of paper. There should be a thousand friends at work in this way getting members.

Isabel Barland, Eau Claire, Wis., writes:

"I cannot get along without the Cynosure; we think it the best and bravest paper that comes to the house. We hope to be staunch supporters, and we regret that we are not able to do more for it in procuring subscribers."

B. Williams, Warren, Ill., writes:

"I am doing what I can for the reform by scattering tracts and papers on the cars, in the streets, on the 4th of July, and amongst the show caravans. I think Elder Bernard's Reminiscences of the Morgan Times a real clincher."

B. J. Cole, Jacksonville, Ill., writes:

"I have been busy circulating 'Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Mason' among the so-called Christians of the Masonic order. I happened in the Y. M. C. A. meeting the other night, and, after meeting, I circulated several of the above. One very enthusiastic member, a high Mason, and who holds a very "soft" position here as a Doctor in one of our State Institutions, remarked, upon reading the title of the pamphlet, that Masonry was the right bower of the Association, or words to that effect. I am surprised upon looking about me, that there are so many professing Christians who are Masons. They are the ones I am working on, and think I can count on one or more who are thinking over the matter strongly. It has astonished me the way some Christians treat the subject. I have offered more than one books to read, and they would'nt touch them more than they would fire. I am satisfied that some portions of Finney are true. I have had very good Masons lie to me to keep their secrets, and to justify Morgan's murder. Send me the paper as I shall anxiously look for each and every number, and may God bless you in your work."

Important Renunciations.

The Anti-masonic Christian Herald, Feb. 19, 1829, contained the following:

We, the undersigned, having formally associated with the Freemasons, deem it our duty, without intending to increase excitement or to wound the feelings of our Masonic brethren, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is, in our judgment, of a tendency, on the whole, pernicious to the moral habits and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

William Morgan.

[The following letter, dated Linden, Ala., Jan. 8, 1829, was sent to the editor of the Niagara Courier, N. Y.]

Fourteen years ago this day I fought by the side of Capt. William Morgan at the battle of New Orleans; and you may judge of my feelings when, a few days since, I first learned, from reading one of Gidden's almanacs (our newspaper editors suppressing all information of a nature tending to expose Masonry), that he had fallen a victim to Masonic vengeance for exposing the mysteries of the order.

Although my acquaintance with Capt. Morgan was not of long duration, it was yet necessarily of such a nature as to induce me to form a high opinion of him as a man of sound and honest principles; and, as a soldier, none surpassed him. Whatever reasons, therefore, may be assigned for publishing his revelations of Masonry by those who have removed him from the midst of society, I am satisfied, from my personal knowledge of the man, that it was something beyond the mere desire of gain,—he must have conceived it a duty which he owed to a deceived and endangered community to expose a system of wickedness and folly, or he never would have braved the fate which he must have been aware awaited him—loss of character, if not of life. Let this be as it may, however, he has rendered a service to his country that should entitle his memory to respect. With my regret for the untimely removal of a fellow-being to the world of spirits, and for the perversion of the rule of right which could induce men of respectable standing in society to plan and execute so great an outrage upon the laws of their country, still I cannot but rejoice at the effects which are resulting from this unlawful proceedure. The institution of Masonry is shaken to its center; its pillars are broken, never to be restored; and it is fast coming to naught, as well here as elsewhere. May He "who rides in the whirlwind and directs the storm" speedily work its utter ruin! . . . . .

1 And they came over unto the other side of the sea, into the country of the Gadarenes.

2 And when he was come out of the ship, immediately there met him out of the tombs a man with an unclean spirit.

3 Who had his dwelling among the tombs; and no man could bind him, no, not with chains;

4 Because that he had often been bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked asunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him.

5 And always, night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himself with stones.

6 But when he saw Jesus afar off, he ran and worshiped him.

7 And cried with a loud voice, and said, What have I to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of the most high God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not.

8 (For he said unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean spirit.)

9 And he asked him, What is thy name? And he answered, saying, My name is Legion: for we are many.

10 And he besought him much that he would not send them away out of the country.

11 Now there was there nigh unto the mountain a great herd of swine feeding.

12 And all the devils besought him, saying, Send us into the swine, that we may enter into them.

13 And forthwith Jesus gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out, and entered into the swine: and the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, (they were about two thousand,) and were choked in the sea.

14 And they that fed the swine fled, and told it in the city and in the country. And they went out to see what it was that was done.

15 And they come to Jesus, and see him that was possessed with the devil, and had the legion, sitting, and clothed, and in his right mind; and they were afraid.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

On the south-east of the Sea of Galilee, about seventy-five miles from Jerusalem, were ten cities (called Decapolis, a word meaning ten cities), Gadara was one of these; it was the capital of ancient Perea.

What is the first topic? Who was the first to meet Jesus? (verse 2.) What is meant by an unclean spirit? (verse 12; Luke viii. 27.) Have we had a lesson about men possessed with devils before this? (July 12; Mark i. 21-27). Where did the men dwell? (verses 3, 5.) What was he doing? (verse 5.)

What is the second topic? What had men tried to do for him? (verses 3, 4.) Had it done him any good? Do men expect to cure sin?

What is the third topic? Who had invited Jesus to the country of the Gadarenes? Why do you suppose he went? Who invited him to come down from heaven? Why did he come? (John iii. 16; 1 Tim. i. 15.) How did the man feel towards Jesus? (verse 7.) Why do you think he was afraid? Are not sinners generally afraid of Christ? Who has made them afraid?

What is the fourth topic? Had Jesus come to torment the man? What did he do? (verses 7-13.) What did Jesus come to destroy? (Heb. ii. 14; 1 John iii. 8.) Will he do it? (Rev. xx. 10, 14.) How did he cast out the devil? (verse 8.)

What is the fifth topic? When they came out to see the man, what changes had occurred? (verse 15; Luke viii. 35.) How many exchanges had the man made? (See how many you can name.) Was he free now? Who was his master? How many masters are there? (Only two?) Whom do you serve? How did the people feel towards Jesus? (verse 15.) What request did they make (verse 17.) What request did the healed one make? (verse 18.) —National S. S. Teacher.

The Uses of Miracles.

In the Old Testament they mainly helped men to see and know God in greater reality. Aids they were to knowledge and faith—as the visitation of angels; or as "God spake unto" Abraham and Jacob; as the "bush burned and was not consumed," as one fleece was dry and one wet, etc. Special usefulness and help to the men was often their end, also, as the ram caught in the thicket beside Abraham's altar; the rift of the Red Sea, doubly useful to help the Hebrews and to bury the Egyptians. The New Testament miracles were mainly for special benefit to persons: as bread for five thousand out of five loaves; "healing all manner of sicknesses," and raising the dead, etc. The Gospel and Acts are cabinets stored with these wonders. But some of the New Testament miracles were wholly for signs and seals, as the "star in the east;" the dove at Christ's baptism; the voice from the cloud, which the people thought was thunder; crucifixion scenes, etc. A child might be allowed to put it thus: God is so full of goodness to man, that his goodness spilled over; the common ways are not enough in which to bless men; so he has extra ones called miracles. Surely all of Jesus' miracles were to do extra good to people. He never did a miracle to hurt any one but Satan and that herd of swine the evil spirits elected as tenements; and hadn't they better be in the sea than that two men be raging among the tombs? Those men, cured and cleansed from foul spirits, were they not worth the race of swine? Evermore, some good to man comes from the miracles of our blessed Jesus. Good and only good was in and from them.—Illustrated Bible Studies.

Zion's Herald thus epitomizes what it considers necessary to make the Sunday-school service a fruitful one: With much more thought and common sense, and infinitely less machinery; with more the aspect of a school for study, of careful, fresh and interesting instruction, and less that of a singing school, a festival, or a public holiday; by thoughtful arrangement; by adequate provision of text books; by the presence, hearty co-operation, and personal service of the pastor (his Sabbath labors in some other way, if necessary, lightened); the hour, or two or three, for sacred study and exposition may be made the most fruitful of present and ultimate good of any of the appropriate services of the Sabbath.

—In connection with the Sunday-school lesson the views of Martin Luther on the appearance of evil spirits found on the 11th page will be profitable. Also read the encounter of Christian and Apollyon in "The Pilgrim's Progress."

Home and Health Hints.

Tomatoes.—This is the season for stomach disorders among adults, as well as cholera among children. To meet this condition nature and art (for tomatoes were classed as poisonous before cultivation,) have contributed a safe remedy. Chemists say the tomato possesses a substance analogous to calomel, and call it vegetable calomel; and prescribe its use for a stagnant liver. It excites the glandular system of that organ, opening up its sluices and urging the elimination of bile; as it has been found a larger quantity of bile secreted and worked into the food in process of digestion insures a better state of health. For this reason they advise a free use of the tomato.

Onions are not used one-tenth as much as they should be, said an eminent professor to his class. They contain a substance identical with arsenic, which is known to aid so materially in the case of nervous diseases and weaknesses, skin disorders and general good-for-nothingness. It is said even horse-jockeys understand some of its virtues, so they pin a small parcel of arsenic to the horse's bridle, and are not surprised at seeing a poor old superannuated beast measure his course on the race ground, or draw heavy loads, with comparative speed and ease. It brightens the eye, and makes the hair sleek and glossy. Workmen, living or working near an arsenic mine, have been known to increase in flesh and strength; and guides in mountainous districts have been known to go for days with only a few berries or herbs and a small allowance daily of arsenic. This may account for the brilliancy of skin among the Jews. Probably four days out of the seven their food is prepared with onions or garlic; and a very beautiful girl, of Chicago, once told me in confidence, that this beauty of skin in herself and four sisters was due mainly to their forenoon nap and onions twice a week. I write this especially for the mothers and farmer's wives; for if it will bring this much-abused fruit into more constant use, I shall feel repaid for the time spent in writing this article.

Pick Your Flowers.—All lovers of flowers must remember that one blossom allowed to mature or "go to seed" injures the plant more than a dozen buds. Cut your flowers, then, all of them, before they begin to fade. Adorn your rooms with them; put them on your tables; send bouquets to your friends who have no flowers, or exchange favors with those who have. You will surely find the more you cut off the more you will have. All roses, after they have ceased to bloom, should be cut back, that the strength of the root may go to forming new roots for next year. On bushes not a seed should be allowed to mature. Violets will bloom longer, and sweet peas will bloom all summer, if no pods are allowed to mature. When lilies are picked as they bloom it has the effect of strengthening the bulbs and hence of improving the growth for the succeeding year.—Y. F. Rural.

A Substitute for Waterproof.—Good Scotch tweed, which has been rendered impervious to rain, is recommended in the place of ordinary waterproofs. The process of treatment is given as follows: In a bucket of soft water put half a pound of sugar of lead, half a pound of powdered alum; stir this at intervals until it becomes clear; then pour it off into another bucket, and put the tweed therein, and let it be in for twenty-four hours, and then hang it up to dry without wringing it. Garments thus treated are said to withstand the wildest storms of wind and rain.

Early Breakfast.—What has that to do with farming? A good deal. When a boy, we were taught by hearing it repeated over and over again, that it was a good and healthful thing to get up early and work before breakfast; not only to do the chores, but saw wood, hoe, mow, and do many other kinds of work that must be done on a farm. We didn't believe it exactly then, but thought it might possibly be because we did not like to get up early. We had heard the old saying that "the early bird catches the worm," and we were perfectly willing he should do so, and take him for his breakfast, after which he might be in good condition to enter upon the regular daily duties that devolve upon every well-behaved and prosperous bird. We tried working before breakfast for many years, from sheer necessity, and in obedience to the commands of parents, who certainly meant well; and then we tried it for several years afterwards, because we were poor, and needed to work all we could, and we are bound to say, after so many years of early experience, that it is not well for mankind to do much before the morning meal, and we would not advise farmers to do it.

Washing Bed Clothes.—It is said by some, wash in warm water; by others, in cold water. We know that water will cause shrinking. A large, fine rose blanket, washed at three different times, shortened six to seven inches each washing. In the centre it pulled up and made a shapeless thing. We were told to wash in warm water, and rinse in water of the same temperature. It was done, and with perfect success. The blanket is even longer and more even. The shrinking seems to take place on the sudden change of the temperature from warm water to cold. The gradual cooling and drying afterward does not seem to affect it any; so the slow change in the temperature of frozen fruit leaves the fruit unhurt.

Farm and Garden.

Seasonable Hints.

It will not be too late except in certain localities, to plow up a poor pasture field or meadow after the grass is removed and sow corn for fodder. There are thousands of acres covered with dasies chiefly (six daisies to one grass), which would yield a bountiful crop of excellent corn-fodder if the seed were not put in sooner than the middle of July. If not wanted for fodder, let the crop be plowed in for green manure Last season the writer sowed four bushels of corn and four bushels of oats (eight bushels per acre) on the 15th of July, and plowed the heavy crop under about October 1st.

Do not neglect to furnish domestic animals of all sorts with a constant supply of pure water. Cows cannot yield a full flow of milk when they do not have access to water when they are thirsty. The writer's cows drink more than half a barrel of water every day. When a cow is thirsty she needs all the clean water she can drink. A pailful of pure water is quite as refreshing to a cow, and a horse also, as a cup of cold water to a person when he longs for a draught from the cool mountain spring. Water should be kept constantly in the metallic fountain in our poultry yard, where every fowl, even the smallest chickens, can drink without difficulty. It is surprising to note how frequently fowls want water during the hot days, when their wings droop and their tongues are extended.

Do not fail to wage an incessant warfare against the horde of noxious insects that are making fearful ravages in the fields, gardens, and fruit-orchards. Crush every tent caterpillar before a clump of eggs are deposited for a brood next season.

If your cabbages are infested with any of the seventeen species of worms and bugs which prey upon the cabbages in New Jersey, spend a few minutes now and then to crush the pests.

Pinch back the long canes of the raspberry and blackberry bushes, or they will injure their hardiness and vitality by overgrowth. By pinching off half an inch of the terminal buds, the canes or twigs of any sort, they will cease to grow longer for a few days, and will grow stalky and more hardy. Let the buds of all luxuriant grape-vines also be pinched off. There can be nothing gained by allowing vines to grow to an undue length.

Pinch off two-thirds of the fruit on young trees. Many small fruit-trees are ruined by being allowed to overbear. The growth of a young fruit-tree is of far more value than a few specimens of fruit.

If ornamental trees or fruit-trees of any sort have nearly ceased to grow for want of moisture in the soil, pile grass, weeds, straw, coarse manure, coal-ashes, or saw-dust around them a few inches deep and over an area of six to ten feet in diameter, then apply a few pails of water, and the fading trees will revive and grow.

If you wish to produce large and hard cabbage-heads, place a box or board on a bench, fill it with rich stable manure, then pour on water until a high colored liquid begins to leak out. At evening pour a pint of this liquid fertilizer around each growing plant. During hot and dry weather the soil should be drawn back from the plant to the depth of about one inch, and the liquid applied and covered with the mellow dirt.—N. Y. Observer.

How to Feed Fowls.

At this season of the year, feed corn morning and evening; but in cold weather give warm feed, such as small potatoes boiled, and corn meal mixed with them; give them occasionally chopped onions. Give them sometimes, also, pepper or ginger in their feed. Chickens should drink from a running stream; but also keep a couple of small troughs, putting clabber milk in one, and in the other water. In the water put, now and then, a little copperas.

Their nests may be square boxes filled with cut straw. For nest eggs use imitation eggs made of clay baked hard in the oven. These last four years, so there is no need to leave a real egg in the nest.

A Word of Advice.—Remember, young farmers, that every forkful of manure wasted is an ear of corn thrown away. Every load of manure that is permitted to leach out and run down the hollow, is a load of corn thrown into the river. Remember that every time you raise fifty bushels per acre, when you might have raised seventy-five, you add fifty per cent. to the cost of producing your crop. This fifty per cent. is what makes the rich farmers.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

TISKILWA AND PROVIDENCE.

July 27, 1874.

Mr. Pierson, Mr. Fosdick, and Rev. Mr. Baker and wife are the chief reliance of the cause in Tiskilwa. Both of the latter have preached as "United Brethren in Christ," and always shut the church against Freemasons. And now that health has failed and years increased, they are living here as a sort of minutemen for God. They are blessed in their children who are settled in life according to the "desire of their hearts,' as those who delight themselves in the Lord have the promise.

I preached yesterday at Providence in the morning to a fair congregation in the Congregational church, and here in Tiskilwa in the Baptist church last night to a good congregation. I have done but little for the College, but I preached directly on the relation of secret societies to the cause and kingdom of Christ, and something, I trust, has been accomplished.

Rev. David Todd, of Providence, is a blameless Israelite in whom is no guile. He makes religion respected by a consistent life; and if he had health equal to his talents, he would be more than an ordinary minister of Christ. His congregation is interesting and intelligent, and are of the sort of people who loathe the lodge. But this dark force makes its way into every such church as Satan did into Eden. And the grange folly has humbugged some of Mr. Todd's people. They will soon quit that, but its slime will linger on their souls after the serpent is gone.

Here at Tiskilwa, there is a little accumulation of property, and the lodge reigns over it. The Baptist minister, Dr. Webb, a Mason, is said not to have been near the lodge for thirteen years. If not, it must be he sees something wrong in it, and he is sinning against God and his people by keeping silent on the subject of Masonry and allowing his young men to be sworn and swindled in the lodge. But if he sees nothing wrong in the lodge, it is his duty, as a man, to come out and defend it from our attacks. Rev. Mr. Tullis, whom I met at Moline a few years since, is here in the Methodist church, as Masonic and wily as ever. Meantime there are good and holy men here. I have just visited an old Methodist brother, Mr. Fosdick, who says his people are "shutting up their eyes hard because daylight is coming." And daylight is coming. Yours in Christ, J. BLANCHARD.

MONMOUTH COLLEGE.—THE SECRET FRATERNITIES NO LONGER ALLOWED.

Monmouth College, of Monmouth, Ill., is among the strongest and best of the Western colleges. Certain apostles of the secret fraternities are said to have visited Monmouth from Knox College in Galesburgh, and left the eggs of mischief and folly which make up these mimic brotherhoods of the old pagan mysteries. The College Courier (Monmouth) was brave and defiant before our national meeting at Monmouth, declaring that "faculties had found they must choose between tolerating these fraternities and empty halls," etc. Since our meeting the Senate of the College have taken the action quoted below from a late circular:

SECRET COLLEGE FRATERNITIES.

The relation of the college to secret fraternities was brought before the Senate at its special meeting in March. The whole subject was referred to a committee, consisting of James Dawson, Esq., of Washington, Iowa, Rev. R. A. McAyeal, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, and R. W. McClaughry, Esq., of Monmouth; who reported at the late meeting in June. The report was adopted by a vote which was nearly unanimous. It is as follows:

"WHEREAS, The existence of secret fraternities in the colleges and universities of our country, with all the private advantages that may be claimed for them, are felt and conceded to be an evil by most, if not all, boards of instructors and directors conducting and controlling their instructions; and,

WHEREAS, The large majority of the graduates of these institutions, after they have become engaged in the active duties of life, upon sober second thought, are ready to declare that with all the advantages, amusements and fascinations connected with these societies, yet it would be better in the aggregate that they were not in existence at all; or, that the evils connected with them far counterbalance the advantages; and,

WHEREAS, Such societies, in their workings, necessarily create an aristocracy of interests, which operates more or less against the rights of the uninitiated, founding the claims and opportunities of promotion upon other grounds than those of true merit; and,

WHEREAS, The great proportion of the founders, supporters and friends of the college are sincerely and deliberately opposed to the existence of these institutions and desire their entire absence from the college, many of whom refuse to contribute to the endowment fund while these societies continue to exist; therefore, resolved:

1. That the Senate, with a sincere desire for the best interests of the students and the college, does hereby most earnestly request these societies to disband as soon as practicable, and all students to refrain from all connection with secret college fraternities whilst members of this college; and we make this request upon the ground of our confidence in the honor, candor and magnanimity of the members of these associations, and of all students, and upon assurance of their loyalty to and ambition for the entire and triumphant success of Monmouth College.

2. That it shall be unlawful for any student of this college hereafter to become a member of any secret college fraternity, or to connect with any chapter of such fraternity."

It was ordered that the last resolution be added to the Statutes of the college as Sec. 4 of Chapter xiii.

This subject has been for years earnestly discussed by the friends of the college. It was pressed on the attention of the faculty and senate by earnest remonstrances of individuals, and by the action of various ecclesiastical bodies, and particularly by that of the Synod of Illinois. The position taken has been reached after careful deliberation and protracted discussion. Those who have an undoubted right to determine the policy of the college, have laid down the law; it only remains for the students to yield to it implicit obedience and for the faculty to enforce it faithfully. The assurances given the undersigned by members of different fraternities, that there will be no attempt at resistance or evasion on their part, and the determination of the faculty to enforce the law as fully and impartially as any other, warrant the hope that the views of the founders and friends of the college, as expressed by the Synod and Senate, will be faithfully carried out, and that all such fraternities will speedily disappear from the college. It is proper to remark here that this policy is not peculiar to Monmouth College. It was adopted long ago by some of the oldest and largest colleges in the land, and scarcely an institution has been established by any denomination within the last few years that has not incorporated the principle of the absolute exclusion of secret fraternities in its fundamental law.

BEECHER, BOWEN AND TILTON.

The readers of the Cynosure have enough of the above persons in the deluge of moral defilement which now overwhelms the American press. In ten thousand villages the question is mooted anew over every daily paper, "Is the greatest light of the American pulpit an habitual adulterer and unclean person?" While the country was still, and the three persons above-named were, as I profoundly believed, destroying the churches of this country with a religious literature in which the "god of this world" had so mingled lies with truth that the whole compound was a lie, the Cynosure kept holding up the truth on this subject so that it grieved some who hated to believe that the families all over this great country were taking moral and religious poison, every week, from the columns of the Independent and Christian Union.

It is hoped that, now the avalanche of filth has turned to a water-spout and burst, those friends will see that it was well that the people of this country should know that all the religion of the country was not represented by H. W. Beecher, as, in fact, none of it was. If Mr. Beecher were dead to-day, who would know what he believed or taught, a year or two hence? But the vain and shallow thing which the Bible calls "the world," is, and constantly has been, represented by him.

The weak and foolish multitude clamor, and the press, the multitude's echo, discusses, through dreary columns of scandal, the question, Is Beecher guilty of adultery with a wretched woman, who says he is and that he is not, and then flies right to Beecher's side from her home, her children and her husband!

Well, these three things are true, and have been published and known long since:

1. That Bowen hired Oliver Johnson and Theodore Tilton to edit the Independent, while he knew that neither of them believed the Bible, and even took a written bond of Johnson not to publish his infidelity in the paper.

2. Theodore Tilton pretends to no belief or morals even, but says he has "acted like a fool," which is true.

3. Beecher, from his entrance on public life, has acted on the same selfish, atheist principle, which led him to stand up and marry Mrs. McFarland to Richardson, when she had stolen an illegal divorce from Indiana, by keeping her debased husband ignorant of her acts; though he and everybody knew there was no pretense of adultery in the case, which Christ says is the only cause of divorce.

What principle has a man who sets Christ's authority at nought, to keep him back from anything which inclination calls for and policy deems safe?

It Must Be Discussed.

Mr. Dougall, of the New York Witness, lately spent three days at the Ocean Grove meeting, and on returning to his office found a huge pile of communications awaiting him; among them were six on Masonry. He publishes the full list, with some judicious remarks to correspondents, and writes thus of the lodge discussion:

"Masonry appears to be the most interesting topic with letter-writers. Six of the above articles are to be added to a score or more on this subject previously received, for which we have not yet found room. About half of the whole are in favor of Masonry and about half against it. Those in favor generally scout all arguments on the other side, for the simple reason that the writers, not being Masons, know nothing about Masonry.

The progress of Christianity will sweep away all the works of darkness, among which we reckon the secrecy of secret societies. This is an element which can never be necessary in any free country where the object and the means used to attain that object are good. The one hundred more or less of different kinds of secret societies by which the community North and South is honey-combed, to the injury of its general interests and of equal justice, must fall before the advance of enlightenment and Christian principle, but they will fall faster by promoting Christianity than by direct opposition.

Some of the letters take exception to an alleged charge that Freemasons cannot be Christians, a charge which was never made so far as our knowledge extends. There is no saying what Christians may not be or do without ceasing to be Christians. We have no doubt that there have been Christians engaged in selling intoxicating drinks, Christian slaveholders, Christian polygamists, and Christian Masons; but that does not make rum selling, slave-holding, polygamy or Masonry consistent with Christianity."

The Witness is emphatically a people's paper and has for some time published communications both for and against the lodge. The fact is evident that secrecy is before the people, and must stand the examination of reason and experience. It is hardly necessary to predict the end.

NOTES.

—The corner-stone of the City Hall of Oswego, N. Y., was laid by the Masons, who had their pagan date and a notice of their work chiseled into the stone. Close by on the building is the warning, "Post no Bills," which keeps off all other advertisers, thus giving the order a complete and perpetual monopoly.

—The First Baptist Church, whose fine building was destroyed in the late fire, have decided to rebuild in the vicinity of Thirtieth street, two miles and a half south of the old location. This will leave a large and central portion of the city with a single church, the First Methodist.

—From the letter of Bro. Harris, of Delevan, Wis., we learn that Elder Jacob Knapp, who died last winter at Rockford, Ill., was a worthy cotemporary of Colver, Stearns, Bernard, and others of the Baptist denomination. He stood with them in opposition to the lodge. Their teachings cannot have been wholly lost; the Baptist churches will yet return to their pure principles, and, as in the first grapple with the lodge, dis-fellowship the iniquity.

—A monthly reform prayer meeting has lately been started in Tiskilwa, Ill., against the anti-Christ of the lodge. There are others held at Wheaton, and at Howell, Mich. Would there were one regularly maintained in every community. The redemption of our churches and nation waits only until our faith gains this victory. Why should there not be in every neighborhood where "two or three" may meet, a meeting of this kind?

—The United Presbyterian thinks the Interior, of this city, "on United Presbyterian ground" on the subject of Masonry. The latter says, "We like that way of putting it, because on that theory a survey of the situation would show that we cover their ground so completely that there are only one or two little patches sticking out to show that they are under us." If one of these patches is dis-fellowship of the lodge, it must be confessed that is neither a small one or of little importance. But the Presbyterian, and all other churches of Christ, must soon see and abhor this system of abominations.

—Last winter a suit for libel was decided against an Odd-fellow lodge in Cleveland, Ohio. Lately a suit for damages has been brought against a lodge of the Knights of Pythias in Cincinnati by a widow, for alleged mal-treatment of her husband's person in the initiation, causing his death. But now we have the greatest case. A Major Burrell some time since took the first degree in a Masonic lodge in Hoboken, New Jersey, but being unable to take the second and having enough of the sham fraternity, he has instituted a suit to recover the initiation fee with interest.

—J. F. Phillips, of Hendricks County, Ind., sent us extracts from the Indianapolis Journal of June 27th, giving some account of a new political secret organization of that city called "The Enlisted Men." The leaders of this organization are represented as office-hungry plunderers, the vice-president having served two years in the penitentiary for forgery. This order may never achieve the success of the "Grand Army," or of the grange, in politics, but the fact of its existence for this avowed purpose is alarming. The "Grand Army of the Republic has been found out and its capacity and actual use for political chicanery has sunk it in some of the States, but it yet flourishes in New York. Seven new organizations and 1,200 members are reported in that State for the last six months.

—One of the leading newspapers of the country, the Cincinnati Daily Commercial, of July 10th, 1874, contains the following protest against the laying of the corner-stone of the Chicago Custom-House by Freemasons, and the exposure of theft of a valuable painting by "brothers of the mystic tie" in Cincinnati. Murat Halstead, editor and proprietor of the Commercial, does not believe in secret societies.

A QUESTION WE CAN'T ANSWER.

"Chicago has laid the corner-stone of her new Custom-House with grand Masonic ceremonies. A beautiful set of implements was provided for the occasion, of which the most noticeable were a $200 gavel of ebony and ivory, mounted with gold, and a silver trowel costing $75, helved and ornamented with similar materials."

To the Editor of the Commercial:

By what right or authority does the Masonic order assume the right to direct and control the public ceremony of laying the corner-stone of any public building, the common property of the people, and to be paid for with money taken out of the Treasury of the United States? The Masonic body represents but a small minority of this country, and it is in antagonism to a large majority of the voters, yet on all occasions like that at Chicago it has most presumptuously assumed the direction and control of a purely public ceremony, placing its tools and emblems, at the public expense, as the chief memorials, in the corner-stone of a building the property of the whole people of the United States. It is about time that the pretentious assumptions of this anti-democratic fraternity should be looked to by the outside millions. As a Cincinnati specimen, about thirty years ago a large number of Ohio Democrats, as such, raised a fund by subscription, and sent Miner T. Kellogg to the Hermitage to print for them a portrait of General Jackson, which he did, and it was one of his finest pictures. It remained on public view for nearly a year, and was then spirited into a Masonic Lodge hereabouts, and the general outside subscribers have not been permitted to look at it since. This is hardly "on the square."

Religious Intelligence.

—The Young Men's Christian Associations of Illinois hold their second annual convention in Aurora, commencing August 6th.

—An Indian camp-meeting is to be held near the village of Saugeen, Canada, commencing August 13. The meeting is appointed by order of the Methodist Indian Council.

—It was estimated that about 10,000 people attended the camp-meeting at Embury Park, near Dayton, O., last Sunday. The services lasted twelve hours, and were conducted in English and German.

—There are about 150 Presbyterian ministers in India, connected with churches in Europe and America, who minister to a Christian community of not less than 30,000, of whom 8,000 are the fruits of missionary labor.

—A powerful revival last winter in Fulton, Mo., made an addition of over a hundred members to the Presbyterian church. Nearly all the students of Westminister College not already converted were brought to Christ.

—Mr. Shreve, a clergyman of Locus Bottom, Va., was lately about to engage in family worship during a thunder storm, when himself and wife were struck with lightning and instantly killed. Others in the room were uninjured.

—There are about 470 churches, chapels and mission-houses in this city, N. Y. If all who are old and well enough were to go to church to-morrow, it is estimated that about 150,000 persons would not find seats, and would be forced to stand in the aisles or stay outside the doors.

—Monmouth College has an endowment of nearly one hundred thousand dollars, only four thousand are lacking. Prof. E. H. Reed, President of the Central College, Ohio, has accepted the professorship of Latin and Hebrew lately resigned by Dr. Doig.

—The Reformed Episcopal church has two organizations in the Province of New Brunswick lately established. Bishop Cummins, the founder of the church has lately been formally deposed from the office of bishop in the Protestant Episcopal church of America.

—Forty-eight thousand persons have been added to the membership of the United Brethren church through the agency of its Missionary Society, which was organized in 1853. The Society has a debt of $5,000 which will soon be removed if present efforts are an indication.

—A great Sunday-school convention was opened at Chautauqua Lake, N. Y., on Tuesday. A part of the grounds are prepared to represent Palestine, a Biblical museum is erected, and some of the most noted Sunday-school men and preachers of the country are to be present.

—The ship which carried the first Baptist missionaries to India, fifty years ago, also carried a sailor-boy, named James Christie, who was converted during the voyage. The sailor-boy rose in due time to be a Christian captain, and at his recent death, in Albion, N. Y., bequeathed $10,000 to the Baptist Missionary Union.

—The Prussian Protestant Church Gazette speaks of the dwindling number of students of divinity at the German Universities. It fears that if the decrease continues, half the Protestant churches in Prussia will be without ministers. The principal difficulty is the lack of sufficient salary and the consequent liability of starvation.

—A meeting for the discussion of "ministerial Christianity unity" was held in New Bedford, Bureau Co., Ill., June 24th, and conducted by clergymen from the Wesleyan, Free Methodist, United Brethren and Methodist Episcopal denominations, and was of an interesting and profitable nature, A permanent organization was formed and will hold its next meeting at Manlius Ill., August 25th and 26th.

—The open-air meeting of England is a different institution from the American camp-meeting. With us, the attendants on camp-meetings pitch their tents and stay several days. The English open-air meetings are generally held in the fields or in groves, and only for a day at a time. Sometimes the preaching is from a stand erected for the occasion; sometimes from a wagon or a rock. The people come with their lunch-baskets, prepared to stay all day and go home in the evening. Often there is a deep religious interest among the people at these meetings, and many conversions follow.

—The ladies of one of the Boston churches have undertaken the work of removing worthless books from Sunday-school libraries. It is said that out of 4,000 examined, only 1,000 have been accepted. Other churches had better follow this example. An immense amount of worthless trash is to be found in many of our Sunday-school libraries, and more harm than can be estimated is done thereby. The sensational novel is just at harmful, whether it comes from the Sunday-school or the news-stand, and yet our young people, and sometimes the parents, are apt to justify the reading of such books on the ground that nothing hurtful can come from such a good institution.

—The Bethany Institute of New York is an institution for the training of Christian women for humane and missionary work in this and other lands. The practical knowledge needed for nurses, city missionaries, and religious teachers generally, is acquired, not only by lectures and oral instruction by eminent professors, but by three hours' daily practice. The Institute is at 69 Second avenue, corner of Fourth street, Rev. A. F. Ruliffson, Superintendent. No charge is made for tuition of accepted members, their daily service in philanthropic work meeting their expenses at the Institute. Last year twenty-seven were in training, and positions of usefulness are waiting for more than that number of ladies to-day in New York, to say nothing of the calls from other cities and other lands.

News of the Week.

The City.

Last week from 3:30 o'clock on Wednesday to 4.15 the next day there were no less than thirteen fire alarms sounded in Chicago, all of them for actual fires and four for serious conflagrations. The largest fire was a wholesale grocery, No. 57 and 59 South Water Street, the rear extending back to the ally from Wabash Avenue which flanks the building occupied by E. A. Cook & Co., publishers of the Cynosure. The burning building was only the second from this office. Two heavy brick walls intervened however, and the efforts of the fire department confined the fire to the three upper stories of the burning building. The loss on building and contents is placed at $40,000. Many of the late fires are believed to be the work of incendiaries. There is much fault found with the insurance companies; a number of these are bogus affairs with little capital, but plenty of officers and agents to feed. These insure without scruple or regard to valuation of property, and thus present a temptation to incendiary owners. The whole business of fire risks and fire fighting evidently needs reorganization in Chicago.———The Common Council, as was presumed at the time of their election, have taken steps for the erection of the new City Hall by electing two architects last week Monday. These were a German and an Irishman, political men merely, for neither of their plans had the first award. The Tribune soon showed the illegality of the proceeding, and to calm the public, the Council at their next meeting elected a third architect. Rumors have been current of heavy briberies in the matter, which are not unprecedented with Chicago aldermen.———To offset municipal abuse a Citizen's Association has lately been formed whose object is not political, but to further the interests of the city in aiding the administration of law, perfecting arrangements for prevention of loss by fire, and furthering enterprises of importance. Many of the leading citizens are connected with the Association.——In spite of a State law against them, two "corners" in grain were engineered through last month. The culmination and settlement on Friday last was marked by great excitement among the grain gamblers. The price of corn, to be delivered, by warehouse receipts, during July, was run up to 90 cts. from 66 cts., the closing price of the day before. Oats fluctuated from 53 to 85 cts during the day. It is likely these speculations have aided the country at the expense of the gamblers, as millions of bushels have been moved, and it is estimated that on corn alone 8 cts. per bushel will be realized on 12,000,000 bushels by the farmers of the north-west.

The Home Circle.

Mrs. Teredo and her Family.

"This," said Deacon Hays, "is probably the last ship I shall ever build, and I intend to have her as perfect as possible."

So he selected a beautiful model, and knowing that the owner wanted something very superior, he spared no time nor money in procuring the best timber to be had, and the best workmen to be found. And then he watched over every stick as it was hewn and fitted in its place, every plank that was spiked on the timbers, and every spar that was prepared. When they came to put the copper sheathing over the bottom of the ship, the deacon watched it very closely. At one spot he found the head of the iron nail which fastened the sheathing split. The deacon's eyes were becoming rather poor; but he saw the broken head.

"Jim Spiker, I see a nail broken, isn't there a little hole by its side?"

"Not a bit of it, I'm sartin. There couldn't a drop of water get in there in a century."

So the word of Jim was accepted, the ship was finished, and launched, and made two or three prosperous voyages. During one of these, she lay at a wharf in Calcutta. Now these waters swarm with little pests, the ship-worm. They crawled all over the ship, but could not get through the copper sheathing. At length Mrs. Teredo, a very small specimen of her tribe, lit upon the broken nail, found the little hole, and squeezed herself in. Then she began to eat the timber, and lay her eggs in it. Soon they hatched, and increased till that timber was full of the little Teredoes, and then the next, till every stick in the whole ship was full, and eaten almost into powder. Still the ship looked sound, sailed well, and made her long voyages. At length, when in the middle of the great ocean, a terrible storm met her. The wind howled through the rigging, as if singing a funeral dirge. The waves rolled and writhed as if in agony. Every spar was bent, and every timber and spike strained to the utmost. The cargo which filled the ship was of immense value. The crew was large, and the passengers many. Worse and worse grew the storm, till at last a huge wave struck her with all its power. The poor ship staggered, groaned once, and crumpled up like a piece of paper. She foundered—at sea—in the dark night—by the awful storm! The rich cargo all went to the bottom of the ocean. The drowned men and women sank down, down—miles before they rested on the bottom! All done through the neglect of Jim Spiker, who was too unfaithful to mend the hole by the broken nail.

There were watchings and anxieties by those on shore— all wondering why the richly-laden ship did not arrive. The cargo and ship were all gone, and many were made poor, because the broken nail was not replaced!

The wife waited long and tearfully for the husband, the children longed for the father who never came. The little hole had been left!

The poor widow who depended on her only son, a kind, dutiful, manly youth, her stay and staff—looked out of her humble dwelling in vain. Her boy never came. The nail had been broken!

Scores of homes were desolated, and many had their earthly hopes crushed by the sinking of that ship, and all because the little hole was left! Mrs. Teredo and her great family had never brought all this ruin had not Jim Spiker been unfaithful.

O how often is a child ruined by some neglect as to his temper, his easily besetting sin! The little foxes creep in easily and spoil the vines. The worm that eats up character and wrecks all the hopes of life can crawl into a very small hole. A mother neglected to punish or even reprove her boy for stealing an egg, and that neglect, as he said on the gallows, brought him to that shameful death. A single bow or a single smile may win the good will of a child, that will lead him to Christ. A single visit to the sick-chamber, to the Sabbath-school scholar—a single conversation or a single word dropped, may result in the salvation or the ruin of an immortal soul. The spiritual teredoes are multitudinous, and they enter any hole, however small, and sink the ship. All great effects grow out of small beginnings. The loosening of a single grain of sand may end in the sweeping away the dam, carrying off the mills, and ruining a village. Beware of the first lewd word, the first profane expression, the first taste of strong drink, the first neglect of your Bible, the first neglect of prayer, the first breaking of the Sabbath. You are leaving holes for the Toredo family to ruin you forever.—Exchange.

Hiding Behind Jesus.

About fifteen years ago a student in the Theological Seminary in Columbia, being on a visit of a few days to a venerable and beloved minister of Harmony Presbytery, was invited by him to conduct the usual Friday afternoon prayer-meeting at the "church in the woods" as he was wont to call it, situated about half a mile from his residence. The young man consented, and selected as the basis of his remarks the first ten verses of the second chapter of Matthew, showing that from the very beginning of his life upon earth Jesus was the victim of persecution, pain and sorrow, and that in him, whom continued opposition and persecution failed to destroy, was the sinner's hope for acceptance with God and eternal life. At the close of the meeting, and when the congregation had dispersed, the venerable father deliberately locked the doors of the church on the inside, invited the young man into the pulpit, carefully and tenderly removed the linen cloth that protected the Bible from the dust, and then bade him stand in the place where he himself was accustomed to stand Sabbath after Sabbath. After a pause he asked his young friend: "What do you see?" "Nothing but empty benches," was the reply. "Just what I wanted you to see," said the minister. "And now, my young brother, you have done a great thing. A little while ago these benches were full of life. Precious souls were there, and you were feeding them. You held up Jesus to them and they have gone away to think about him, and, I hope to love and trust him more. Let me urge you to hold up Jesus always before you. Hold him up so that the people can see him and only him. The devil will often tempt you to show a little bit of yourself—your head or your hand or little finger. But don't let him deceive you. The more you show of yourself, the less will Jesus be seen. Hide behind Jesus, my young brother, hide every bit of yourself behind him. Don't let the people see that you are there, but only Jesus, and the Lord will bless you in saving souls."—Selected.

Worldliness —the Great Sin.

If I were called to point out the most alarming sins to-day—those which are most deceitful in their influence, and most soul-destroying in their ultimate effects—I would not mention drunkenness with all its fearful havoc, nor gambling with its crazed victims, nor harlotry with its hellish orgies; but the love of money on the part of men, and the love of display on the part of women. While open vice sends its thousands, these fashonable and favored indulgences send their ten thousands to perdition. They sear the conscience, incrust the soul with an impenetrable shell of worldliness, debauch the affection from every high and heavenly object, and make man or woman the worshiper of self. While doing all this, the poor victim is allowed by public opinion to think himself or herself a Christian; while the drunkard, the gambler, or the prostitute is not deceived by such a thought for a moment. —Dr. Crosby.

Music as an Element of Worship.

There is, perhaps, no subject in the world which has been more misapprehended than music in its connection with Divine worship. In our principal churches it is neither participated in by pastors or congregations. The beauty of churches pleases the eye, but the music is not comprehended or appreciated. Ought we not to use any legitimate means to draw people to places of worship and raise them nearer to God? When the weary week of labor is ended, and we rise on the Sabbath morning to that solemn and peaceful sense of quiet which pervades the air, and we march to church to the sound of Sabbath bells, we are in a frame of mind in which our emotional nature is most easily acted on. Religion in its highest sense is emotional. In the musical worship of God we have one of our highest sources of emotional power known to the world. I have have assisted in establishing a series of free concerts in the north end of Boston. Some of the best artists have sung before an audience composed of men and women with whom your lives would scarcely be safe when their passions are aroused, and yet by the power of heavenly music I have seen these people melted into tears of repentance and grief. In mission work I have never found anything wake up the heart with more effect than music. The church has no right to disregard any means of salvation. Music as a means of worship has been in common use in all ages. It was heard in the early days of Israel. In the temple of Solomon the glorious praises of the Lord of Hosts were sung. In the New Testament the same is to be observed. Our Saviour commends music to us. St. Paul advises the choral worship of God. The early church recognized song in the practice of devotion. Dur the first three hundred years of the Christian church nothing but congregational singing was known. In the year 315, choral services were first celebrated. After that, in the dark ages of the church, to more completelly exclude the congregation, the singing was rendered in Latin, and the whole worship of God was surrendered to the priests. In the sixteenth century Martin Luther appeared and roused the whole world by singing with uplifted voice the praises of God. In Germany, both choir and congregational singing is practiced. In America, with but few exceptions, the singing is confided to the choir, and the congregation sits mute and criticises its efforts. We should have church music that the congregation with one accord can join in. A great mistake is made by those who in congregational singing look for exact time, or even tune. The very roughness of it is part of its charm. No true musician will object to it because it is rude. Nor will He to whom it is offered condemn its rude simplicity. The union of choir and congregational singing will be found the most effective, the choir to lead, sustain and supply the harmony. I visited Berlin, some few years ago, and there in the great church, where the music had been supplied by Mendelssohn, artistic and beautiful beyond anything I ever conceived, the congregation, numbering over three thousand, rose and burst into the glorious melody, "For a Strong Castle is our Lord," with irresistable power. I was overcome, and stood motionless, over-powered by the new revelation that had entered my soul, and my humble efforts since have been to make congregational singing the strength and power of our worship. But how is congregational singing to be produced? Grown up people say they cannot sing. But very few children are unable to sing. It remains for the church, by the aid of children's voices to foster the spirit of song. The house of God ought to be resonant with children's voices. Let the clergy be educated in music. Who, if not they, should initiate the great reform? Luther says, next to theology sacred music has the highest place in religion. The inappropriateness of most of the music furnished in our churches leads the thoughts astray from God. The music of the concert-room and the opera is not fit for the house of God.—Tourjee.

Martin Luther on Evil Spirits.

We should, therefore, with good confidence hold up these three witnesses of the Scriptures to the rapping spirits. First, Moses, who says, Deut. 18, 11: "There shall not be found among you a necromancer" (or one that asks the dead.) Second, Isaiah, who says, chap. 8, v. 20: Thou shalt rather seek to the law and to the testimony than to the dead. Third, Abraham and Christ, Luke 16, 29: "They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them."

. . . . . .

All this is the earnings and wages of our prying spirit, which did not content itself with God's Scripture, and considered our faithful God and Father a fool and a joker who undertook to teach us in his Scripture whilst he did not know how to teach us what we need to know. He therefore does right in letting us become the devil's scholars, since we despise his school. You then say: Are we not to believe that wandering spirits stray about and seek help? I answer: Let wander what is wandering; you hear what your God commands you. If you regard all these spirits with suspicion, you commit no sin at all; but if you regard one of them a good one, you are already in danger of erring. Why so? Because God will not have you learn from the dead and seek unto them for the truth. He himself will be your living and all-sufficient teacher. Hold to his word. He knows very well what he must tell you about the dead and the living; for he knows all things. But what he does or will not tell you, you should not desire to know, and show him so much honor as to believe that he knows it is not necessary, useful, nor good for you to know it. . . The words of God upon which you should bravely stand are recorded, Luke 16, 31, where Abraham spoke with the rich man in hell when he desired the dead Lazarus to be sent to his living brethren upon the earth, and refused him his petition, and said: "They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them." From which text it clearly follows that God will not teach us through the dead, but have us bound to his Scriptures. Therefore, in whatever manner or place a spirit comes to you, do not ask at all whether he be a bad or a good spirit, but without any ceremony and with contempt thrust this word under his nose bravely: "They have Moses and the prophets," and he will soon feel what you mean. . . If it be a good spirit, he will like you so much the better, because you tell him God's word fearlessly and cheerfully; if he be not a good one, as they all are that knock or rap, he will soon say: Good bye! The other word is recorded, Deut. 18, 9–11, where God says: "When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of the nations. There shall not be found among you a necromancer." Here you hear that it is a heathen abomination to ask the dead or the spirits, and that it is sharply forbidden. It is on account of this word that Abraham will not let Lazarus go to the living. Hence you can use this text against these spirits and say: God says, Thou shalt not ask the dead (or be a necromancer.) God has stiffly seen to it that there might be no example or history in the Scriptures, in which the saints asked anything of the dead.

Dr. Martin Luther was asked: When king Saul desired the witch to let Samuel appear, was it the real prophet Samuel that appeared? 1 Sam. 28, 14. He answered: No, it was a ghost and evil spirit; and this is proved by the fact that God has forbidden in Moses, Deut. 18, 10–12, to ask the dead for the truth ("necromancer.") It was only a spectre of the devil in the form of the man of God, just as the abbot of Spanheim, a sorcerer and necromancer, brought it to pass that Emperor Maximilian saw all the dead emperors and mighty heroes pass in his chamber one after the other, just as each one looked and was clothed in his life-time, among whom were Alexander the Great, Julius Cæsar, and Emperor Maximilian's bride, whom Charles VIII., king of France, had taken away from him. (Table Talk. W. xxii. 1174–1175.

Too Much Drudgery in Churches.—An estimable Christian woman writes in a private letter at the close of the year and says, in summing matters in her own immediate neighborhood:

"Looking from my standpoint to-day, I am convinced that Christian women are overworked by churches in these times. It is drive, drive, drive, and we are kept at fever heat, doing some big thing all the time. Is it right? That is the question. Talk about "the extravagance of dress!" Look at the church-dinners, festivals and everything else. Where will it end? I believe there is more sin than religion in much of the church work now-a-days. If the noble women who are dropping down with paralysis, or committing self-destruction, could only rest and have more quiet, I believe that these cases of slow suicide would diminish. I candidly think it calls for reformation as much as any evil of the day. I believe in progress and activity, but the tendency now is to excess."—Ex.

Mercy and Truth.—Mercy must be joined with truth. Truth, in that respect that we think it our duty to exercise a just severity as well as to apply kindness and mercy. And truly, righteousness and mercy must kiss each other. If we will have peace without a worm in it, lay we foundations of justice and righteousness. And if it shall please God to move you, that you marry this redoubtable couple together, mercy and truth, righteousness and peace, you will, if I may be free to say so, be blessed whether you will or no. —Oliver Cromwell, in a speech before Parliament.

Love is the crowning of grace and humanity, the holiest right of the soul, the golden link which binds us to duty and truth, the redeeming principle that chiefly reconciles the heart to life, and is prophetic of eternal good.—Petrarch.

Children's Corner.

Saturday Night.

Placing the little hats all in a row,
Ready for church on the morrow, you know;
Washing wee faces and little black fists,
Getting them ready and fit to be kissed;
Putting them into clean garments and white,—
That is what mothers are doing to-night.

Spying out holes in the little worn hose,
Laying by shoes that are worn through the toes,
Looking o'er garments so faded and thin,—
Who but a mother knows where to begin?
Changing a button to make it look right,—
That is what mothers are doing to-night.

Calling the little ones all round her chair,
Hearing them lisp forth their soft ev'ning prayer,
Telling them stories of Jesus of old,
Who loved to gather the lambs to his fold;
Watching, they listen with dreamy delight,—
That is what mothers are doing to-night.

Creeping so softly to take a last peep,
After the little ones all are asleep;
Anxious to know if the children are warm,
Tucking the blanket round each little form;
Kissing each little face, rosy and bright,—
This is what mothers are doing to-night.

Kneeling down gently beside the white bed,
Lowly and meekly she bows down her head,
Praying as only a mother can pray,
"God guide and keep them from going astray;
God help them always to strive for the best;
And, after this turmoil, God give them rest."

Obedience.

Little boys and girls, unless you have the mind of Christ you cannot be obedient. This you say is strange. I certainly can be if I want to. Can you? God says, "Your heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." With such a heart can you be obedient? No, you must have a new heart. This Christ gives to all who believe in him. With the heart that he gives, you have him; and if you think of him, if you are occupied with him, you can have no mind of your own, but the mind of Christ; no will of your own, but like that blessed Jesus it will be said, "He pleased not himself."

A great many boys and girls have wills of their own. They like to do as they please. They are not obedient. They promise to do better next time, but their sinful hearts desire to do their own will. As long as you let them do as they please they are happy, but let papa or mamma speak to them to try to have them do their will, and now soon trouble comes. They have a will of their own; they have a mind, but it is not the mind of Christ. With brothers and sisters they must have their own will; with playmates, no will but their own. They must have a great deal of mind, but not the mind of Christ. I was talking with a friend, the other day, when a young girl came up and spoke to her. As she turned away my friend said to me: She has but little mind, but she knows the dear Jesus, always talking of him. She does a great deal for him. O, I thought, here is no mind, but a heart full of Christ. O that we each had less mind of our own and more the mind of Christ, occupied not with ourselves, but with Christ!—Selected.

Learning will accumulate wonderfully if you add a little every day. Do not wait for a long period of leisure. Pick up the book and gain one new idea, if no more. Save that one and add another as soon as you can. Says the old Scotch adage: "Many a little makes a mickle."

Maggie's Fault.

I have a little girl whose great fault is forgetting. She forgets to hang up her dresses; she forgets to put buttons on her shoes; she forgets where she left her mittens, or the hammer, or her thimble; she forgets to do her errands; she forgets to come home when she is told to. Yet she always seems sorry when I talk to her, and means, I think, to improve, but she does not. Every week, if it finds her no worse, does not find her better. I often wonder how it happens. In other respects Maggie is a good girl. She is an industrious little girl, and speaks the truth. But all these fine qualities are almost spoiled by forgetfulness. It leads to much disorder, as you may suppose. I should not like you to see her room; and I cannot depend, of course, that what I tell her will be done. I could not for a long time think now she could forget so. I have found it out now; the Bible told me. God says in it: "My son, forget not my law; but let thine heart keep my commandments." Whatever is done from the heart is done quickly, and done well. Poor Maggie, alas! has no heart in it, therefore she forgets and disobeys. And many a mother is grieving over this same fault in her dear child; and perhaps many a poor child is grieving for it too. "How shall I remember what mother says?" "How came I to forget?"—feeling ashamed, and sorry, and mortified as can be. My dear child, I can only tell you to fall down on your knees before God, and beg him to give you that "new heart" which the Bible tells of, filled with the spirit of humble, faithful love. That will remember; that will try hard, and will assuredly succeed, you may depend upon it.—Christian Union.

Strike the Knot.

"Strike the knot!" said a gentleman one day to his son, who, tired and weary, was leaning on his axe over a log which he had been trying to cleave. Then looking at the log, the gentleman saw how the boy had hacked and chipped around the knot without hitting it. Taking the axe, he struck a few sharp blows on the knot and split the log without difficulty. Smiling, he returned the axe to his son, saying:

"Always strike the knot!"

That was good advice. It is good for you, my children, as it was for the boy to whom it was first given. It is a capital maxim to follow when in trouble. Have you a hard sum to do at school? Have you to face a difficulty? Are you leaving home to live for the first time among strangers? Strike the knot! Look your trouble in the eye, as the bold lion-hunter looks in the face of the lion. Never shrink from a painful duty, but step right up to it and do it. Yes, strike the knot! boys and girls, and you will always conquer your difficulties.

and the impressions it makes on an, as I trust, impartial, though interested observer. H. A. FISCHER.

Elder Knapp, the Evangelist.

DELEVAN, Wis., July 17, 1874.

Editor of the Cynosure:

I have noticed several sketches recently of the life of the great evangelist, Elder Jacob Knapp; but none in which full credit is given him. Being personally acquainted with him I can safely say he was no policy man. On all the reform questions his position was clear and marked. At one time, in 1841 or '2, he was holding a meeting at Richmond, Va. A good degree of interest was secured and many asked prayers. Elder K. drew the line of reciprocal duties so clearly that after meeting a committee waited on him to ask him to modify his discourse, saying, "Our people will not bear it." He replied, "I came here to preach God's truth; I shall preach nothing less." Unable to bear his searching truth they chose to have him leave; and thus ended the revival.

So, upon secrecy his converts were faithfully warned. At the close of a meeting held at Delevan in the winter of 1863, he bade the converts beware of secret societies, and in particular of Masonry, which he said was objectionable: first, from its horrid oaths; secondly, because it excludes Christ. He closed by urging the converts to never go where Christ could not be introduced. Thus our cause has lost one more faithful friend. E. L. HARRIS.

Questions for Anti-masons.

There are three ways in which the lodge will seek to deaden and destroy the reform movement which our association has undertaken. One of these ways will be to lie low, keep dark, and say nothing about our movement, trying to kill it by silent contempt. Another way will be to bring to bear the silent, secret influence of the lodge upon the newspaper press and the pulpit of the country. Threatening them through hints, winks, and thunderous frowns with the disapprobation of the sly craft if they dare to utter a word in favor of Anti-masonic reform, and finally, the third way will be, to be more active in pushing forward their own lectures, under the new guise of the grange, pretending to be great friends of the farmers all at once.

Will the readers of the Cynosure please to give us information on the following points:

1. Dare the newspapers of your county ever to point, grave, mark etc., anything against Masonry?
2. How many times a year do they print puffs for Masonry.
3. Does any preacher of your town ever dare to raise his voice against the foulest and most blasphemous iniquity of the age, viz., Masonry.
4. Does not your news-vender always have Masonic books to sell, which he will furnish you with smiles and favor?
5. Did you ever see a news depot where, if you should ask for Anti-masonic works, you would not be treated with insolence? ANTIMASON.

A Masonic Minister's Defense.

WEST UNITY, O., July 24, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

In your issue July 2d is a communication from "Otterbein" that seems to have provoked the ire,—or the mirth, we can hardly tell which from his article,— of the Rev. J. R. Colgan, pastor of the M. E. church of our place, to such an extent that he forgets his Masonic jewel, a silent tongue, and goes into print. As to the controversy, we have nothing to say, not being acquainted with the circumstances, only the spirit of his article and some of his admissions.

He starts out with a joke on the rebel flag, and concludes by calling the Cynosure "The Christian dog's tail;" says that is what it means in Greek, and of course he ought to know. He thinks Diabolus would have been the "emblematic" signature of such an article. He concludes that the author is one Snyder, formerly a U. B. minister of our place, and adds, "his machine failed to run with much force in this region." So much for the humorous part of it.

In reference to the lodge, or lodges, he writes, "I am hapy to own that I have been a member of all of the temperance societies, both open and secret, that I could find;" and "in my way from Entered Apprentice to that of Royal Arch, I find nothing that I feel to be inconsistent with my calling. The same is true of Odd-fellowship."

We have perhaps attached too much dignity to the sacred calling, possibly more than it deserves, certainly more than the Rev. Mr. Colgan does; for we do think that it would be inconsistent with a much lower calling for a man to enter a lodge composed, in part at least, of scoffers, skeptics, libertines, and drunkards, and there suffer himself to be divested of his clothing, and thus suffer himself to be led about the room in search of light, and to have an oath administered to him, binding him, among other things, to keep a brother Mason's secrets, if given to him as such, murder and treason excepted, and these left to his election. We have always thought that the exception (if it be an exception) showed what the nature of the secrets would be most likely to be. Why not swear him to keep a brother's secrets, feeding the hungry, and defending the right only excepted, and these left to my election? Every school boy knows that secrets are not generally of that kind, and that the man would generally elect to tell them. We do not consider it inconsistent with the sacred calling, for a minister to take an oath not to violate the chastity of any man's wife, daughter, sister or mother, or suffer it to be done in his presence if the person really thinks it necessary for the safety of community that he bind himself thus; but to confine it to the female relatives of a Master Mason, instead of making it universal, is in our estimation beneath the dignity of any one who has made any considerable progress in the "Darwinian" scale of development. We think it beneath the dignity of an embassador of Christ to remain with an organization that deems it unwise to pledge its support of the suppression of evil. Now listen to the M. W. Grand Master of Masons in Ohio, under date of April 18th, 1874. "That the evils of intemperance are among the greatest with which the earth is cursed, is not to be denied. Intemperance in the use of alcoholic drinks is evil only and evil continually, without a single palliating circumstance or a particle of benefit to counterbalance, or counteract it. It is productive of wretchedness, ruin, crime, misery, starvation and moral and physical death." To which we trust every reader of the Cynosure is ready to respond, Amen. But what is the duty of the lodge in the case? In the same letter he says: "As lodges, it is unwise in my opinion to pledge by resolution or otherwise, our support and influence to any particular organization having for its object the suppression of evil," signed, Asa H. Battin, Grand Master. We copy from the Toledo Blade.

We all know the influence of the lodge; some of us have felt it; probably none more than the friends of the Cynosure, and yet it is unwise, according to the highest Masonic authority in the State of Ohio, to pledge that influence to save the world from moral death, and nothing inconsistent with the sacred calling.

He says, "Any one has the privilege of hating secret societies." If this had always been the sentiment of the lodge, Morgan might have died a natural death; good old Elder Bernard's last visit to the lodge during the Morgan excitement might not have been so "horribly interesting" as he described it to us at Syracuse; John Levington might still be preaching the Gospel; Rathbun might have one less scar; our lecturers would be free from insult, and their friends free from anxiety as to their personal safety. [CONTINUED FROM PAGE 9.]

The Country.

The grass-hoppers are extending their visit eastward through Minnesota and it is feared they will reach Wisconsin and perhaps Illinois on their devastating route before the flying season is past. Great quantities of them are reported in western Kansas, where they are causing wholesale destruction.——July 31st was celebrated as the Centennial of chemistry. One hundred years ago Dr. Priestly, in England, discovered oxygen, which, with the investigations of Lavoisier, in France, overthrew the then existing theories and established that now received. Priestly was driven from England and died in Northumberland, Pa., where a large number of scientists met last Friday to celebrate with appropriate exercises the interesting occasion.——M. L. Sullivan, the great Illinois farmer, is expecting to gather a million bushels of corn from a 20,000 acre field next fall.——Twenty cases of sun stroke, one-half of them fatal, occurred in Boston last week.——Muskegon, Mich., was visited by a destructive fire on Saturday morning between 1 and 5 o'clock. About one-fourth of the city was destroyed with a loss of over $600,000, and over 200 families rendered homeless.——The Indian raids become more frequent. Reports of their late attacks come from Salt Lake, Texas and Fort Sill. The agent at Fort Totten, Dak., asks that a company of cavalry be sent there to keep the Indians in check. Another fight occurred near Jacksboro, Texas, on Saturday last, between the Montague Rangers and a body of the Tenth United States Cavalry and the Indians, the latter numbering 500. The Rangers lost twelve killed and several wounded. The cavalry lost several men and their commander killed. The report says the combined force were driven back to Jacksboro.——A waterspout burst in the mountains back of Eureka, Nevada, July 24, and a vast body of water rushed down the valley in which the town is built. Between twenty and thirty lives were lost. From a like cause the track of the Central Pacific railroad was washed away twenty-eight miles east of Humboldt Wells.——The little son of a Philadelphia merchant was kidnapped some two weeks since and no trace of him has been yet found. It is believed the villains are waiting for a large ransom.——The probable loss of life from the Pittsburgh storm is 150, and of property several millions.——The Beecher investigation will probably close during the present week. From the refusal of some witnesses to testify except under compulsion of law it is not believed this examination can be so thorough as to give general satisfaction.

The Capitol.

It is said that there is not now an employee in the Treasury Department who is not provided for by law, and the payment of whose salary is not provided for in the regular appropriation bill. It has been many years since the Treasury has been in this precise condition with reference to its large list of clerks and other employees. In rearranging his department, Secretary Bristow has found a severe task, and it is said he would have declined the position had he known its wretched condition.——From a summary of the expenses of Congress it appears that each member of that body is credited with eighty-four pounds of toilet soap during each session.——It is reported that the new District Government is walking in the ways of its predecessor, and some of the old spoilsmen are thought to yet be at work.——The new 5 per cent. loan was disposed of last week. A considerable amount was taken in New York, but the larger part by the agents of the Rothschilds.

Political.

The Democratic State Committee of Illinois has suggested a platform which is commended for its sensible points. It strongly advocates specie payments.—The New York Times having lately shown an independent spirit, a new journal to support the administration is about to be started in New York.—There is considerable excitement in Minnesota at the nomination of Dunnell, by the Republicans for re-election to Congress. He is one of the "salary-grabbers."

Foreign.

The assistance rendered the Carlists of Spain by France, is exciting much attention among the European governments, and there is a considerable movement towards recognizing the republic of Spain. It is reported that a loan of $6,000,000 has been commenced for the Carlists in Paris. A manufactory has been allowed to undertake contracts for supplying the Carlist army with boots and shoes. Thousands of armed recruits have crossed the frontier for the Carlists and two cargoes of arms from France have been landed for them.——German dispatches state that Bismarcks health is improving——The Roman Catholic Bishop, of Poen, has been arrested for violation of the ecclesiastical laws, and been condemned to 15 months' imprisonment.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion.

The sacred Scriptures require us to "Prove all things and hold fast that which is good." (1 Thess. v. 21.) In carrying out this injunction I was led to investigate the history, principles and tendency of speculative Freemasonry; and after a somewhat protracted examination of the subject, I finally came to the conclusion that it is the most enormous system of humbuggery, delusion and blasphemy ever invented by the devil.

We have no record of any other system so well adapted to impose on the credulity of mankind and lead them down to eternal ruin. It appears to be composed of lies from stem to stern; it is founded in lies; its whole superstructure is lies; and it is propagated by lies. Its boasted antiquity is all lies from beginning to end. Not a trace of it can be found in the Holy Scriptures; not a trace of it in the Apocryphal writings, nor in the Targum or Talmud or any other Rabbinical writings of the Jews; not a word about it in the writings of Josephus, who, as a historian, was very minute in giving an exact account of all the institutions, sects, and parties, whether civil or religious, in the Jewish nation. How did it happen that he never wrote a word about Freemasonry? Plainly because it did not exist in his day. Freemasons tell us the institution existed in the days of Solomon, and yet the words of Jesus (Matt. xviii. 20) are quoted in the first degree, and these words were not uttered till 1,000 years after the death of Solomon. In the third degree we have the names of three ruffians, Jubela, Jubelo, Jubelum; now these are Latin names, and we know there was no Latin in Palestine in the days of Solomon. The language used by the Jews was Hebrew. On a close investigation I found fifty-seven lies in the third degree alone, which I am prepared to exhibit and prove if necessary. In the lecture on the fourth degree we are told that that degree was founded by King Solomon, Hiram, King of Tyre, and Hiram Abiff. In this degree quotations are made from the New Testament which clearly shows the falsehood of the pretended antiquity of the degree. The Jews were certainly wicked enough without saddling them with the invention of the infernal system of speculative Freemasonry. It was invented by Gentiles in a grogshop in London, July 24, 1717. I shall show that Freemasonry is as far from the Christian religion as the North Pole is from the South, and that the one can no more associate with the other than light and darkness, or oil with water.

1. The doctrines and principles of the Christian religion are to be proclaimed openly and publicly to all the world. Under the Jewish dispensation the Divine Being said "I have not spoken in secret from the beginning." (Is. xliii. 16.) Our blessed Savior said, "I spake openly to the world * * * and in secret have I said nothing." (John xviii. 20.) And when he sent out his apostles to establish the Christian church he said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark xvi. 15.) It may be confidently affirmed that God never requires anything to be kept secret that emanates from him.

Freemasons, on the contrary, are sworn to conceal their principles from a very large majority of the human race. The Entered Apprentice, stripped all but his shirt and a pair of drawers, blindfolded, with a rope around his neck, on his left knee, with the left hand under the Holy Bible, square and compass, and his right hand on the top of them, says, "I most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that I will always hail, ever conceal, and never reveal, any part or parts, art or arts, point or points of secrets, arts and mysteries of ancient Freemasonry, which I have received, am about to receive, or may hereafter be instructed in, * * * binding myself under no less penalty than to have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots," etc. The penalties annexed to the higher degrees are equally ferocious and barbarous. Among those denied the benefits (?) of Freemasonry are, boys under age, all women, old men, cripples, etc. On a moderate calculation nine-tenths of the human family are absolutely excluded from the institution of Freemasonry. The very fact that secrecy is essential to its existence is prima facie evidence of its diabolical origin.

2. The Christian religion discards and rejects all use of the sword, as being inimical to the principles, object, nature and design of the Christian system. In the millennium, and when the kingdom of Christ is fully established, "the people shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up the sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Isa. ii. 4.) All use of the sword is excluded from the kingdom of Christ. (Matt. xxvi. 52.)

Freemasons, on the contrary, use the sword as an essential element in their institution. We see it naked in the hand of the tyler at the door of every lodge room. It is exhibited in all their public processions; in their laying the corner-stone of public buildings, etc. The Knights Templars kneeling on two cross-swords with their hands on the Bible on which two cross-swords are laid, "Promise and swear to use their sword" in defense of the Christian religion. Poor, deluded fanatics!—binding themselves with a barbarous oath to use the armor of Satan in defense of the religion of Christ, not knowing that Christ rejects both their oath and their sword. Should they fail to fulfil their oath, they forfeit their lives. The penalty is to have the head struck off and placed on the highest spire in Christendom!

3. The Christian religion positively forbids all swearing [except as prescribed by law.—PUB.] The great Head of the Church has said, "Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is God's throne; nor by the earth, for it is his footstool; neither by Jerusalem, for it is the city of the great King. Neither shalt thou swear by thy head, because thou canst not make one hair white or black." (Matt. v. 34-36. The apostle James says "Above all things, my brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath." Jas. v. 12.

Freemasons, on the contrary, have their whole system interlarded with oaths of the most ferocious and profane description. They are interposed between each degree, and operate as cement to hold the heterogeneous mass together. A greater mixture of discordant elements perhaps never met in one mass. It includes the follies of heathendom, the ceremonies of Judaism—long since set aside by the light of divine revelation—perverted and misapplied quotations from the Scriptures, vain, empty, high-sounding titles and abject servility by the majority to the minority.

If the outlandish oaths that now serve to hold these discordant materials together as with a band of iron and brass were dispensed with, the whole system would go to fragments in a short time. The Entered Apprentice, in direct violation of the command of Christ, on his knees, with his hand on the Bible, says, "I promise and swear," three times; the Fellow Craft, in a similar plight, says, "I promise and swear," six times; the Master Mason says, "I promise and swear," seventeen times; the Mark Master, seven times; the Past Master, eleven times; the Most Excellent Master, seven times; the Royal Arch Mason, fourteen times. The Royal Arch Mason, counting all the lower degrees through which he has passed, has said in the presence of Almighty God, "I promise and swear," sixty-eight times; the Most Excellent Master, fifty-one times; the Past Master, forty-four times; the Mark Master, thirty-three times; the Master Mason, twenty-six times; the Fellow Craft, nine times. When the circumstances under which these oaths are taken are considered, including a rope round the neck, eyes bandaged, partial nudity, encircled with drawn swords, they must be shocking to humanity; and when their elementary principles are examined, they will be found to be contrary to the laws of God and man, and admirably adapted to overthrow all civil government and undermine the foundation of the Church of Christ.

4. The Christian religion considers all men as brethren, in subjection to one supreme head, which is Jesus Christ. "Be not ye called Rabbi (Master), for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." (Matt. xxiii. 8-10.) Christ on one occasion said, "Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am." (John xiii. 13.) "For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." (Rom. xiv. 9.) Christ is the head of the Church, which is his figurative body, and believers are members of his body in subjection to him. He has the exclusive command and control over all his servants. If other lords have the command or dominion over them, in whole or in part or degree, they are none of his." (See Eph. i. 22,—iv. 15, Col. i. 18, ii. 19.)

Freemasons, on the contrary, and in direct violation of the above command, call one another "Master," "Grand Master," "Most Excellent Master," "Worshipful Master," "Perfect Master," "Royal Master," "Prince of Mercy," "Chief Prince," "High Priest," "Grand Pontiff," "King," "Captain of the Host," "Most Puissant," "Sovereign of Sovereigns," &c. Several of these titles belong exclusively to Christ, and cannot be assumed by sinful mortals, without a degree of pride, insolence and blasphemy unsurpassed in magnitude this side the gates of the lower regions.

5. The Christian religion commands and requires all Christians to come out from among the wicked of the world and be separate. This duty is taught everywhere in the Scriptures. "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." (Ps. i. 1.) The Psalmist again says in Psalm xxvi. 4, 5, "I have not sat with vain persons, neither will I go in with dissemblers. I have hated the congregation of evil doers, and will not sit with the wicked." "Forsake the foolish and live." Prov. ix. 6. "Flee out of the midst of Babylon and deliver every man his soul." Jer. ii. 6. "A companion of fools shall be destroyed." Prov. xiii. 20. "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you." II. Cor. vi. 14. "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. Rev. xviii. 4. This is all very plain.

Freemasons, on the contrary, unite with and patronize all sorts of characters to be found this side the gates of the infernal regions. The world knows that a very large portion of the Masonic brotherhood is composed of liars, robbers, drunkards, swearers, thieves, swindlers, blasphemers, fornicators, adulterers, cutthroats, perjured persons by the thousand, Jews, Pagans, Mohammedans, barbarians, traitors, infidels, apostate Christian, rascals, Deists without number, gamblers, loafers, and murderers by the hundred. Let us hear, however, what Masons themselves have to say on the subject, as their testimony must be unquestionable. One Mason says, "The lodge is a cage of unclean birds." Another says, "It is a house of refuge for rascals and backslidden Christians." Another, "We know Masons whom we would not believe, in the lodge or out of it, under oath or without an oath." Another, "A Masonic lodge is the strangest medley of priests and murderers, deacons and whoremasters, church members and gamblers, decent men and loafers, drunkards and rowdies that the All-seeing Eye looks down upon." Judge Whitney, Worshipful Master of Belvidere Lodge, Ill., Says: "I find myself associated, as a Mason, with drunkards, blackguards, loafers, gamblers, whoremasters and murderers, and their aiders, abettors and accessories." What a society for the minister of the gospel to unite with and promise, on oath, to defend in all their criminal conduct, as every Royal Arch Mason does!

RUM AND TOBACCO.

—The Canadian Parliament have adopted a wise plan in the appointment of a committee to ascertain the operations and results of license laws for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

—Significant words are these of the London Times: "If pauperism is to be diminished, thrift encouraged, and crime depressed, half the profits of the liquor traffic, to say the least, must go." Think of it, ye apologists for drink.

—Several members have recently been expelled from the Presbyterian churches in Scotland because they would not partake of intoxicating wine at communion. An appeal has been taken to the Synod.

—Our prevailing and appalling drunkenness would soon be a thing of the past were, first, the absurd and abominable license system abolished, and "local option" kicked out of sight. Second, the dramseller forbidden to carry on his work of death and damnation—and forbidden it under effectual penalties—penalties reaching, if found necessary, even as far as confinement in the State prison. Third, and the drunkard punished as he should be, for periling by his responsible insanity the rights of others.—Gerrit Smith.

—In the United States, during the financial year 1872–3, the following amounts were paid as excise duty on intoxicating liquors and tobacco: Spirits, $52,099,372; tobacco, $34,386,303; fermented liquors, $9,324,937; total, $95,810,612. This does not include the amount raised on foreign wines, brandies, ales, whiskey, tobacco, etc., which would be very large.

—A case of tobacco poisoning occurred in New York recently and a gentleman in communicating an account of it to a journal, remarks as follows: "The victim was exactly of my own years, and a companion from early boyhood. For thirty years at least he has been a daily smoker of the choicest cigars, but in all his other habits temperate and regular, and of excellent constitution—one who, of all men, would have laughed at the suggestion that tobacco was killing him. A week ago last Sunday night he was stricken with the progressive paralysis characteristic of nicotine, and on Sunday night he died. His death was most pitiful. First, sight was lost, then speech, then motion of the neck, then motion of the arms, and so on throughout the body, and he lay for a week unable to move or make a sign, save a pitiful, tongueless, inarticulate sound, which sometimes rose to almost frantic effort, all in vain, to make known what he wished to say to his family or friends,—for his consciousness and mental faculties were left unimpaired till within two hours of the last to aggravate to the utmost the horror of his situation,—a living soul in a dead body. The sense of hearing was left unimpaired, so that he was conscious of all around him, while as incapable of communication with them as if dead, save by a slight sign of assent or dissent to a question. The doctors were fully agreed that tobacco was the sole cause of his stroke."

—The New York Tribune says: Commissoner Stern, in a report to the Bureau of Charities and Correction, makes some statements concerning habitual drunkenness in this city which ought to arrest general attention. He says that during three years ending January 1, 1874, 560 men were committed for habitual drunkenness, and that 9,006 women were committed for the same offense during the same time. These figures are appalling to contemplate. They become more so when we learn that some of these debased creatures have been "sent up" a great many times, some of them as often as 100 hundred times. More than 500 men and 9,000 women passing through the courts as confirmed drunkards! If any text for temperance sermons favoring the suppression of dram-shops were needed, it is found here.

—D. L. Moody threw a well-aimed shell into the great Christian Convention, assembled in the Free Assembly Hall, Edenburgh, a whilesince. Several noblemen and hundreds of clergymen were present. Among the practical questions proposed for Mr. Moody to answer, was this one: "What should be done in regard to the intemperance among us?" This touches Scotland right "on the raw," for the national curse is the bottle. Brother Moody gave this condensed reply: "That is a large question, and would take a long time. But as I come from a land where the ministers scarcely ever touch the infernal stuff, I think it will be a happy day for Scotland when every minister hurls the intoxicating cup from his own table. Then they would have great influence with their people."

MISCELLANEOUS.

—In Paris the consumption of horse flesh is rapidly growing. In 1867 there were 2,152 horses consumed, in 1873, 9,000; the latter including 1,092 asses, and fifty-seven mules. One establishment in 1873 converted 500 horses into sausages—for exportation, also. The price of horse flesh is about one-half that of ordinary meat.

—A Berlin correspondent of the London Times compares the armies existing in Europe in 1859 with those of to day with this result: The total army of Austria has advanced from 634,000 to 856,980; of Russia, from 1,134,200 to 1,401,510; of Italy, from 317,650 to 605,200; of Germany, from 836,000 to 1,261,160; of France, from 640,500 to 977,600; of England, from 245,800 to 478,820. The number of German troops to be used for offensive war reaches the total of 710,130 men; of the Russian 665,810; Italian, 322,000; and the French, 525,000. Von Moltke said last winter that what Germany had won in six months she must keep by watchfulness and "the hand on the sword" for fifty years.

—A great steel bridge is just completed at St. Louis. The arches of the bridge are of iron. The immense hollow blocks were cast in a Pittsburgh foundry. So nicely was the work done that every block but the keystone filled its space perfectly. It was found that the keystone, which weighs many tons, had expanded, owing to the heat, and was an inch too large for the vacancy. The solidity of the work was such that no clipping or cutting would surmount the difficulty. In this dilemma the keystone was wrapped in over thirty tons of ice, where it remained twenty-four hours. When uncovered it was found that the cold had contracted the keystone to such a size that it dropped to its place in the magnificent arch, exactly filling the space required.

—The alphabet of the Sandwich Islands has twelve letters; the Burmese, nineteen; the Italian, twenty; the Bengalese, twenty-one; the Hebrew, Syriac, Chaldee, Samaritan and Latin, twenty-two each; the French, twenty-three; the German and Dutch, twenty-six each; the Spanish and Slavonic, twenty-seven each; the Arabic twenty-eight; the Persian and Coptic, thirty two; the Georgian, thirty-five; the Armenian, thirty-eight; the Russian, forty-one; the Muscovite, forty-three; the Sanscrit and Japanese, fifty each; the Ethiopic and Tartarian, two hundred and two each.

—The following wise provision is among the laws of Pennsylvania: That it shall not be lawful for any minor, unless accompanied by his parents or guardian, to visit any of the variety theatres or places for the exhibition of negro minstrelsy, singing or ballet, in the city of Philadelphia, and any one who violates the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be sentenced to pay a fine not exceeding $100, or undergo an imprisonment not exceeding three months or both or either, at the discretion of the court.

—Of the 646 living alumni of Andover Theological Seminary graduated in the last twenty-five years, only thirty-five are to be regarded as unfit for ministerial service. So shows Prof. Phelps; and he says that this "represents an astonishingly small amount of wasted power and culture and money. It is less than five and a half per cent. of the whole number. What other profession or business or trade can show so fair a result of twenty-five years of experiment in the tug of real life? Furthermore, so far as there is any difference between the class of beneficiaries and that of the self-supporting, the advantage is heavily on the side of the beneficiaries. Of those who have abandoned their ministerial purpose, the self-supporting are proportioned to the beneficiaries as twelve to five. And the entire "waste" in the two classes, while it is less than ten per cent in the self-supporting class, is less than three and a half per cent. of the beneficiary class."

—Appleton's Journal furnishes the following statement respecting normal schools in the United States: "Every State of the Union has normal schools except Texas and Nevada. Massachusetts has one normal school for every 208,192 of her population. Illinois ranks next, having one normal school for every 254,941, Ohio has one for 296,140, and New York has the greatest number of normal schools, yet only one for every 398,437 of her population. The whole number of normal institutions in the United States is 114, of which fifty one are State schools, sixteen city schools, twenty-seven connected with colleges and universities and the remainder supported in various ways. There are 10,922 pupils in these schools and 445 teachers. Nearly one-tenth of all the normal pupils in the country belong to the Female Normal College of New York City. During the three years that the college has been in existence not a single student has been expelled, not one suspended, and not more than half a dozen cases of discipline have been reported to the president, and these were but for trivial offenses."

That the book is one of great interest and value is shown by the following

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samnel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to he worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—'The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samnel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all about that event which made such a sensation throughout the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, including the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a hold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his accounnt is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y,., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

EVERYBODY

read this letter from a worker in Pennsylvania.

You Need It.

I mean you need the Cynosure.

Every true anti-secrecy person ought to read it.

Those twelve hundred whose subscriptions to the Cynosure expire during July and August ought to renew immediately if they have not already done so.

There is a large class of persons who say we are "sound in this faith; good, true anti-secrecy men." "There is no danger of our backsliding hence we don't need it.

Now this is not good reasoning. If you are true to this cause you do need to be informed, and where so much information for two dollars, on this question, as in the Cynosure? As well refuse a light in a dark night or say you do not need the compass crossing the desert. You may know you are in the desert but cannot tell your whereabouts. Suppose you reason the same way with your political and church papers, and where will you land? In darkness upon those questions. I cannot understand how a person can be a consistent and intelligent member of church without reading his church publications: The same is true in this case. If you are not ready to read anti-secrecy periodicals I "stand in doubt of you."

You need the Cynosure,

1st, for your own sake, 2d, for the sake of your family, friends and neighbors, and 3d, for the sake of the cause.

1st For your sake. You ought to be informed what is being done for and against the cause. New things are brought out every week. We learn more and more of the workings of the order. The cloven foot is seen. The sheep-skin is too narrow and short to conceal the wolf. O! it stirs one's inmost soul to read such articles as Bernard's address at Syracuse. Again, it is cheering to learn that the cause is meeting with success, gaining ground. I am made to say, "Praise the Lord, O my soul," for he is doing "great things for us whereof we are glad." Then being posted helps one to be firmer, you get yourself fortified. The enemy finds difficulty in routing you, you have knowledge of facts and facts are stubborn things. If you love the truth you need to have liberty and boldness to defend it, yes to be aggressive. I fear there are too many cowards in the ranks who keep silent at this Baal worship, and padlock the truth. Fighting their battles the real soldiers may be as in Judges vii, comparatively few.

You need it

2nd. For the sake of your family, friends and neighbors.

If you do not provide your family with suitable literature they will provide themselves with such as is offered them, which is generally unhealthy and dangerous.

Plant anti-secrecy principles in the minds of your children, and when you sleep in death they will bless your memory that you saved them from the shame and wickedness of the lodge. After the Cynosure is read in my family it is sent out upon missions of good to others.

The money you give to this cause will save many times that amount from the lodge in your family and community. Some parents and wives will read these lines whose hearts are burdened because of enslaved sons and husbands. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

You need it

3d. For the sake of the cause.

It is worthy of your patronage.

The paper is worth what it costs, yea much more. It contains much useful information on other subjects. I am wonderfully pleased with its new style and arrangement. It is a much needed light on a very dark question. The Cynosure, these lecturers, these books and tracts, and the army of earnest workers in this cause will carry away "the gates, ports and all" of this city of darkness and destruction. It is God's cause. It will, it must succeed.

OUR COLLEGE SOCIETIES.

This number will be found of special interest (see editorial and correspondence). The following letter from a graduate of Indiana State University and teacher in Tennessee tells below his experiences in college. Has not the reader of this same student friend who would be benefitted by reading the little work on College Secret Societies?

Editor Christian Cynosure:

LINCOLN, June 17, 1874.

For some time past, every week has brought me a very welcome friend, namely, The Christion Cynosure. My whole soul is with you in your noble work, and I shall henceforth labor in your behalf. Had I been acquainted with your paper when I entered the University of Indiana, it would have prevented me from being duped into a Greek fraternity. And it would have proved an invaluable auxiliary to me while using my pen and influence against them during my senior year, after voluntarily withdrawing from them near the close of my junior year, April 25, '72, having been a passive member for the greater part of two years.

Soon as I read your notice of the pamphlet on "College Fraternities," I resolved to have a copy. Enclosed find ——— for which please send to my address four copies, one for myself, and three for my students.

Meantime I am very truly yours,

THE TOPIC OF THE TIME.

There are many present items of interest to the readers of the Cynosure. The thing which principally engages their attention is the movement against the lodge. To state clearly what this movement is, how it is to be advanced, and what means are needed, is the purpose of this article.

WHAT IS YOUR OBJECT?

There are half a million Freemasons in the United States, and about four hundred thousand Odd-fellows. In addition to these principal orders there are Jesuits, trades unions, Knights of Pythias, grangers, Ku-Klux klans, Red Men, Sovereigns of Industry, Advocates of Justice, Internationals, etc. The avowed objects of these various secret orders are praiseworthy. But if the avowed object were the real ones no secrecy would be needed or wanted, hence to ascertain what the real purposes of the secret clans are, we must use our own intelligence and the testimony of seceders. Using such means of information as are within reach, we find that these orders are chiefly engaged in two enterprises: first, rivaling and destroying the churches of Christ; and second, over-riding or using for their own purposes the civil government under which they exist.

They rival the churches of Christ by inventing religious ceremonies designed and adapted to satisfy the religious cravings of unconverted men without leading them to Christ. Some of them mention his name, e. g., the Jesuits and Good Templars ; but none such require obedience to his precepts as a condition of membership. More of them exclude Christ and the Christian's God, as for example, the Masons and Odd-fellows. In either case the orders are hostile to, and subversive of, Christ's churches and God's law. While, however, they are thus enemies to our Lord and Saviour, they profess to be his friends. Judas-like, they always betray with a kiss. They at the earliest opportunity throw their net over a young man ; profess to be moral, but not religious ; tempt him as Satan did Christ with offers of worldly advancement; give a few prayers to make him think he is worshipping something ; a dance to please and other more dangerous pleasures that accompany it; occupy him thus through the little round of life; and where without God and without hope he dies, they say they hope to meet him in the Grand Lodge above, recite a Christless prayer over his lifeless clay, and leave him till the great Day of Account.

It is probable there are two millions of men and women in the United States to-day undergoing this infidelizing process, that is sure in a vast multitude of cases to end in spiritual and everlasting death. Rivaling in this manner, they, so far as their influence extends, destroy the churches of Christ, for it is not possible to serve two masters, Christ and a Christ-rejecting order. Either they will love Christ and hate the lodge, or love the lodge to hate Christ.

Their action on civil government is different, yet the same. The churches they seek to supplant. The offices they seek to use. In every community there is a certain set of men who continually hanker after office. They have sometimes a sort of cunning smartness, and very often nothing but a faculty of persistent begging. Too lazy to work and too cowardly to steal they are never ashamed to beg. Now these men, in perhaps seven cases out of ten, belong to some secret order which helps them into place and they in turn help the lodge. Masonic judges, sheriffs, congressmen, architects, post masters, et al., are but links in a great chain of corruption that costs the people of the United States millions of dollars every year, and a little time ago cost them thousands of lives; lives sacrificed to the Masonic incapacity that was so highly exalted from 1861 to 1865. In the end, of course, the plan is to do away with voting and let some of the "Sovereign Grands" of Masonry or Jesuitism rule. At present they are contented to do by winks, nods, grips and signs what they fear to attempt by force. Now the object of the National Christian Association is to do away with these secret lodges. No matter what the name may be, we wish to make secrecy, as a badge of organization, disreputable ; to save the church and the state from their demoralizing influence.

HOW CAN IT BE DONE?

It can be done by enlightening the masses and in that way alone. There should be one hundred thousand subscribers to the Christian Cynosure, and an Anti-masonic organ in every State beside. There must be, to come anywhere near this end, an immense amount of labor performed. The readers of this paper have done and are doing much, but to accomplish our object we want at least thirty lecturers, and three hundred colporteurs. Sending one able lecturer into, and engaging ten colporteurs in each one of thirty States, would revolutionize the sentiment of the entire country in less than five years. We have already done a great work under God by his help. But the spirits of evil that control the lodge are only cast out by fasting, prayer and work. The dark leader of these black orders aims at nothing but the subjugation of the world, and he will never give up his grip on the American nation without a fight To bring about such a sentiment as shall make the Methodist, Congregational, Presbyterian and other churches, cast out the secret idolatries of this day, will be a herculean labor. To make voters see that to put Masons in office is to cut the throat of free institutions is a still greater one ; but both these things can be done and the men and women who take the Cynosure can, by God's help, do them.

WHAT MEANS ARE NEEDED?

Lecturers should be paid a thousand dollars per year and their expenses. Sometimes good men can be had for less, but this is no more than should be paid a man who works hard three hundred and sixty-five days in a year. The salaries of these men should be paid by the society, their expenses by the people to whom they lecture. This requires an annual income of thirty thousand dollars. There should be a secretary giving his whole time to the work who could earn and should be paid two thousand dollars a year. For other expenses, such as printing, postage, room rent, etc., at least three thousand dollars should be added.

Now where are we to raise thirty-five thousand dollars? There are one thousand men in the United States able to pay ten dollars per year who hate Masonry and the other dark societies. If they do so, we have a revenue of ten thousand. There are one hundred thousand men, women and children who can give each twenty-five cents per year which would make twenty-five thousand dollars. This would do the work. Now how can we reach these one hundred and one thousand men? It must be by the subscribers of the Cynosure. If each one of them should get twenty-five neighbors to send twenty-five cents to the Chicago office the work would more than be accomplished. These names must be sent to the Corresponding Secretary. Meantime, friends, let us trust in the God of light in whom is no darkness at all, and rouse up to overcome the enemies of God and man who crowd upon us. They come to us with apron and sword, let us go against them in the name of the God of Israel, whose Son they crucify and whose churches they deride.

George Alfred Townsend, the talented correspondent, has written a letter to the Chicago Tribune in which occurs the following estimate of Henry Ward Beecher's theology and preaching:

"A great man walks on a perilous ridge, and Beecher walked there with his forehead in the heavens, shining with the light thereof. He was always drawing us up toward him, and he made religion a kind of Fourth of July,—squibby, and audacious, and explosive. Brought up in a plain way, and having no religion of my own, but a sort of belief that what my fathers had was pretty reliable for squalls, I was always afraid of Beecher. He was too generous with his beatitudes. He didn't blister anything. There was neither Sinai nor Gethsemane in his theology. He praised fast horses, billiards, ten-pins, and rich men. He discovered that a rich man was the most available conservator of Christianity; and, in this respect, advanced upon an old belief, that it was harder for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of God."

"The style of Mr. Beecher did not evolve either religious or heroic characters as examples to men; for to all such there should be a sternness at times, such as Moses and Mahomet, Christ and Calvin, Knox and Cranmer had. You cannot beautify your Divinity by painting im Hin and in till, in the softness of your tints, the portrait loses the outline of the God. This world that Christ left with pain on his face, promising to return, and never yet doing it, must still wear a little of that cloud in which the sun was veiled. . . . Entering life with pain, leaving it with pain, life must not be the highest we were meant for, nor heaven too like the world. And yet there has long been a silent sensuality of this form in Mr. Beecher's gospel; his Prodigal Son did not repent, but had the good time; his Dives was a very good parishioner; he baptized with lavender and read the burial service out of a pastoral. Things had gone to be so volatile in his faith that whatever was Beecher was the whole solemn mystery of our religion; and, in our idolization of the man for his many noble but too frequent liberalizations, we played the holiday in church, and lost the principles of piety and restraint."

Heathenism versus Christianity.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

A prominent Congregational minister in Wisconsin, who had taken the Entered Apprentice degree and then withdrawn from Masonry, said that he regarded Masonry as a system of heathen religion. A careful consideration of the character of this institution will show that this opinion was well founded.

What is it that distinguishes Christianity from heathenism and all other systems of religion? It is not in the fact that Christians recognize a Supreme Being. Jews, Mohammedans, and almost the entire heathen world recognize a great Creator as truly as we. Nor in the fact that Christians have forms of prayer and stated periods of religious worship. Many of the heathen manifest far more earnestness and devotion, build costlier temples, and expend more time and means, than the majority of Christians. Nor is it that our religion teaches a pure morality, for though the teachings of the Bible are incomparably pure and grander than any other book, yet it is doubtless true that there are in the Koran, the writings of Confucius, and in the old heathen philosophers much that is in common with Christian morality. Not even the doctrine of the new birth distinguishes ours from the religion of heathenism. In the Eleusinian mysteries men were said to be regenerated. They became dead to the outer world, and alive to a new and hidden life. The same word signified both to die, and to be initiated.

In modern heathenism we find precisely the same thing. The tribes of West Africa have their mysteries which, in this respect are in striking analogy with the ancient heathenism. The Purroh is an institution that prevails along almost the entire coast of West Africa, and extends an unknown distance to the interior. When a candidate is admitted to its mysteries, he is laid on the ground; his head, it is pretended, is broken to pieces, and he remains for some time dead. He is then awakened to a new life, as a new creature, and receives a new name by which he is ever afterwards known.

In all these respects heathenism but apes the true religion. Fallen man everywhere feels the need of pardon and regeneration; and all these forms of heathenism are but Satan's plan by which he professes to meet a real want, and yet secures to himself the worship due to the Creator.

Now does Freemasonry correspond in these respects with both ancient and modern heathenism? It recognizes a "Great Architect of the Universe," but does not recognize Christ, the Mediator. So do the heathen. It teaches men to pray, but not to pray in the name of Jesus of Nazareth. So do the heathen. It enjoins a morality, but not the morality of the Gospel of Christ. It holds up no perfect pattern for the imitation of its members. In this respect it is like heathenism. It professes to regenerate men, to make them holy, and prepare them for heaven, and it proposes to do this in almost precisely the same methods of the ancient and modern heathenism. Dr. Mackey says (Mackey's Ritualist, page 23), of the candidate for Masonry that "Having been wandering amid the errors and covered with the pollutions of the outer and profane world, he comes inquiringly to our doors seeking the new birth, and asking a withdrawal of the vail that conceals divine truth from his uninitiated sight; and here as with Moses at the burning bush the solemn admonition is given, 'Put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.' He is indeed to commence with new lessons in a new school. There is to be not simply a change for the future, but an extinction of the past, for initiation is as it were a death to the world, and a resurrection to a new life. The world is left behind, the chains of error and ignorance which had previously restrained the candidate in moral and intellectual captivity are broken, the portal of the temple has been thrown widely open, and Masonry stands before the neophyte in all the glory of its form and beauty, to be fully revealed to him, however, only when the new birth has been fully accomplished." This new birth is said to be fully accomplished in the third, or Master's degree. It is there that the candidate enters the holy of Holies (see Mackey's Lexicon Art, Master Mason). It is then he is raised from the grave of iniquity to the faith of salvation. It is then he is inspired with the most lively hopes of an inheritance with the just made perfect."

Now let us see how this is accomplished. When the candidate first enters the Master's lodge the work of death is not yet accomplished, but when he personates Hiram Abiff, he is struck on the head with the common gavel; is (symbolically) killed, laid in the grave, when he is said to remain fourteen days; is raised from the dead on the five points of fellowship, and thus according to Sickels (see Sickel's Monitor) he "is quickened into a new and better existence," and "Nothing more can be suggested that the soul of man requires." Now this is heathenism, just as truly heathen worship as the ancient Grecian or the modern African mysteries. Indeed, there are but two religions in the world, the Divine and Satanic,—the Christian and the heathen. Leave Christ out of our religion and it is simply heathenism. The essential distinction is simply this: as Christians, we recognize one God and one Mediator, the Man Christ Jesus." On him alone do we depend for salvation. Through him alone do we have access to the Father. Leave out Christ and whatever else we may include, our religion is anti-Christ. Hence John says (2nd John ii. 7 10) "Many decievers are entered into the world who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deciever and an anti-Christ." "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your houses, neither bid him God speed, for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds."

Farm Ridge, Ill.

The Knights of Pythias.

BY AN EX-MEMBER.

The organization known as the Knights of Pythias had its origin at or about the close of the war. It is a legitimate offspring of Freemasonry. The first lodge formed, which was at Washington, D. C., was, if I mistake not, totally made up of Masons of high standing, and the membership of the order to-day is largely represented by Masons. One of the inducements held out to a person joining the order is that in case of sickness he is to receive a weekly stipend, and the lodge is bound to see that he has nightly attendance. The friends of the order claim for it a growth second to none (except the Grand Army of the Republic), and among "society" men it is quite popular.

The organization commenced with three degrees, and in the spring of 1871, it had only the three, but more were to be added. This was the subordinate lodge. To be a member of the Grand Lodge comprehended something more. The Grand Lodge of the State of New York was organized Oct. 29th, 1868; and I was duly initiated into the three degrees, called "Page," "Esquire," and "Knight," in the spring of 1871, and was an acceptable member until my conversion to Christ, in the following summer, when I took a card, and said card bears witness to the above facts in regard to membership, and it bears the stamp of the Supreme, Grand, and subordinate lodges. Our lodge was named Spartacus Lodge, No. 51, K. of P., Yonkers, N. Y. The lodge or insignia of the order is a Knight's shield and visor so placed that at a short distance you would think it was to represent a Mason's trowel; two swords cross the shield in the center, and at the bottom of the pin is a skull and cross-bones. In the right hand corner of the shield is the letter "F," directly opposite this the letter "C," and at the bottom the letter "B," signifying, Fidelity, Caution and Bravery. I was in Rome, N. Y., a short time after I joined the order, and a gentleman seeing the badge I wore, asked if I was traveling to the East; but he soon learned his mistake. He thought I was a Mason.

FIRST DEGREE.

A candidate, after having been duly voted upon and accepted at some previous meeting, is admitted to the ante-chamber, and after having been relieved of some of his outer garments he is clothed in white and hoodwinked, when the "page" takes him in charge, and after the proper number of raps, and giving the pass-word, he is admitted into the lodge room. He is conducted a number of times around the room in perfect silence, when he is presented to the "Worthy Chancellor," who is the presiding officer of the lodge.. After he has asked him a number of questions and imparted some instructions, he is taken to the different officers of the lodge. The ceremonies and the instructions and obligations are of some length, and the object of the first degree is to impress the mind of the candidate with the necessity of fidelity to the order; and to this end a strong effort is put forth in the closing ceremony. The lodge is all clothed in white, the whole person being covered, except holes for the eyes. The room is darkened and the candidate commanded to kneel, when the lodge kneels around him, his eyes are unbandaged for the first time since entering the room. He finds himself kneeling at or beside a coffin in which is a human skeleton. Directly above the breast of the skeleton, supported by two swords crossing the coffin, is an open Bible. The candidate is ordered to place one hand upon his heart and the other upon the open Bible, when the final oath and obligation is administered. After which he has to kiss the Bible as it lays over the skeleton, and to say the least the attempt has been made to make it binding. After this the signs, countersigns, and pass-words are given and the candidate is a "Page."

SECOND DEGREE.

The candidate enters the room in the same condition as before, (each degree, however, differs in number of raps and pass-word) and after he has been conducted around the room as before in the first degree, he is brought to the W. C., for the final oath and obligation. These grow stronger and stronger in each degree. The desire in the second degree is to teach the man caution, which word represents the degree. They now proceed to accomplish it in the following manner: The candidate in his obligation has solemnly sworn that he never will write upon any thing, movable or immovable, the word caution, or utter, or give expression in any way outside of the lodge room to the word. The hoodwink has been removed just before this, and while the candidate is standing before the W. C., he is handed a blank which he is told to fill out to be returned to the Grand Lodge. The candidate is seated at a common writing desk. The blank is regularly headed, commencing, I think, with the number and name of lodge or something to that effect, and after a little he comes to a column headed "Watch-word," which he has just bound himself never to write under any circumstances. The candidate is surrounded by men, one sitting at each side, and almost every case the man commences to write the word and is caught, when a pistol concealed inside the desk is discharged, and the lid of the desk flies open, and in large letters written upon the lid is the word "Caution." The young man who was taking this degree at the time I was initiated fainted away at this point, and it caused a little commotion for a few moments. After this occurs the W. C. commences to upbraid the candidate with violating his oath which is all too evident to the unfortunate man. He turns to the lodge and makes the inquiry, "What shall be done with this man?"—and after numerous things have been proposed and the man caused to feel extremely small, they re-administer the oath and let him go. After which he is an "Esquire."

THIRD DEGREE.

"Bravery" being the word of this degree, initiatory services are arranged so as to test a man in this direction. The lodge is clothed in black during the working of this degree. After a number of unimportant ceremonies have been passed through, and the oath and different questions have been asked and answered, the man is conducted to the W. C., where he is handed a piece of two-inch plank about eighteen inches square, filled with iron spikes about four inches long and very sharp, The W. C., questions him in regard to the material which composes it. He raps upon the spikes with his sword so that there can be no mistake, and after the candidate is fully satisfied in regard to its make, he is commanded to take it and place it in the center of the room on the floor; when the lodge gathers round him, and he is ordered to pull off his boots and take his position in a chair situated about four or five feet from the instrument. Then the W. C., and other officers advance, some with drawn swords, and some with spears and axes. In this condition the W. C. exhorts him to be a man and show his bravery, etc., after which they advance closer and with uplifted swords, and weapons pressing him at all points, he is commanded to jump neither to the right nor to the left, but directly upon those iron spikes. But few are foolish enough to attempt it. If he does not jump he is taunted and railed upon by the whole lodge, and four strong men sieze him and raise over their heads and bring him down as hard as they can upon the board. But lo! the iron has suddenly become rubber. Just before the W. C., advances to command the candidate to jump, he asks him a question that takes his attention, and a second board of equal size with rubber spikes is substituted in place of the first, of which fact the candidate is ignorant. This affords a great deal of sport to the lodge, but the subject is in a peculiar state of mind. After this the person is a "Knight."

Spring Arbor, Mich. N. R. Wood.

A Tract.

BY M. KELLY.

Remember that God is truth, and the devil a liar, and any system that requires secrecy and deception to sustain it has Satan for its father. And such is Freemasonry, which is also considered a heathenish system of religion, and is used for worldly advantages and to protect men in crime, and is so shameful and wicked that Masons get angry if we attempt to publicly examine it, which it's our duty to do. It professes to show the way to heaven without Christ as a Mediator. All such is devil worship. Their blasphemous oaths, mock murders, and barbarous death penalties teach them depravity, sear their consciences, harden their hearts, and prepare them for Satan's work.

Judge Whitney, master of the lodge at Belvidere, Ill., says: "It is worse than useless for any man or set of men to preach to me that a man is not in more danger among infurated Masons than among infurated outsiders." He also endorses the following declaration made by a high Mason that "A Masonic lodge is the strangest medley of priests and murderers, deacons and whoremasters, church-members and gamblers, drunkards and rowdies that the All-seeing Eye looks down upon." (Washington had virtually seceded. He says: "I have been at a lodge not more than once or twice in 30 years.")

The wise and good have come to the conclusion that so long as church-members and preachers will crucify Christ by belonging to a conspiracy which enables them to cheat and rob outsiders of their rights, so long we will be cursed with this devil worship among us.

The principles of our Government are founded upon the Golden Rule, and to sustain them we have free speech and press guaranteed to us in the Constitution. But Freemasonry forbids free speech and press. Therefore it exists in direct opposition to the fundamental and vital principles of our government.

Literature is a fragment of a fragment. Of all that ever happened, or that has been said, but a fraction has been written; and of this but little is extant.—Goethe.

Distinguished Opinions on War.

Lord Burleigh in a letter to his son Robert, says: "I am not content that thou shalt train up thy sons in wars. For he that sets up his rest to live by that profession can hardly be an honest man or a good Christian."

Jefferson says: "War is an instrument entirely insufficient towards redressing wrong, and multiplies instead of indemnifying losses."

Franklin says: "I have been apt to think that there never has been, nor ever will be, any such thing as a good war or a bad peace."

Lord Brougham says: "I abominate war as unchristian. I hold it the greatest of human crimes. I deem it to include all other crimes, violence, blood, rapine, fraud, every thing which can deform the character, alter the nature, and debase the name of man."

Jeremy Bentham says: "Nothing can be worse than the general feeling on the subject of war. The church, the state, the ruling few, the subject many; all, in this case, seemed to have combined to patronize vice and crime, in their widest sphere of evil."

Soame Jenyns says: "If Christian nations were nations of Christians, all war would be impossible and unknown among them."

Archbishop Whately says: "War is a great disgrace to civilized men and Christians."

Ward, the missionary, says: "Either our religion is a fabric, or there are unanswerable arguments against war and in favor of peace."

Adam Clark says, that: War is as contrary to the spirit of Christianity as murder. Nothing can justify nations in shedding each other's blood."

Binney says: "I turn with loathing from the proofs and circumstance of war. War is a fearful thing, ruinous to life, property, and virtue; it has an arm for blood, and a mouth for blasphemy."

Albert Barnes says: "Who has ever told the evils, and the curses, and the crimes of war? Who can describe the horrors of the carnage of battle? Who can portray the fiendish passions which reign there? If there is anything in which earth, more than any other, resembles hell, it is in its wars."

J. C. Ryle, clergyman, says: "Men of the most eminent abilities, and extensive erudition, have never yet, nor ever will produce arguments sufficient to prove that the profession of a soldier is consistent with the profession of Christianity."

Judson, the missionary, says: "I have for some time determined to make whatever efforts were necessary to comply with the dictates of conscience and wash my hands of the blood that is shed in war, a measure which appears to me the indispensable duty of every Christian.

John Locke says: "All the entertainment and talk of history is mostly about fighting and killing, and the honors and renown which are bestowed on conquerers, who, for the most part, mere butchers of mankind, mislead growing youth, who by these means come to think slaughter the most laudable business of mankind and the most heroic of virtues."

Sir David Brewster says: "Nothing in the history of our species appears more inexplicable than that war, the child of barbarism, exists in an age enlightened and civilized."

Southey says: "Whence is it that wars still disgrace the Christian world? It is owing to the doctrine of expediency. If Christians had boldly looked in the face of their duty as developed in the New Testament, this senseless and infernal system of wholesale butchery must long ago have ceased."

Jeremy Taylor says: "If men be subjects of Christ's law, they can never go to war with each other. As contrary as cruelty and tyranny is to mercy and charity, so is war and bloodshed to the meekness and gentleness of the Christian religion."

John Howe says: "It is very plain that war is the mark of the apostacy, and stigmatizes man as fallen from God in a degenerate, revolted state; it is a horrid result of man's having forsaken God, and of their having been abandoned by him to the hurry of their own furious lusts and passions."

Sydney Smith says: "The greatest curse that can be entailed on mankind is a state of war. All the atrocious crimes committed in years of peace . . . are mere trifles compared with the gigantic evils of war. God is forgotten in a state of war; and every principle of Christianity is trampled upon."

John Angel James says: "A hatred of war is an essential feature of practical Christianity; and it is a shame upon what is called the "Christian World" that it has not long since born universal and indignant testimony against this enormous evil."

John Bowring, in his translation of Russian poetry, says in reference to the martial exploits of a celebrated Russian General: "I have no sympathies with the poet in the admiration he expresses of the warlike character. I can see but few distinctions between the conquerer and the executioner. I would as soon think of celebrating the carousals of a horde of cannibles, as of giving the attractions and decorations of song to those dreadful scenes of sin and misery which men call victories; and I blush for my country and my race when I reflect, that in the very proportion of the wickedness implied and the wretchedness produced, are they made the subjects of pride and congratulation, and honored with the designation 'great,' and 'glorious.' Man was surely born to nobler and better things than these."—The Journal.

What Alcohol will do.—It may seem strange, but it is nevertheless true, that alcohol regularly applied to a thrifty farmer's stomach, will remove the boards from the fence, let cattle into his crops, kill his fruit trees, mortgage his farm, and sow his fields with wild oats and thistles. It will take the paint off his buildings, break the glass out of the windows and fill them with rags. It will take the gloss from his clothes and the polish from his manners, subdue his reason, arouse his passions, bring sorrow and disgrace upon his family, and topple him into a drunkard's grave. It will do this to the artisan and the capitalist, the matron and the maiden, as well as to the farmer; for in its deadly enmity to the human race alcohol is no respecter of persons.—The Temperance Worker.

There is a good deal of ill-considered talk about a free Gospel. Certainly the gifts of God are offered to us without money and without price. But when people mean by a free Gospel, a Gospel which it costs nothing to have preached and propagated, they mean nonsense. It does cost something to keep up the church and support its ministry, and those who shrink from the duty of giving for this purpose have never rightly embraced and understood the free Gospel. God charges us nothing for his gifts, but it costs a good deal to have them properly administered among men, as the laborer is worthy of his hire. The fact that God gives us our bread freely does not enable the farmer to get along without money.—Lutheran Standard.

Let us look unto Jesus, and not to the apparent success of our efforts. Apparent success is not always the measure of real success; and, besides, God has not enjoined success upon us, but only labor. He will ask an account of our labor, but not of our success. Why, then, should we be too much concerned about it? We must sow the seed, God will gather the fruit; if not to-day, it will be to morrow; if not for us, it will be for others. Even if success were to be granted us, it would always be dangerous to look complacently upon it. On the one hand, we are tempted to claim for ourselves some of the glory; on the other hand we are too prone to slacken our zeal when we cease to see good results arising from it; that is, at the same time when we ought to put forth double energy. To look at our success is to walk by sight; to look unto Jesus, and to persevere in following and serving him despite all discouragements, is to walk by faith.

From the above roll of members it can be seen that we have now only eleven States on the list, while the Cynosure has subscribers in thirty-seven. It is also evident that the annual fee of twenty-five cents is sufficient to all the needs of the Association if only the anti-secret men, women and children send it in. Heretofore we have asked for contributions to the work. Philo Carpenter has given thousands of dollars, and individuals scattered all over the country, tens and twenties and some hundreds. The church of Christ in Wheaton gave, last year, $140 to the cause. What we now want is to distribute the burden so widely that it shall bear heavily on no one. Send in your names.

Annual Meeting of the North-east Pa. Association, Nov. 3d, in Free Methodist Hall, Wilkesbarre, Pa.

Reform News.

—Rev. John Levington has lately been speaking in Susquehanna county, Pa. From the correspondence of the Wesleyan we learn that during the first part of July he was in Bradford county where he spoke in several localities in the North Bradford circuit.

—H. H. Hinman, Illinois State agent, was quite unwell last week, being several days confined to his house. We hope to hear of his recovery and renewal of his important work. Who are the friends in Illinois who pledged funds to the General Agent for the Illinois State work, but are yet behind in their prayments? There are a number who should report without delay.

From the Illinois Agent.

FARM RIDGE, Ill., Aug. 7.

DEAR BRO. K.—Quite unexpectedly to myself I met Pres. Blanchard at Wenona, at the house of that veteran reformer, Peter Howe. I had expected to speak there on Sabbath evening, but as Pres. B. was advertised to speak both morning and evening, it was thought best that I should go to New Rutland, the next station south on the I. C. R. R. I met here a cordial reception and formed many warm friends, although it is but a short time since this question began to be agitated. I spoke to a full house in the Advent church, and received the closet attention. I also heard from both of Pres. B's sermons in Wenona as largely attended and characteristieally impressive. I left Monday morning to meet Pres. B. at Streator, and to arrange to have him preach and lecture there. The arrangements were accordingly made, and the church, which shut its doors against me, opens them to one who is more thoroughly acquainted with, and more terribly hostile to the lodge, than perhaps any man in America. So truth makes progress and the right is indicated.

Yours for Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

The Ohio State Convention.—The Organization and Constitution.

NORTH LEWISTON, Aug. 7, 1874,

DEAR K.—The State Convention has just adjourned. The meeting from first to last were a success, and was largely attended day and evening. The spirit and interest of the meetings was similar and perhaps equal to that at Syracuse. After the adoption of the constitution over an hundred signed it, and arrangements were made for a thorough canvass of the State for signatures. The following were elected officers for the ensuing year:

President, Rev. Wm. Wishard, Ontario.

1st Vice President, Rev. L. Moore, Oceola.

Recording Sec'y, Rev. Wm. Dillon, Dayton.

Corresponding Sec'y, Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Carey.

Treasurer, Samuel Hale, Esq., Mallet Creek.

Executive Committee, Rev. Geo. Clark, Oberlin; Rev. R. B. Taylor, Summerfield.

God is dealing graciously with his people and the delegates return to their homes rejoicing. J. P. STODDARD.

PREAMBLE AND CONSTITUTION ADOPTED AT DARBY CHAPEL, O., AUG. 5TH, 1874.

Whereas, All secret associations, especially the oath-bound, tend to originate and promote distrust, caste, corruption and class hostility; and

Whereas, The oaths and penalties by which Freemasonry binds its members to secrecy and mutual succor are far more terrible, and therefore more potent, than any known to "civil law," there is no guarantee for equal justice in the courts to the life, liberty, character or property of any citizen not a Mason, where his opponent and his judge, his lawyer, a witness, or a juror is a Mason; and

Whereas, The Masonic system, its rights, oaths, laws, penalties and morality, all are borrowed from ancient heathenism and are contrary to Christian morality; and,

Whereas, Its organic despotism, with its "head center" more absolute than Herod, is more attractive to bad men than to good, and the bad more naturally aspire to and control it, while the good swindled into it are snared by its foresworn oaths; and

Whereas, It thus becomes an anti-republican training school to our young men, with its titles of nobility hostile to free speech, subsidizing or awing into silence most of the pulpits and the press; armed and drilled, and grasping for power, already counts its annual revenue by millions, holds most of the offices of every grade and department, usurps the prerogatives of the Government and people in dedicating their public buildings, and holds its own laws superior to the civil laws, executing its own death penalties when it dares on conscientious members, who like Morgan, expose it; and

Whereas, Self-defense and protection against such secret combinations so potent for evil is an imperative duty to ourselves, our families, our country and the God of nations:

Therefore, we, the undersigned citizens of the State of Ohio, for reasons above recited and others not herein named, associate ourselves under the following

CONSTITUTION:

ART. 1st. This Association shall be called the Anti-secret Association of the State of Ohio and shall be auxiliary to the National Christian Association.

ART. 2d. The object of the Association shall be to enlighten the public mind respecting the evils set forth in the preamble of this constitution and to seek by all lawful means to remove them from both church and state.

ART. 3d. The officers of this Association shall be a President, Vice-presidents, Corresponding and Recording Secretaries, Treasurer and an Executive Committee of two; who shall be chosen by ballot, and perform the duties usually attached to their respective offices until their successors are elected.

ART. 4th. The President, First Vice-president, Secretaries and Treasurer shall be ex-officio members of the Executive Committee a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum at any meeting.

ART 5th. This Association shall meet annually at the time and place designated by vote of the previous annual meeting.

ART. 6th. Any person in sympathy with the object of this Association may become a member by signing this constitution.

ART. 7th. This Constitution may be altered or amended at any annual meeting, two-thirds of the members present concurring, provided notice of the proposed change has been given at least one day previous.

Temperance and Freemasonry.

DEAR EDITOR:—In the village of Morris, Otsego Co., N. Y., the temperance people undertook in a most decided manner to prevent the giving of license to the liquor dealers and rum holes of that place. Two of the most prominent of the liquor dealers in the villiage were prosecuted for selling liquor to minors who were members of the families of temperance people. This violation of the law was perpetrated on the Sabbath as well as other days of the week. These liquor venders were accordingly prosecuted and arraigned before the grand jury and had it not been for the interference of the Masonic brotherhood they would have been fined and made to suffer the just penalty of the law, for the district attorney said to a lawyer at the bar that there was proof enough against these men to convict forty persons. And for the defense of these criminals they brought forward prominent leading characters of the village, who were Masons, and who there stated under oath that the innkeeper kept the best public house that was ever kept in Morris. So "they thought he ought to be excused for his violation of the law." One of the firm of an apothecary shop went on to the stand and swore that he had sold liquor by the drink and in small and large measure just as they liked or wanted it, and yet these criminals were cleared by a Masonic and sin-loving jury and left to pursue their impious traffic in defiance of law. And what is a little astonishing is regarding the Baptist minister of this place, who, when the charter election came off here, was holding a protracted meeting in Jacksonville, or Mount Vision as it is called, aided by other ministers, one or two of whom were either Masons or sympathizers. We say the Baptist minister of this place left that meeting to come home, twelve miles, (not within the length of his cable-tow, for we understand he is a Royal Arch Mason) to vote with and for the Masonic rum-dealers for license, and against the temperance law-abiding men.

We ought not to forget to mention the efforts of the ladies who labored hard with the villagers. One young lady in particular, a member of the Episcopal church, took her dissipated father by the hand (who is a Mason and member of the same church) clung to his arm and, entreating him to vote a no license ticket. And yet, the loving secret brotherhood deceived her at last, a Mason slipped a license ticket into his hand behind him, which he willingly voted unknown to his daughter; and then they gloried over their success to her great distress and disappointment. This is the work in which this Masonic Baptist minister participated and went twelve miles out of the midst of a revival meeting, in which he claimed that God was regenerating souls through his instrumentality, to do it. Yes, to give aid and contribute to the success of the Masonic whiskey ring in the place where he lives! And yet this was the Masonic Good Templar lecturer, who in Montrose, or near there, in a lecture before the lodge told the G. T. young ladies not to receive the addresses of young men who were not members of the lodge, thereby to more effectually use their influence to draw them into the lodge. This is the argumentum ad femininum.

JAMES L. ANDRUS.

A Book I Should Like to See.

DEAR CYNOSURE :—I should like very much to see a book of the following description: A book containing fine engravings illustrating the penalties attached to the violation of Masonic obligations. For instance, let one represent the penalty attached to the Entered Apprentice's oath. It would take three cuts to represent it properly: one showing a man in the act of having his "throat cut across;" another, having his tongue torn out;" and another being "buried at low water mark." Then let another cut represent the Fellow Craft receiving the penalty attached to his degree; having his "left breast torn open," his "heart and vitals taken from thence and thrown over his left shoulder, then exposed to wild beasts and vultures in the valley of Jehosaphat?" Let another represent the Master Mason, separated in the middle —two parts of a man—a man in the condition that "Whispering Charley" at Morenci, Michigan, was found, in a box in Bean Creek. Let it represent two savage Masons, one dragging the lower half of a man southward, and the other dragging the upper half northward; a third between with fiendish brow sheathing the bloody steel which severed the parts of the unfortunate dupe; a fourth stirring and punching the slugglish fire with one hand and piling on fuel with the other, to consume the bowels, and a fifth anxiously waiting with dish in hand to gather up the ashes and scatter them to the four winds. So let the penalties all be well illustrated, so that a child can soon comprehend, with the assistance of explanatory notes at the foot. Let each illustration have an appropriate title in large letters, so that "he who ruins may read."

One chapter should be devoted to the more important passages in several of the oaths. And another should give a brief account of all the known Masonic murders. In all cases references should be given to the standard works where the quotations could be found.

A work of this kind would do good faster just now than any other extant. It would do more to save and properly indoctrinate the youth of our land than any other plan I can think of. The people, old and young, are asleep on this awfully important subject. The land is flooded with cheap and attractive and thrilling literature. The pulpit and the press, speaking in general terms, are sold, basely sold. Nothing but vigorous, ingenious and well concerted effort will save us from ruin. Have we not a helper, a brother, with means to spare to get up a beautifully illustrated expose of the more important features of the craft?

What is Freemasonry?

Answer—A system of arrangments for the protection of men in crime.

What is the secret of Freemasonry?

Answer—The fact stated in the above answer. The system is adapted to minor purposes, and the great secret in involves minor secrets.

Metz, Ind. J. K. ALWOOD.

From Broome Co., N. Y.

Union Centre is a borough ten miles northwest of Bringhampton, Broome Co., N. Y. It has a Congregational church of some 100 members, who lost their oldest deacon, and only Mason, last March. The lodges for miles north and south gathered to bury the brother, with their swords, staves, white aprons and gloves, and hemlock brush in their button holes. It being the first performance of the kind in the place, the crowd was out. Two dismissed M. E. preachers, who were Masons, read the Scriptures and did the preaching. The M. E. preacher in charge is said to be a Mason, but refused to wear the trappings. He tried to make a Christless prayer, but it was evident he turned Jew with much embarrassment. A Universalist led the lodges, and has circulated a subscription for the brother Mason, M. E., dismissed preacher who is now preaching to that church. We have a M. E. church with some seventy-five members, two Masons, with Masonic preacher sent them from year to year.

I was old enough to read the Anti-masonic papers sent to my father by a brother-in-law who was an Anti-mason at the time of the abduction of Wm. Morgan, consequently became early opposed to all secret combinations. They work evil and only evil to our country and its liberties.

The press, the preacher, lawyer, merchant, dare not call it a sin or sell books that condemn it, or speak their thoughts about it any more than they did about slavery, for fear it may jeopardize their several interests. Preachers are destined to go to live among strangers. They join the lodge to give the grip to find sworn friends among strangers. Black legs and knaves join for the same purpose. Masonic oaths take the preference of judicial because the penalty for violation is greater. Finally not more than one press in 100 dare to put this in their columns so great is the fear of exposing sin. A. K. KETCHUM.

Secrecy in Southern Illinois.

ELKVILLE, Ill.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Permit me to say a few words in the columns of your most valuable paper concerning secrecy in southern Illinois. I have been laboring here for a short time as an itinerant preacher in the church of the United Brethren in Christ. Lately I have become a reader of the Cynosure, and I think is is just such a paper as everybody ought to read, and I expect to labor for its circulation.

There are a great many persons in this country who know nothing about the evils of secrecy; while there are others who have learned to know by observation that there is something in this business which ought to be brought out. There are still others who claim to know much about the Masonic order, and are astonished at the U. B. church for excluding secrecy; and sometimes we hear one ask the reason. I tell them the reason is simply this, because it is an evil. It stays the hand of justice; it turns loose horse thieves, murderers, burglars, kidnappers; and, like the fiends of hell, it moves about in darkness. It not only needs to be kept out of the church but out of existence. I mean oath-bound secret societies of all descriptions.

A short time ago in this part of the State a man met a neighbor in the road and said to him, "Sir, you stole my meat;" which the neighbor broadly denied. But no sooner denied than the man fell at him and kicked him and beat him till he died. What do you suppose was done with the man for committing such a crime?—Done with him? What could be done with him, for he was a Mason, and he ran among his friends, who said to the law, Touch him not, for he is one of us. Presently the grand jury met and some honest fellow called for an investigation of Mr. Mason case. But no sooner called than jurymen were seen winking and nodding and moving their hands in some strange way, and finally one remarked, "We will have to let that case pass, for there cannot be sufficient evidence produced to find a bill." "But hold on! Let us investigate and see," says another. "I think it would be imprudent to spend time," observes the chair, and we will pass that for the present. The majority of the jurors were Masons, so they let it pass, and it passes yet.

There are hundreds of such cases transpiring, and the wonder is why the world can't see the point, and set their feet on the neck of the beast, and smother him out. God speed the time when secrecy shall be wiped out and judge and juror shall be free men, to deal out justice.

H. J. MULHOLLAND.

Masonry an Anti-Christ.

EARLVILLE, Iowa, Aug. 6, 1874.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I now see how it is that a Freemason cannot be a Christian. Last night in conversation with a Congregational minister, he said that Masonry supplied a want which is felt in the churches, and that some of the best citizens, merchants and Christians, are Masons. "But," I remarked, "they have a form of religion in which they ignore Christ."

"O yes," he said, "but they believe in the one God and leave out Christ

OUR MAIL.

Samuel D. Greene, Esq., author of the Broken Seal, has lately been visiting in Portland, Me., and writes of his experiences in that city:

"I have found one meeting-house where we can have lecturers delivered, if any lecturer should please to use it, the truth may be spread. I have also found that the 'Broken Seal" is sold by a Mr. Colby in his bookstore. Every other bookstore is kept by Masons. I went and saw them all and had a long talk with them, telling them they could not hide the light if all the bookstores and all papers withheld the truth. One man, with a considerable amount of intelligence, when I mentioned to him what Mr. Sumner said about Masonry, replied, "Put Mr. Sumner with all his sagacity and power into a dark cellar in which there was no light, could he read or see better than other men." No, sir. But you don't infer by this that Freemasonry is a secret? It is all before the world; and let the sun shine in his meridian brightness into that cellar, think you Sumner, John Q. Adams, Daniel Webster, Edward Everett, and thousands of others could not read it? And again the Saviour declares that that is done of you in secret shall be published upon the house top. Don't you, my friend, rather show a weak spot in suggesting the idea that you can take or perform anything that you cannot expose? What did the Masons murder Morgan for? 'Did they?' says he. 'Yes,' says I. 'And that is what I want you to sell, to tell the public that Freemasons murder folks for telling the truth, and that there is a class of respectable men in our midst that have laws perfectly at antipodes to the laws of our republican government, holding honest men by wicked oaths in silence, while the powerful and the malicious carry them into execution. All, too, for selfish purposes.' He heard me without opening his mouth, when a man dressed in grey, came in with a pack of letters and papers whom I suppose was a letter carrier, and when he saw I had silenced the other, he opened a vial and poured out a little Masonic liquid, saying, 'Who would believe a man (though you are much older than I am) who would take oaths and then violate them?' You, sir! for your very expression declared I have told the truth, or I have not broken an oath; and such an oath as you refer to as taken in a Masonic lodge, the Bible, which is one of the great lights in Masonry, as great as the square or compass, requires you should break it, and repent that you ever took it, and perhaps you only keep it because you can be a post-office carrier.' This wound him up, for he said he was no carrier, but going from the post-office with his business papers, and felt the shock so sensibly that he made an apology for interfering and went about his business. The other man commenced again, and said, 'It seems that you are not murdered yet?' 'No, it is not because you don't desire to do it. But I hope to show its wickedness upon house tops.' This ended the talk, and I bought a couple of Bibles of him to give away. I told him I am not opposed to you, but Freemasonry."

S. P. Reed, Suez, Ill., writes:

"I cannot do without your paper. You will please continue to send it to me. Yours in the cause of truth."

Chas. Mundhenk, Pyrmout, O., thinks that secrecy is a greater curse to this country than was slavery.

A physician of Waynetown, Ind., writes:

"One of your agents called on me and presented several tracts and pamphlets which have interested me very much, therefore I wish your paper on trial,"

The friend who was distributing tracts in Waynctown will be glad to learn of this result of his labors. Those who are working and see no fruit should not be discouraged. Only the great reckoning Day will reveal all results. Paul said that he planted the seed of truth, but he did not wait to see what would come of it. Another Christian preacher, Appollos, watered it, encouraged those who were serious concerning their salvation. But their work was nothing. God gives the increase.

J. A. Marsh, Albany, Mo., writes that he must discontinue the paper for the present, but will renew as soon as possible. His reason is nearly the only good one that could be given for stopping the Cynosure, and one that many of us feel in sympathy with—want of present means. But he says encouragingly, "I shall do all in my power for your paper. I have been circulating it in my neighborhood. It is liked very well. I think I can get some subscribers." Last week's paper is a good one for Gentry county. Bro. M. would do well to get some copies to circulate.

Jacob L. Kennamer, of Kennamer's Cove, Ala., writes:

"I do not see how I can do without your paper. It deals the lodge some heavy blows. The Masons and grangers are quite numerous in this country. The masses of the people are not informed in regard to the workings of the lodge."

S. P. Stroup, Huntertown, Ind., writes:

"I have been a reader of the paper almost ever since it has been published. Money matters are pretty close with me nevertheless I must have the paper."

T. C. Wallace, Cambridge, N. Y., writes for the paper at first sight, and adds:

"Masonry is very strong hereabouts. In this village is a large and flourishing lodge, and many of our best citizens are members. Misguided men! I think if they should read the Cynosure they would withdraw at once, as they would immediately have their eyes opened to the enormity of Masonry which they have no opportunity of doing while actively engaged in the duties devolving upon them as members of a lodge."

W. W. Stringer, Ridge, O., writes:

"Push on the cause, for it is certainly gaining."

R. H. Powell, Winnebago, Ill., writes:

"There are a good many Anti-masons in this vicinity, but it is hard work to get them to subscribe for the Cynosure. They are not sufficiently awake to the magnitude of the evils of the secret orders, Masonry in particular. May God grant you favor in his sight, as an instrument to help overthrow these orders, is the prayer of your unworthy servant in Christ."

Alfred Beecher, Oberlin, O., writes:

"I take many good papers, but no one that I prize equally with your paper."

J. Baldwin, Ransom, Mich., writes:

"A granger handed me his own and one new subscription and says he will do all he can for its [the Cynosure] circulation. Look for some yearly subscriptions soon."

Jas. A. Clark, Prospect, Butler Co., Pa., writes:

"I will be very glad if the General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, would come into Butler county this fall and organize a county anti-secret association or several township organizations. Since the oil development here the various secret orders have extended almost throughout the whole country, and the grange and other tradesmen's combinations are just feeders or nurseries for them, and the anti-secret need to be called out and united."

Bro. Stoddard will remember this field.

An Illustration of Masonry.

The causes of Masonic violence and ferocity, exhibited at our town meeting poll has excited fearful apprehensions for personal safety and public peace. A frightful crisis in our history has arrived. The peaceful discharge of our elective duties is obstructed by the hand of violence. Freemen are kept from the ballot boxes by brute force. Outcasts and bullies are hired by the fraternity to create disorder and riot. The fraternity were all winter inflaming and preparing their hirelings for the outrages which have been committed. Early in the day, the fraternity made a rush to the polls, secured the passages, and in defiance of all civil authority, kept their ground through the day. The disorder was so great that the polls were forced to close for some time. A large number of citizens after several efforts to vote, were forced back and compelled to abandon it. At night it being known that at least one-fourth of our votes were not in, the board adjourned over till the next morning.

Immediately after closing of the polls, the abuse and menaces, which had been kept up through the day, were turned into blows and bloodshed. In the course of the brutal conflict, at least four men, with fists, feet and stones attacked one individual. In the evening one of the regular bullies of the fraternity, attacked a man with a heavy cane and inflicted three dangerous wounds upon his bare head. This wretch was bailed by two highly respectable Freemasons.

Fredrick Whittlesey, Esq, was want only assaulted, knocked down and jumped upon at the town meeting. He was standing alone and unconscious of any design to attack him. He had been engaged most of the day in his office, and had neither molested or offended any one. But he is a member of the Morgan Committee, and has for nearly three years devoted his time and talents to the investigation of Masonic outrages. For this offense, it would seem, that his person and life are in jeopardy. This ferocious and unprovoked assault upon Mr. Whittlesey leads us to a train of the most painful reflections. If men who oppose Freemasonry are to be thus knocked down and trampled upon, how long shall we be able to boast of law and freedom. The fraternity seemed determined to impress its bloody sign upon all its opponents. The outrage will receive a judicial investigation and we forbear further comments.

LESSON XXXiv.—AUG. 23, 1874.—POWER OVER DISEASE.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK v. 24-34; Commit 24-29; Primary Verse 28.

24 And Jesus went with him; and much people followed him, and thronged him.

25 And a certain woman which had an issue of blood twelve years,

26 And had suffered many things of many physicians, and had spent all that she had, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse,

27 When she had heard of Jesus, came in the press behind, and touched his garment.

28 For she said, If I may touch but his clothes, I shall be whole.

29 And straightway the fountain of her blood was dried up; and she felt in her body that she was healed of that plague.

30 And Jesus, immediately knowing in himself that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about in the press, and said, Who touched my clothes?

31 And his disciples said unto him, Thou seest the multitude thronging thee, and sayest thou, Who touched me?

32 And he looked round about to see her that had done this thing.

33 But the woman fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before him, and told him all the truth.

34 And he said unto her, Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"And as many as touched him were made whole."—MARK vi. 56.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

Where was Jesus in our last lesson? Why did he leave the healed man there?

What is the first topic? Who was the sufferer? How long had she suffered? (verse 25.) How much had she expended on physicians? Did she grow better? (verse 26.) How is the sinner like this woman?

What is the second topic? How did this woman know of Jesus? (vr. 27.) Some one that had been healed had probably told her. Why did she think Jesus would heal her when her money was all gone? Probably many heard of Jesus and did not go. What different kinds of hearing are there? What does it say in Rom. x. 10.

What is the third topic? What did she do when she heard? (verse 27.) What did she say? (verse 28.) How did she know she would be healed? What happened to her when she touched Jesus? How long was it before she was healed? (verse 29.) How many were near Jesus? (verse 31.) Is it probable that others touched him? What was the difference in the touch?

What is the fourth topic? How did Jesus know that any one touched him? (verse 30.) Did the disciples know it? (verse 31.) What did Jesus do? (verse 32.) What did the woman do? (verse 33.) What did she know? (verse 33.) How was she like the man at Gadara? Do you think Jesus wants witnesses now?

What is the fifth topic? What did Jesus say to her (verse 34.)? Was his a blessing? Suppose the woman had gone away and not confessed Jesus, what would she have lost? Name the three words of blessing. —National S. S. Teacher.

The Duty of Confessing Christ.

This may be profitably dwelt upon in connection with the above lesson. The Illustrated Bible Studies has this remark on the subject: This is some times delayed. She might easily have withdrawn, and been unnoticed in the crowd. She would have gone healed of "that plague;" but there was still another plague of which she needed to be cured. Jesus would have her healed of that also. He is merciful to her beyond her utmost thought. Concealment, in such a case, would be wrong, and would bring harm upon herself, at least prevent her from obtaining an infinately greater blessing, as clearly within reach, as easy for him to bestow, as that already received. The wonderful skill and most gracious mingling of firmness and delicacy with which our Saviour arrested her attention, detained her departure, questioned her, revealed her heart to herself, caused her to see what she had done and thought of doing, made her feel that he knew all, assured her confidence, emboldened her trust, so that she could not help but "tell him the truth," and right there openly witness a good "confession." This gracious tact and wisdom of Jesus has always been peculiarly admired. It has especially made this impression upon thoughtful minds in all ages, that Jesus is the best confidante that one can possibly have; and that he understands exactly how to deal with us in a way precisely suited to the peculiarities of each one's condition and disposition. Besides that, does it not teach that no naturally shrinking timidity is a good excuse for one's refusing to confess Christ before the world?

Cultivating Benevolence.

In Dr. Murdock's essay on "Developing the Mission Spirit" in Sabbath-school instruction occurs this paragraph, which may furnish food for thought to those who are trying to cultivate a spirit of benevolence in the minds of the young:

You all aim, I assume, to cultivate the grace of giving in the members of your schools. But a simple mention of the motives by which you seek to stimulate this grace is enough to show a false method, if not an ignoble end. In many instances there is the simple spring of competition; which scholar or which class shall give the most to the funds of the school. You thus engender a spirit in your holy work which is little better than that evoked by a running or a rowing match. Or, it may be, you set before your schools some local improvement—the adornment of the school room, or the increase of the library, or some other object which lies on the plane of individual or of social self-seeking. I have not consulted the statistics of all the schools in the State on this head; but guided by a somewhat extensive personal observation, I am led to the belief that the larger part of all that our schools contribute at their weekly gatherings, is expended in one form or another on themselves; on books, on illustrated papers, which are prized chiefly for their pictorial attractions, or on festivals and picnics. It is better, doubtless, that the money of your children should be amassed in your treasures, even for public ends like these, than that they should be left to spend it on personal tastes and pleasures of a lower sort; but until you do something more than to coax the boy out of his candy or his toys for the sake of a new book, or a better fitted school room, do not persuade yourself that you are training his benevolent affections, or leading him into the ways of Christian beneficence.

Home and Health Hints.

Household Helps.

No intelligent farmer or mechanic of modern times thinks for a moment of successfully carrying on his business without the aid of all the machinery that can really be of advantage to him. Every well-appointed farm has its mower or reaper, its tedder, its hay-fork, its improved plows, its hay-cutter, its apparatus for steaming food, if it be a stock farm, and all the lesser appliances that supplement the skill and industry of the workman. This is as it should be. But when we leave the precincts of the farm-yard and stables and cross the threshold of the kitchen and dining-room, what are we sure of hearty meals to provide punctually at the appointed hour every day, children to look after, a baby to take care of, butter to work, calves to feed, chickens to attend to, besides the inevitable washing, ironing and mending that comes every week, it does seem as though she should have every possible aid—a good stove or range, to begin with, as this is really the central point of the household machinery, with abundance of fuel ready for use and not far away. A poor, small stove, though the best of fuel is provided, is a continual aggravation; a good, large stove, with poor fuel, is equally unsatisfactory. We knew a lady once, a clergyman's wife, who lived in a village where dry wood could not be obtained, as everybody found boot making more profitable than wood chopping. On baking day she would go regularly to her husband and say, laughing, "Now, Brother B., I'm going to bake; you must begin to pray." That didn't always give a nice brown to the loaves or keep the under pie crust from being soggy. How much it had to do with the uniform cheerfulness of the tried housewife it would be difficult to tell. The smiles that wreated her face in the midst of such trials were those of a saint.

Even when farm work presses, on Monday, the housekeeper, if she has no hired girl, ought to have the services of one of the hired men at least part of a day, to work the washing machine if she has one, or stand at the pounding-barrel, to turn the wringer, pump the water, empty the tubs, and keep the fire hot; so that, if possible, the washing may be out of the way in time to get dinner in season, and no return to wash-tubs be necessary when dinner is over. Some women have so much sweetness of disposition, and such abounding health that they can bear everything with equanimity; those who are not thus blessed should not, as a matter of policy, be called on for the manifestation of amiability of which they are incapable. An energetic, ambitious housekeeper must, to keep up her spirits, see a way through her work, and if "Alps on Alps arise," and there is no possibility of scaling them, she will become either melancholy or ill-tempered—either of which states of mind is most unhappy for all concerned. "Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God care for the oxen?" Much more than they should the woman who works hard enjoy the fruit of her labor; turning her poultry and eggs, butter and honey into whatever may assist in making her work light, keeping her young in feeling and buoyant in spirit.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Selection of Fruit.—The flavor and delicacy of fruit depends upon its being gathered when in its "apogee of esculence." There is one supreme hour when it is just ripe, and that hour should be seized for its preservation. The reason why fruit canned in the household is often so much better than that bought in the stores is that it was in a more perfect condition—neither over ripe nor under ripe—when it was put in the cans. Some fruits are more perishable than others, but as a general rule the sooner fruit is canned after it is ripe the better it will be.

Zinc Milk Pans.—Experiments in England have recently been made regarding the effects of zinc upon milk, and it was found that milk kept in zinc vessels will continue sweet four or five hours longer than it will in vessels of any other material.

Hydrophobia.—The Kansas City Times gives the following remedy on the authority of a gentleman who has had large experience with dogs and who has been bitten by rabid animals no less than three times, and been cured by this means:

After being bitten take, immediately, warm vinegar and wash the wound well, then dry it thoroughly, and pour upon the wound a few drops of muriatic acid, which destroys the poison of the saliva. Then take one and a half ounces elecampane root, and boil down to a half pint. Of this decoction take a small quantity every morning, eating no food until afternoon, and then sparingly. This treatment should be kept up one week.

The earliest symptoms of hydrophobia in a dog is restlessness and a constant desire to turn round. The eyes become bloodshot, countenance anxious; sees objects in the air, and frequently snaps at imaginary things; has a depraved appetite, displays an unusual fondness for his master, and an intense desire to lick his hands and face. The sooner such a dog is killed the better.

Farm and Garden.

Doing Farm-work well.

There is no department of industry where doing work well pays better than in farming. We all admit the necessity with regard to other branches of business, but many and perhaps most times practically deny it in this. There is not one farmer in fifty that is as careful with his crops as the manufacturer is with his wares. The cloth we buy has no broken threads in warp or woof, and the tailor's stitches mean business every time or he does not get a second job. The carriage in which we ride is not thrown together, but fitted part to part so that the whole vehical is almost as much one piece as though it grew together—iron and wood. So of all industries upon which the world writes success.

Take a few facts about farming. One year ago the writer employed a man to plow an acre of land, and for special reasons wanted it done well. While the owner was in the field, and a part of the time holding the plow, each furrow was cut exactly the same width and depth, the whole mass properly disintegrated, and left in the best condition that the plow could leave it. Afterwards the furrows were cut some four inches wide and some ten, measuring in depth all the way from one inch to eight, always deepest in the lightest soil. There was no brain put into the business, and as little strength as the nature of the work would allow.

Of course the harrow followed the plow, but it could not remedy the wrong, and the consequence was that nearly twice as much time was required to make the field plantable as under other circumstances would have been necessary; and when the grain was harvested, the four rows on the outside, where the breaking up was as perfectly done as could be, bore at least a quarter more corn than the slighted, outraged interior. Now, take the farms from Maine to California. On what proportion is the primary work of plowing done in the best possible manner? And yet no part of the preparation or after culture is so important as this, or bears so direct relations to a good yield.

Take another department of farm work. Several years ago the owner of a considerable dairy was perplexed beyond measure at the meagerness of the yield of butter from a certain number of cows. The milk was as abundant as usual, the house manipulation was good, and yet when he should have marketed from fifty to sixty pounds a week, he rarely ever went over forty. His perplexity grew apace until happening to go into his yard after his two hired men had completed the night's milking, he found from a pint to a quart of milk in the udder of each cow—the practice of the milkers, as he afterwards learned, being to stop the moment the flow abated, leaving the very best portion behind.

A radical change in the mode of milking added several pounds of butter a week to his product at once, and solved forever a perplexing problem.

Now, take all the cows in this country—millions on millions—what proportion of them are milked as they should be? Some are, but a vast number are not. And yet, it requires not more than a minute of additional time to each animal—perhaps four hours in a summer, or six at most.

Not to mention other neglects equally, and even more costly, suppose that the plowing in these United States could be done as perfectly as possible, and the milking as well as it can be, would not the aggregate of the increase of products be immense, perhaps turn the scale, that is now about evenly balanced, in favor of farming as a money-making business?—New York Witness.

The large draft made upon milch cows to supply the extra nutriment required to make their milk, so sharpens their appetites that they are often found cropping greedily what other cattle will not touch. This is especially true of large milkers. They are, too, more sensative to disturbing influences, such as unwholesome or poisonous food, than other cattle, because so much of the strength of their food is carried away in their milk that they are not as well nourished, and hence have not the vigor to ward off and bear up against adverse agencies. Hence they often become the victims of misfortune when others in the same field, and apparently surrounded by the same circumstances and liabilities escape. I have twice, in my dairy experience, had some of my best milkers taken with symptoms as described from eating too freely of a certain species of dwarf wild cherry. The prussic acid contained in the leaves and bark of the twigs was sufficient to poison them. Such food the less voracious appetites of the rest of the flock would not induce them to taste, and they were consequently unharmed.—New York Tribune.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MASONIC FUNERAL—RENEWAL OF A REMARKABLE ACQUAINTANCE—THE ILLINOIS AGENT.

GRAND RIDGE, Ill., Aug. 7, 1874.

I preached last Sabbath to the United Presbyterian and the General Assembly Presbyterian churches in Wenona, to good and attentive audiences. To-night I am to speak in the City Hall, Ottawa, and preach next Sabbath morning in the Presbyterian church, Streator, and at night in a public hall there. I received $130 in Wenona for the college, and hear of students wherever I go who expect to attend uext fall. These are but tokens and symptoms of the progress of truth against the loathesome and dangerous conspiracy of the secret orders against our government, religion and the outside world generally. Meantime the Freemasons are galvanized by the discussion into new life and vigor. Day before yesterday they held their pagan fooleries over a dead man in Ottawa, and, as on all such occasions, a multitude came together to keep each other in countenance and keep up courage. The idea of an assembly of a huudred or two of Masons and Sir Knights to bury the corpse of a private citizen argues desperatiou, shallowness and absurdity all at once.

At Farm Ridge, near here, I met Rev. J. P. Hiester, who, thirty-eight or nine years ago, saved me from a mob and took me from Mercersburgh to Green Castle, Pa., when it was unsafe for me to ride in the stage. A meeting of friends after thirty-nine years' absence is as impressive as it is unusual. Rev. Mr. Hiester stood firm through our national agony and now takes the Cynosure for his interesting family to read, and learn to stand with their husband and father on the frontier of reform. I hope Mr. Hiester will post himself thoroughly in this movement and speak publicly in its behalf.

Rev. Mr. Hinman, our Illinois agent, lives at Farm Ridge. I met him at Wenona, pushing the good cause on with singular sincerity and earnest good sense. I called for an hour at his residence, and my acquaintance with him and his family justifies the choice of the committee in his appointment. He is doing well for the Cynosure and other publications.

GEN. O. O. HOWARD AGAIN.

—The following, from the Chicago Times, is simply loathsome and detestible. Gen Howard took charge of millions of public property in time of war. He has been twice arraigned upon the same facts for mal-administration or embezzlement, and fully cleared and exhonerated both times, though meeting every charge squarely and affording every facility to the investigation. To charge such a man by sneer and implication as below, is only worthy of a paper onco suppressed for treason, and saved by the interposition of politicians:

"Gen. O. O. Howard, recently assigned to the department of the Columbia, leaves for his new field of duty on Thursday. Last night, at the invitation of a score of members of the Young Men's Christian Association, he was treated to a farewell banquet. The party felicitated themselves upon the heavy amounts they had amassed from the public in divers ways through the medium of the Association. Gen. Leggett, the Commissioner of patents, presided. The Commissioner of Indian affairs, who admired Howard's system of bringing to Washington half-breed Indians, and palming them off as noble chiefs, mingled his prayers with Howard's for the success of the new deal. Frank H. Smith, president of the Association, and a notorious ring contractor, in addition to being official reporter of the House of Representatives, was present It is a singular fact that, with one or two exceptions, all those who engineered or partook of the gastronamic feats have figured for the past several years as cootractors and bidders for almost every class of work solicited by the Government. They have profited well, over all the expense of the Association of which they are members."

NOTES.

—Let every reader turn to the first page and read the article from the Corresponding Secretary of the National Association, and also his report of memberships received since tha Syracuse Convention on page fourth. Read and improve diligently.

—The exposition of the Knights of Pythias given on our second page will be read with an interest approaching disgust at the foolishness of the proceedings described. It is a bolder swindle than Freemasonry because shallower aud less full of solemn mockery of sacred things. The friend who furnished it to us is a member of the Free Methodist church and his statement may be considered reliable.

—The following item occurs in the abstract of the minutes of the thirty-fourth meeting of the eastern district of the Evangelical Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio and adjacent States:

"It was also remarked that in many congregations, there are yet members who belong to secret societies. Pastors, have in general been faithful in bearing testimony agaiust such orders, so that this evil is gradually growing less; yet it would be well if congiegations would co-operate more with their pastors, by taking a more decided stand and making a public confession against secret societyism."

—Grange Grand Master Allen, of Missouri, who was photographed by our Gentry county correspondent last week, is farming his State with double industry. It is said that he has traveled 20,000 miles in his work aud of the one hundred and fourteen counties he has visited nearly every one, and left but two without his mark. The Missouri farmers should next appoint a commission to estimate the cost of this unexampled "drumming," and they will do well to take into consideration what may be the moral influences of this apostle of secrecy and defamation.

—The Freemason of St. Louis says that the procesion at the Chicago corner-stone laying was eight miles long notwithstanding the Anti-masonic protest. It is fortunate for the credibility of the Editor of the Freemason that he was not here, but took his report from heresay. The number of Freemasons was not over one thousand. We estimated the number carefully at different points in the march. The Odd-fellows and Knights of Pythias formed about as many more. No other secret societies were in the procession. Officials, bands, firemen, employees of of the post office, workmen on the Custom-House, and street boys who had a free ride formed a procession not two miles long.

—The Methodist Free Press came to us last week from Sycamore, Ill., where it has been removed from Rockford. G. L. and I. R. B. Arnold, of the Reformer will be the future publishers and managing editors, while the corresponding editors remain as before. January 1st, the two will be consolidated into The Reformer and Free Press, and will be issued weekly. This union will doubtless aid the cause, for the union of two struggling enterprises will give strength and vigor. The friends of the reform everywhere are well acquainted with the Arnold Brothers, and there will be no lack of confidence in their fidelity to the principles of the reform. They will stand by God's truth, and we sincerely trust they may be blessed and successful in their work. The cause will not lose the efforts of Bro. Lemley, who still continues the Golden Censer.

—We are informed that one of the Congregational churches of northern Illinois received a number of members last spring as the ingathering of a revival season. A number of these would agree to unite with the church only on condition that such of the articles of faith as were objectionable to them should be omitted when they were received. One of the number, who is a high Masor, demanded the omission of reference to the eternal punishment of the wicked, which he did not believe. This gentleman has been appointed by his ministerial association as delegate to the National Congregational Council to be held in New Haven in the fall. If that council contains any amount of such an element, the less churches of Jesus Christ have to do with it the better.

—A gentleman who has been traveling in Iowa lately says that it is a common opinion with people of intelligence that the granger movement has set that State backward from five to ten years. Doubtless Minnesota and Wisconsin, the latter especially on account of its rail-road quarrels, will suffer equally. The extortions of middlemen and rail-roads are a trfle compared with the wholesale swindling practiced by grange leaders on our farming communities through the agency of ambitious, Quixotic men, whose virtues are absorbed by their indiscretion. The single item of its expense should condemn the grange with every sane man. The Good Hope Grange, McDonough county, Ill., lately disbanded, reports yearly expenses for less than 100 members of $775. The Waukegan Gazette well says, "The men at Springfield and Washington who grant charters and make quarterly assessments are the ones most likely to make money out of the grange movement."

Cotemporary Notes:

There appears to be a deficiency in secret societies. To arrest this mighty evil it requires earnest labor and not the novelty of entering the lodge-room. But thanks be to God for the praying women trusting in the Eternal, and praying for a victory. Thus, by a power above that of the inventor of sin, the curse that has blighted families, ruined talent, defeated armies, disgraced nations, and damned souls, may be swept from the land, and our brothers and children saved from the fatal poison of the serpent's fang, and wounded hearts be healed, and sad families made to rejoice over the salvation secured to their dear ones from the bondage of intemperance.—From Report of Rochester N. Y. Wesleyan Conference.

A man came before the Presbytery of Chartiers, not long since, complaining that he had been wronged by the session. It seems he joined the order of the Freemasons, and knowing he had violated the law he went to the sessiou and told them of it. The session of the church, considering the matter, suspended him, refusing his request at the same time that he be furnished with a certificate of good standing. Of this he would complain. The Presbytery, in a kind but very decided way, informed him that, being a violator of the law, he was not entitled to a certificate, and re-affirmed the action of the session. This, of course, was all it could do, and it is all considerate men, whatever their opinions might be about the propriety of the law, would expect it to do.—United Presbyterian.

Suppose we did pursue a policy by which we gathered large crowds of rationalists, secret-societyists, and various other errorists into congregations which we agreed to misname Lutheran; of what advantage would that be? What good could could come such impious policy, which sets aside the Word of God to make room for human sin and folly? . . . We would like to have it well understood that we are perfectly willing to leave the policy of setting aside the will of the Lord for the purpose of getting a multitude into church, to those who have a heart for such business. . . . We will none of it. Rationalists and deiests are not of us, and so long as they remain such we don't want them.—Lutheran Standard.

Deeply as all will feel such a fall, if fall it be, we think Christendom can get on without Mr. Beecher or any other man, and that Christiauity can stand even his defection, whether from the faith once delivered to the saints or from the decalogue. There is no doubt that he is a great preacher, but he has never been regarded as a sound preacher, and his errors have latterly been becoming more and more apparent, until they culminated recently in discrediting the story of Eden, which he calls a parable or fable. With that story, of course, goes the fall of man and the need of redemption by the blood of Christ, and, in fact, all the foundations of the system commonly called evangelical Christianity. The grief of the followers of Tyndal over anything that discredits Mr. Beecher's preaching is likely to be more poignant than that of earnest Christians, although the latter will doubtless feel more deeply for him, and pray more earnestly for his recovery from error of all kinds.—Daily Witness.

Of the same matter the Witness says again:

"Many are deploring the effect upon families of all the scandalous particulars of this case going into them in the public journals; but there is another side to that question. If there is any more tremendous, and at the same time instructive warning against undue familiarities or intimacies with the wives or husbands of others than this case presents, we know not where it is to be found. For both sexes it is alike instructive, and that without assuming any absolute guilt; for if indiscretion can lead to such agonizing consequences as have already resulted from this case, who would dare to be indiscreet?

Another great lesson is taught by this case. It shows the tremendous power of the law of God, and that the greatest preacher and most popular man of the age may be suddenly bereft of fame, honor, and influence, if it be proved that he has come into collision with one of the ten commandants."

Young Men in Cities.

City life holds out attractions which continually draw young men from their rural homes into our large cities, where the enemy of souls is ever on the alert to allure them into sin by the multitudinous devices and agencies which abound in the city, and which are not suspected by the unsophisticated until too late.

We desire to save all such from ruin, and, in the the furtherance of this object, wish to call the attention of clergymen, parents and friends to our rooms and the privileges which can be secured to young men, strangers coming into our city, that they may have letters of introduction to us. To become acquainted with proper associates and mingle in good society upon their first arrival in the city, is a matter often of vital importance.

We are prepared to introduce all young men into any church of the denomination which they have been accustomed to attend, where they will be at home at once and under good influences.

Our association is as a vestibule to the church, to receive and distribute the strangers that come into our midst, and we shall be pleased to meet every young man that enters our city as a stranger.

Our reading rooms are at No. 148 Madison street, near La Salle, open every day from 8 A. M. to 10 P. M., having the principal papers and magazines on file, and a well-selected library of 2,500 volumes.

Our boarding house list has upon it nearly 100 good Christian homes, from which strangers can select free of charge.

We conduct the following meetings at our rooms, to which all strangers are cordially invited, until they get settled in their own church home:

Noon-day Prayer Meeting daily for forty-five minutes; Young Men's Prayer Meeting every Saturday evening; Gospel Meeting every Sunday evening; Strangers' Meeting every Monday evening, when young men, strangers, can make the acquaintance of members from the different churches in the city, who will be present as delegates from the respective churches to look after them.

Conversational Bible Class every Sunday morning for one hour before the regular church services.

Young men wishing to spend their evenings pleasantly as well as profitably, are invited to the Lyceum for debates, music, readings, etc., every alternate Tuesday evening. Lectures after the completion of our new hall every Thursday evening. Other entertainments will be provided early in the fall, and whatever is most practical and feasible will be undertaken to supply young men with a pleasant place of resort to spend their evenings, and if possible draw them from the many avenues of amusement which are of a questionable character.

Our Employment Bureau is at No. 145 Fifth avenue, in charge of Mr. J. M. Hitchcock, who has been the Superintendent of that branch of the work for several years, and will do all he can toward finding young men employment. We would, however, suggest to young men not to come to Chicago for work, as there are at the present time thousands of persons without employment.

But our latch string is always out to all strangers visiting the city, and we cordially invite them to call.

In behalf of young men,

W. W. Van Arsdale,

Sup't Young Men's Christian Association.

—The National Congregational Council, formed at Oberlin in 1871, will hold its second meeting in New Haven, September 30th.

—Bishop Edwards of the U. B. church has returned from a mission to the Pacific coast. He represents the work of that church to be progressing on the western slope.

—Rev. J. W. Bain, late of Allegheny City, Pa., who has accepted the pastorate of the Memorial United Presbyterian church of Chicago will be installed on the last Wednesday of August.

—The northermost Congregational church of the United States is in Calumet, Lake Superior region. They dedicated a new house of worship on the first Sabbath of July. This church is about a year old and has some forty members.

—The bishops of the M. E. church, South, have appointed a week of prayer, which is to be duly observed by the whole church, beginning Friday, August 21st, for the enlarging and strengthening of the borders of their Zion.

—The colored Methodist Episcopal church in America has four bishops, fifteen annual conferences, 607 traveling preachers, 74,799 members, 535 Sabbath-schools, 1,102 teachers, 49,955 scholars, a monthly paper, with 1,500 subscribers, and a book-store. It is endeavoring to establish a school for the education of its young ministers.

—The Presterian church shows the following increase: Communicants, 495,634 in 1874, against 446,161 in 1870. Members of Sunday-schools, 516,971 in 1874, against 448,855 in 1870. During the same time, owing to the union, the number of Synods has decreased from 51 to 35, and the number of Presbyteries from 250 to 174. The number of ministers and churches has slightly increased.

—The Christian Union and the Watchman and Reflector endorse P. T. Barnum's circus and menagerie as "unique and pre-eminently moral" and managed "with so much skill and organizing ability that criticism is quite disarmed." But Barnum himself advertises in the latter that he has one thousand men and women, and seven hundred horses, one hundred being used "specially for the great hurdle and flat races, by young and daring lady riders." And yet these journals would consider their religious character disgraced if a notice of a low comedy theater should get into their columns.

—The movement among the "Old Catholics" of Switzerland is working very great reformation in some of the Cantons. Public services will no longer be performed in Latin, but in the spoken tongue of the people who assemble for worship. Parish priests are to be elected by their congregations, instead of being appointed over them; and are to be free to marry when and whom they please. Both the bread and wine are to be administered to each communicant, and the Bible is 'solemnly and publicly adopted as the standard of the truths to be taught."

—The Moravian Missionary Society was formed nearly one hundred years ago, chiefly through the instrumentality of the eminent Count Zinzendorf. Through all their history this people have been distinguished for their successful missionary labors. They have stations in Greenland, Labrador, among the North American Indians, in eight of the West India Islands, in Central America, in Surinam, in South West, and East Africa, in Australia and in Northern India. The number of converts now living is estimated at seventy thousand.—Christian Advocate.

—New York has a Young Ladies Christian Association, with rooms at No. 64 Irving Place. This association has been organized three years, and is composed of young ladies from the wealthiest and most influential families in the city, who give their time and contribute of their resources to aid their sisters less wealthy in silver and gold than they to procure homes and situations in intelligent and respectable families. There is no expense attending applications to this association either to families or individuals desiring its friendly offices, but its operations are confined to the higher order of Protestant industrial women. References of an unquestionable character are required of all who make application to the association. Connected with it are free schools of reading, drawing, writing, book-keeping, singing, and machine sewing.

—We have to do our part in saving a nation and a nation to which God has given a great power in shaping the destiny of the world. If we reflect a moment we are overwhelmed by the possibilities of our national future. We have only just begun to possess the land. Our treasuries of soil and mine are scarcely explored. From our older States and from foreign sources the tide of population is rolling on to new homes in the heart of the continent, beyond the Mississippi and beyond the Rocky Mountains. All this mass of busy life constitutes an integral element of our national existence. We contemplate it with a feeling of awe, and even of apprehension. It must be reached by the Gospel. It must be evangelized by self-denying effort. The idea of its being left to itself is simply appalling. If barbarism is not "the first danger," it is one of the first, and barbarism of a kind the more terrible for the civilization which it leaves behind it.—N. Y. Evangelist.

News of the Week.

The City.

Considerable delegations of Mennonites, the self-exiled peace lovers of Russia, have passed through Chicago on their way to Dakota and Manitoba. Some 350 passed through lately while other companies are on the way. Unless they are more fortunate than other whites, their peace principles will be tested by the Indians.———The Chicago elevators, according to official figures, contain 1,119,807 bushels of wheat, 1,663,955 bushels of corn, 109,031 bushels of oats, 23,888 bushels of rye, and 13,012 bushels of barley, making a total of 2,929,693 bushels against 3,746,451 at this time last year.———A strange church imbroglio is that of the Ada Street M. E. church, Rev. Dr. Dandy, pastor, and Freemason. The church was in financial embarrassment and the pastor wanted more salary. Ira Brown, the leading financial member and supporter, used severe language concerning the management of the church, and charges were preferred against him by Dandy. He retaliated with charges against the character of the latter, of which two seem to be proved—the use of tobacco and patronage of a dancing school.———The city and corporation counsel having decided that the action of the Common Council, in appointing architects for the new City Hall, was illegal, has been forced to resign; one is wanted more suitable for the purpose of the present administration. The Mayor has vetoed the action of the Council.———The Inter-State Industrial Exposition which was so successful last year opens again September 9th, continuing to Oct. 10th. The building has been enlarged to a length of 1,000 feet and is 240 feet wide.

The Country.

From September 1st to November State Fairs will be held in nearly all the northern half of the Union, and grand Expositions in Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Kansas City, and Chicago, which will continue from two to four weeks each. The annual exhibition of the American Institute opens in New York city Sept. 9th and closes Nov. 14th.———The main reservoir which supplies Trenton, N. J., with water gave way last week and flooded the streets and cellars with 30,000,000 gallons of water. No lives were lost.———The large reservoir at Clarksburg, Mass., supplying the power for the North Adams factories, is leaking, and people are looking for another flood.———The Beecher investigation, though the end was promised last week, seems yet far from closed. Moulton, a business man of some standing in New York and mutual friend of both Tilton and Beecher, has been trying to avoid examination, but made indignant by the publication of correspondence with the latter has agreed to tell the whole story as confided to him by both parties, and present the letters committed to his care. He was to come before the committee on Monday. Mr. Beecher has not made his statement. The attempt to bring the case into court was made by an outside party and was a mere farce; but it is thought the whole matter will be brought to trial ere long. Mrs. Swisshelm has written a letter exhonerating Tilton.———The National Educational Convention closed in Detroit last Thursday. In the latter State the small grains are harvested and safe, but the corn crop will be lost in large sections.———Reports from various points in Illinois, Iowa, and Kansas, estimate for the first State, a corn crop somewhat below the average, wheat fair, oats one-half to two-thirds crop. In Iowa, oats and corn promise a good crop. The Home Circle.

Resting in God.

Since thy Father's arm sustains thee,
Peaceful be;
When a chastening hand restrains thee,
It is he,
Know his love in full completeness
Fills the measure of thy weakness;
If he wound thy spirit sore,
Trust him more.

Without murmur, uncomplaining
In his hand
Lay whatever things thou canst not Understand.
Though the world thy folly spurneth,
From thy faith in pity turneth,
Peace thy inmost soul shall fill,
Lying still.

Fearest sometimes that thy Father
Hath forgot?
When the clouds around thee gather
Doubt him not.
Always hath the daylight broken,—
Always hath he comfort spoken,—
Better hath he been for years
Than thy fears.

Therefore, whatso'er betideth,
Night or day,—
Know his love for thee provideth
Good alway,
Crown of sorrow gladly take,
Grateful wear it for his sake,
Sweetly bending to his will;
Lying still.

To his own thy Saviour giveth
Daily strength;
To each troubled soul that liveth;
Peace at length.
Weakest lambs have largest share
Of this tender Shepherd's care:
Ask him not, then, "When?" or "How?"
Only bow.

Is the Bible Prohibited in Turkey?

[Letter from Isaac G. Bliss, Constantinople.]

During the month of January last passt, 2,276 copies of the sacred Scriptures were sold at our depot and by means of colporteurs in this city. Of these over 1,000 were single Gospels in the Turkish language sold to Moslems. This unprecedented sale of the sacred Scriptures was due in a great measure to the earnest labors of the colporteurs. It was noticed and commented upon by one of the local Turkish journals in such a way as to arouse the bigoted Moslems. The police were notified, and one of their number visited the new Bible House to make inquiries and if possible find out who was the instigator of the movement. He was politely received and shown around the building. He was amazed at the stock of Bibles, books and tracts in various languages in the different storerooms. He evidently had not dreamed that the world contained so many books. He remarked to the person in attendance: "You may think that there are 20,000 books in this building, but I say there are more than 100,000. The building is full to the very top." He inquired for the director and was told that he was absent in Egypt. He asked where the man was who printed the Turkish Testament, and received the answer that he was dead. He then said: "Where is the head of the printing establishment in this building?" and the reply was made that he too was away for the day. The Turk was greatly mystified, and could not comprehend why responsibility happened to be so intangible just at that time. He was accordingly informed that if he would call again in a few days he would be able to see both the director and the present printer.

Doubtless the report of this gentleman to his superiors deeply impressed them with the idea that such a number of Bibles and Testaments and religious books and tracts implied the purpose of proselyting that could not be tolerated. Accordingly, the Minister of Instruction, a bigoted Moslem, was appealed to, and backed by the Sheik ul Islam, decided that the sale of the Turkish Gospels must be stopped. So without notice that the Government could not allow the sale of such books, one of the colporteurs was arrested, his books taken from him, and the sale of Turkish sacred Scriptures prohibited.

It is said that about this time, at a meeting of the Sultan's Cabinet, the Sheik ul Islam came in with great dignity, and taking from his bosom one of the Gospels that a colporteur had sold to a Moslem, and placing it on the table, asked with great solemnity: "Which of you gentlemen gave permission for the printing and sale of this book?" All shrugged their shoulders. One said, "It was not I," and another said, "I know nothing about the matter." About this time Mr. Bliss, the agent of the American Bible Society, returned to this city after the absence of two months. Finding the sale of Turkish sacred Scriptures was prohibited, and that the police were making trouble about the printing, he addressed a memorial to the American and English legations, asking for the immediate removal of the injunction on the ground that the Ottoman Government had fourteen years before announced to the representatives of the English and American Governments then in Constantinople, that, as these books had for many years been freely circulated in all parts of the empire, there was no objection to the printing of the Turkish sacred Scriptures in Constantinople.

Hon. G. H. Boker, the American Minister, took up the matter vigorously, called on the Minister of Foreign Affairs and complained of the conduct of the police in prohibiting the sale of books belonging to Americans which had received the approval of the censor and on which customs had been paid to the Government. Rashid Pasha was in a difficult position. Moslem bigotry was crowding him to put an entire stop to the circulation of Turkish sacred Scriptures, and our own legation and the English embassy were demanding the removal of the injunction. Rashid Pasha admitted our right to print the sacred Scriptures and sell them in book shops, but said colportage could not be allowed on the ground that it would lead to disturbance of the peace. To this it was replied that in the sixteen years 505,387 Bibles, Testaments, and portions in various languages had been sold in the empire for $130,905.35. Of these 26,282 were Turkish sacred Scriptures, and no disorder nor disturbance of the peace had resulted from the sale, and that Turks generally reverenced the book and were glad to purchase it. It was further stated that full three-fourths of these books had been sold by means of colporteurs, and that this method of sale could not be given up, on account of the danger which would result to our work and also because it was the method in which all articles of commerce to a great extent were disposed of.

Under this pressure the Minister of Foreign Affairs receded a step and said that colportage would be allowed, but not by loud street cries that would be offensive and insulting to Moslems. This was of course at once acceded to. The Minister of Foreign Affairs then suggested that all Bibles and mission books be stamped by the Government, and that no books not so stamped should be offered for sale by colporteurs.

To this it was replied that if the regulation should be made general, and applied to all books by whomsoever printed in the empire or imported from abroad, and so secured that there would be no difficulties at custom-houses in the provinces, that we might assent to it.

In the meantime the Shiek ul Islam and other bigoted Moslems were at work, and as it is believed persuaded the late Grand Vizier to issue an order to the police to visit the Bible House and seize all the Turkish books. The police, however, did not attempt to carry out the order until Monday last, two days after the change in the ministry. About half-past ten in the morning of February 16th, three police men entered the Bible depot and said to the salesman that they were sent to seize all the books in Turkish in the building. The salesman replied that while he was himself a subject of the Ottoman Government, the books were not his, and that he must report to his employers. This he did at once. One of the three then came up stairs and showed the order under which he acted. They were politely informed that the warrant was contrary to treaty stipulations, that the books belonged to American and English societies, and the seizure of the books could not be allowed, unless force was used, except as the warrant came endorsed by the English and American ambassadors. After some further conversation the police concluded to retire and send their demands to the legations. This was done in such terms that Mr. Boker felt called upon to go at once to the Porte and demand satisfaction for the insulting terms of the document itself and also for the unjustifiable trespass upon the rights of American citizens. Mr. Locock, the Secretary of the English Embassy, in the absence of the Embassdor, Sir Henry Elliot, also made strong complaint for trespass upon the rights of English subjects. The Minister of Foreign Affairs and the new Grand Vizier were exceedingly annoyed and expressed great regret at the occurence, of which they denied all knowledge. They ordered a searching inquiry to be made, and pledged both to Mr. Boker and Mr. Locock that redress should be given in the severe punishment of the real offenders.—Christian Intelligencer.

The Religion of Habit.

This is different from habitual religion. Religion as a life must, in process of time, assume the mechanical regularity without the dull monotony of a set habit. He who prays and reads his Bible, attends church and the prayer meetings regularly, comes in the course of time to feel the force of these exercises and duties in the form of a habit as certainly and imperatively as he feels the need of his meals or sleep at the period when habit not less than nature demand them, and so far as habit goes, his punctuality in religious observance is not due to the same law which demands regular rest and food. To this we have no objection. We rejoice to see principle grow into habit and become steady and strong by laying hold of that power of conformity within us which gives rise to habit. A mistake is made when this is regarded as mere habit. It is only a principle formed into systematic and vigorous activity. But over against this, and different from it, though very similar to it in externa appearance, is the religion of habit. This is the habit without the religion. It is the result of study or education and not conversion. It grows up under tuition at home or school or by association, and comes to assert its place with a force that looks like the strength of genuine piety. Thus a friend of ours known only for his worldliness in the day time never retired at night without kneeling and saying "Now I lay me down to sleep." When asked whether he professed to be religious he said no, but, said he, "My mother taught me this and I can't sleep unless I say my prayers." He declared that if, by chance, he went to bed without saying his prayers, he would get up and repeat his nursery petition before going to sleep. This is a case of the religion of habit.

We have no doubt that much church attachment and church attendance and Sunday observance are due to the same law of habit. We have nothing to object to the habit, only to the religion of the habit. We think it devoid of life-saving power. Nay more, it often becomes an accepted substitute for that which is real and divine. It also tends to deaden the religious sensibilities, for the soul is lulled into indifference by the force of frequent repetition. It is hard to break up the dead routine of formal religion and introduce the truth in some new and startling relation. The points are worn smooth and souls are dull to feel their power.—Christian Work.

Luther and his Servant.

Luther had a domestic residing in his house by the name of Elizabeth, who, in a fit of displeasure left without giving the family any notice. She subsequently fell into habits of immorality, and became dangerously ill. In her sickness she requested Luther to visit her. On taking his seat by her bed-side he said.

"Well, Elizabeth, what is the matter?"

"I desire," she replied, "to ask your pardon for leaving your family so abruptly; but I have something weighing heavily on my conscience,—I have given my soul away to Satan."

"Why," said Luther, "that's of no great consequence; what else?"

"I have," she continued, "done many wicked things; but what oppresses me most is, that I have deliberately sold my poor soul to the devil. O, tell me, sir, how can such a crime ever find mercy?"

"Elizabeth, listen to me," rejoined this man of God. "Suppose while you lived in my house, you had sold and transferred all my children to a stranger, would the sale or transfer have been lawful or binding?"

"O no," said the deeply humbled girl, "for I could have no right to do that."

"Very well, you had still less right to give your soul to the arch-enemy—it no more belongs to you than my children do; it is the exclusive property of the Lord Jesus Christ. He made it; when lost he redeemed it; it is his with all its powers and faculties, and you can't give away or sell what is not yours. If you have attempted it, the whole transaction was unlawful and void. Now, do you go to the Lord, confess your guilt with a broken heart, and contrite spirit, and entreat him to pardon you, and take back again what is wholly his own; and as for the sin of attempting to alienate his rightful property, throw that back upon the devil, for that, and that alone, is his"

The girl obeyed, was converted, and died full of faith and hope.—Selected.

Don't Tell the Children.

Don't tell the little one, who may be slightly willful, that "the black man will come out of the dark cellar and carry it off, if it does not mind." Don't create a needless fear to go with the child through all the stages of its existence.

Don't tell the little five-year-old Jimmy "the school ma'am will cut off his ears"—"pull out his teeth"—"tie him up," or any of the horrible stories that are so commonly presented to the childish imagination. Think you the little one will believe anything you tell him after he becomes acquainted with the gentle teacher who has not the least idea of putting any of those terrible threats into execution?

Don't tell the children they must not drink tea because it will make them black, while you continue the use of it daily. Your example is more to them than precept; and while your own face is fair as a June morning they will scarcely credit the oft-told tale. Either give up drinking the pleasant beverage or give your children a better reason for its non use.

Don't tell them they must not eat sugar or sweetmeats because it will rot their teeth. Pure sugar does not cause the teeth to decay; and sugar with fruits is nutritious and healthy, notwithstanding the "old saw" to the contrary. The case of city children is often cited; the cause of their pale faces and slight constitutions being an over amount of sweetmeats with their diet, when the actual cause is want of pure air and proper exercise.

Don't tell the sick one that the medicine is not bad to take, when you can hardly keep your own stomach from turning "inside out" at the smell of it. Better by far tell him the simple truth, that it is disagreeable, but necessary to his health, and you desire him to take it and at once. Ten to one he will swallow it with half the trouble of coaxing and worry of words, and love you better for your firm, decided manner.

Don't teach the children by example to tell white lies to each other and to their neighbors. Guard your lips and bridle your tongue, if you desire to have the coming generation truthful. Turthfulness is one of the foundation stones of heaven. Remember the old, old Book says "no liar" shall enter within the gates of the beautiful city. There is no distinction made between white lies and those of darker hue. A falsehood is an untruth whether the matter be great or small.—Ex.

Education in Europe.

In Saxony education is compulsory; all inhabitants of the kingdom can read and write, and every child attends school.

In Switzerland all can read and write, and have got a good primary education. Education is obligatory, and greater efforts, in proportion to its means, are made to impart primary instruction than in any other European nation.

In all the smaller States of North Germany education is compulsory, and all the children attend school.

In Denmark the same is true. All the Danes, with a few exceptions, can read, write and keep accounts. The children attend school until the age of fourteen.

In Prussia almost all the children attend school regularly, except in some of the eastern districts. An officer who had charge of the military education of the Landwehr, in twelve years had only met three young soldiers who could neither read nor write. An inquiry having been instituted, it was found that those three were the children of sailors, who had been born on the river, and had never settled in any place. Instruction is obligatory.

In Sweden the proportion of inhabitants who can neither read or write is one in a thousand. Instruction is obligatory.

In Baden every child receives instruction; and in Wurtemburg there is not a peasant or a girl of the lowest class, or a servant in an inn, who cannot read, write and account correctly; every child goes to school, instruction being obligatory.

In Holland public assistance is taken away from every indigent family that neglects to send its child to school. It is estimated that the number of illiterate is three per cent.

In Norway almost all the Norwegians can read, write and account passably well. Instruction obligatory.

In Bavaria, among 100 conscripts, but seven whose education was incomplete, or entirely wanting, were found. Instruction also obligatory.

France, with its twenty-three illiterate conscripts in 100, comes next, and is followed by Belgium, Italy, Austria, Greece, Spain, Portugal, Moldo Wallachia, Russia and Turkey, in the order named.—Ex.

Children's Corner.

Rubbed Out.

Tom was not a bad boy—indeed, his teacher classed him among the pretty good boys. He had his faults, but I am not going to tell them to you. One day he got "all twisted up," as he called it. Things went wrong, and he disobeyed his teacher. I cannot tell tales out of school, so you shall not know just what he did, but it was something very wrong.

The next morning, instead of a pleasant smile and cheery greeting, Miss Hall, his teacher, saw only a hurried glance and a troubled downward look. After devotions Tom was sent to a recitation room, that he might think and decide what to do. He was not to recite till he had decided. Tom thought. He knew that he had done wrong. He was sorry, for he loved his teacher, and seldom had been punished; but Miss Hall felt that his offense could not be overlooked. At recess she said, "Well, my boy, what shall we do?"

"I don't know, teacher," he replied. "I did very wrong, and am sorry."

"I know you are sorry," said the teacher, "and I dislike to punish you, but I do not see how I can help it; do you?"

"No ma'am. I know I ought to be punished."

"What shall it be, my boy?"

"Just what you say, teacher."

"Are you willing in some way to tell the boys what you have told me?"

"I am willing," Tom eagerly answered.

"Will you write it on the board, or say it?"

"I had rather w rite it, teacher."

So together Tom and his teacher went back to the school-room, and on the blackboard, back of the teacher's table, Tom wrote:

"I disobeyed my teacher yesterday: I am sorry, and will try to do as she wishes in future. THOMAS CARR."

You may be sure the room was very still while Tom was writing. You could hear the clock tick. Tom felt rather flustered by the unusual silence, and could not remember to spell as well as usual. He stopped at the word sorry, and looking up to his teacher, said in a low voice, "How do you spell sorry, Miss Hall—with two 'r's' or one?" He will never forget how to spell that word, I know.

When his confession was written he slipped back into the recitation room, and let the blackboard tell its own story, the teacher only adding, "I know you all will be generous enough to say nothing of this to the one who has so nobly confessed his wrong." Then she wrote Res—meaning Reserve—above the words, and there they stood all day. Tom saw them every time he looked up, and often when he didn't, too, and he thought, "Oh, dear, if I had not done wrong, if I could only take it back, and rub out those hateful words."

The next morning Tom dreaded to go to school, thinking of the handwriting on the wall. He did not even look at the blackboard till the bell rang and the teacher said, "I have rubbed out the words that were written here yesterday. Will the scholars get their Bibles and read what is in their place?" for in place of Tom's confession the teacher had written the text in Isaiah 43:25.

Every Bible was quickly turned and the passage silently read, and many a quick, intelligent glance turned toward the desk. "Please, teacher, let us read it together," said one.

So all read in a subdued tone these beautiful words:

"I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins."—S. S. Times.

Don't Harm the Little Birds.

D. F. NEWTON.

We love the song-birds, and feel that if they were taken away the earth would lose one of its richest and most wonderous charms. We love them and wonder at them, for of all God's irrational creatures they are the most wonderous and beautiful. They are the choristers of heaven, and constant ministers of that worship which goes up continually unto God, the unpaid and faithful preachers of an unselfish and beautiful piety.

Look at them, as swaying on flowery sprays they gush out those strains which chime with the songs of angels; aye, look at them as they sing, with upturned head, rapt, soft, and half-closed eyes, their frail forms quivering in the ecstatic joy, and say if you do not feel your cold and selfish heart melting into reverential awe and rising up to God on the wings of praise and prayer!

How thankful should we be that God has given us the dear birds to be our fellow-laborers and comforters, and the laborer is surely worthy of his hire. Why grudge him his pay? Why cheat him of his spring and summer work? Soon we shall see them very busy. Many have already begun.

"Don't shoot the birds, the joyous birds,
That charm the traveler's way."

Many children have abundant religious instruction at home and in churches and Sabbath-schools, and yet are suffered to grow up with the idea that there is no harm in robbing birds' nests, or torment the bugs, snakes, toads, and the lower species of animal life.

The exercise of this spirit is sure to engender a tyrannical love of power and dominion over everything, either brute or human, that is weaker than themselves, and generally leads to wickedness and cruelty.

"The Lord who gives us daily bread
Supplies their wants and hears their cry,
And every wrong which they endure
Is marked by his paternal eye.

"And should you cruelly betray
Your trust o'er those who can't complain,
Beware the measure that you mete
May be returned to you again."

because of the Jews being in the common brotherhood."

This has completely opened my eyes. I am forever an Anti-mason. We know that the Jews of to-day say that Jesus Christ was an impostor, and they justify his crucifixion, and, doubtless, they would crucify him again were he to come to their synagogues as he did 1800 years ago; because the same relations exist between them and the Saviour now as existed then. Hence the Masons with their Masonic chaplains and religious ceremonies are forging the nails and driving them into the hands and feet of the Saviour. While they call themselves Christians, they join the Jews in the cry, "Crucify him!" "Crucify him!" "Away with him!" Therefore, I say, a Mason cannot be a Christian.

I was thinking of Mary at the Saviour's tomb, weeping because she found not the Saviour; and of the disciples, as they held him by the feet; and of Peter and John, as they ran to the sepulchre; of the walk to Emmaus; of the exclamation of Thomas, "My Lord and my God;" of many of the wonderful burning words of Jesus. And oh! can I be so cruel as to join in the cruel cry of Masonry, "Away with him!" "Away with him!" Nay, let this body be burned,—let it be burned over the slow fires of the Inquisition, but never let me seem to fellowship those who do as the Masons do, deny Jesus a place in their religion and join the Jews in the cry of "Crucify him."

Most cordially and truly yours against Masonry, WILLIAM FENTON.

[By "a Mason cannot be a Christian," the brother doubtless means one who understands and accepts Masonry. There are doubtless Christians who bear the name of Masons, without understanding what it represents. Such can always be saved if shown, in the spirit of Christ, their equivocal position. They will flee the snare when they know of it.—ED.]

How the Masons of Medina Co., Ohio, Treat their Poor.

From Samuel Hale, of York, I obtained the following instances of Masonic benevolence, which are confirmed by the testimony of others acquainted with the fact. Major Randel, a citizen of York Township, Medina county, was a man of property at one time, but subsequently became reduced in circumstances so that he had no means of support. He was also a member of the Medina Lodge of Freemasons. Before he ceased to pay his dues, his "mystic brethren" allowed him to go to the poor-house where he died and was buried among the common paupers, and the citizens paid the bill. The best article of value which he possessed was a cow which he sold before going to the poor-house and deposited the money with a Masonic brother to pay his quarterage as it came due. The amount I suppose was insufficient or he unfortuuately lived too long, and so passed away unattended by his brethern and was buried without the solemn mockery of Masonic rights.

A second instance, from the same town, county and lodge, was that of Ezekiel J. Bruce. Before the county had a poor-house for its paupers, Mr. Bruce was sold at public sale to the lowest bidder. He was kept for a time by a man living some distance from town. Being unable to shave himself, the old man used to go to Medina, when he could occasionally secure a ride with some one passing, and the Masons showed their benevolence and recognized the "mystic tie of brother hood" by paying the barber for his services. When the lone poor were gathered into a common dwelling place, the old man was among them. His son, before ging west, arranged with a friend to bury his father by the side of his mother in the cemetry of the neighborhood. When the old man died Masons applied to Mr. Branch, who was to see to his burial, requesting that his body might be conveyed in the hearse to the place of interment, and signifying a purpose to take part in the funeral services. Mr. B. agreed to pay what it would cost to bring the body to the grave from the poor-house in a common wagon, which the Masons accepted and then procured a Masonic minister who accompanied the body to the grave, which Mr. B. had dug, and after making some display and scattering a few hand-fulls of dirt on the coffin, they took their departure leaving Mr. Branch to fill the grave which he had dug.

Two other cases have been reported to me in this same county, viz., Chas. Olcott, and Mr. Shawl, but the above will suffice as specimens.

"Campbellites."

Editor Christian Cynosure:

MY DEAR SIR:—In the Cynosure of July 30th an article appears headed, "A Campbellite Preacher Riding two Horses." I do not object to what is said about Mr. Black, but solely to the nick name applied to a large, intelligent and zealous people every where known as "Disciples of Christ" or "Christians," and among whom are thousands opposed to secret societies. Mr. Campbell himself, as you very well know, was always opposed to them, and opposed them strongly in his writings. Mr. Black cannot be a "Campbellite," for if he was he would be opposed to all "dark lantern societies," as Mr. Campbell was. Mr. Campbell followed Christ in this matter, and when Mr. Black makes the Lord Jesus his example in all things he will never be found "riding two horses" again.

The Cynosure claims to be non-sectarian, and to oppose all man-made rites and ceremonies; and I hope it will not compromise its character in this respect by applying approbious epithets to those who have the cause of anti-secretism at heart, and many of whom are co-operating with you in this matter. No "Disciple of Christ" can advocate or practice secretism without stultifying himself before God and man. They cannot be Masons, Odd-fellows or any thing else of that sort, without repudiating the principles for which they contend. Let their inconsistency be held up to them, and I will help to do it, but do not call them nick names and so arouse their opposition to a good cause, or induce them to cease their co-operation with you.

For one, I am for Christ, and him alone, first and last, and will oppose every thing that opposes him while life shall last. Yours for Christ,

JNO. T. WALSH.

Masonry 'Tween Decks.

York, Pa., July17, 1874.

Editor Cynosure:

There were about ten negroes on board the gunboat Wissahickon. One of these was a Canadian. He had a very good education and was naturally of good mind. As he was very kind and polite in his disposition, I was fond of conversing with him. His name was Thomas McPherson.

One evening I went up on deck and saw McPherson looking up towards the rebel batteries. I entered into conversation with him, and we soon got to talking of our good chance to get to Andersonville. I told him I feared it would go hard with him if the rebels should get him. You can imagine my surprise when he told me that he was safer than I; and that it would go harder with me if we were taken. I asked him how that could be. He replied by pulling out of his bosom a Mark Master's mark, and informing me that it would save him at any rebel prison. This mark was exactly like Elder Bernards' description in Light on Masonry. And my sable friend certainly had great faith in his mark.

This Freemason regarded Masonry with great reverence; and made it his religion. The hated Catholics, and only gave the right hand of fellowship to those that were worthy. When we parted I offered him my right hand, and was greatly surprised to get only his left, and an explanation that his right could only be given to those who were square, plumb and level.

Now, in conclusion, I will add that the day may not be far distant when some negro Sumner will lay before the United States Senate a civil rights bill, giving such as myself the right to shake the right hand of a full-blooded negro Freemason. Then I shall be happy, and will try to forget how I was politely outraged by my old Masonic shipmate with the magic mark.

Yours for the truth,

EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

Political Column.

A Single Aim.

I desire to say that my suggestions and views proceeded from a humble source and from one who seeks not for notoriety or to be officious in the planning or dictating this great movement, but from one who has spent time and money in the cause, and has suffered accordingly in business and reputation.

First, are you not undertaking to carry too great a load, or too many articles to market for the strength of your team? Freemasonry is looked upon by many as a power too great to be controlled by all the people outside of it. It has surrounded itself with fortifications like Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, workingmen's unions, Grand Army of the Republic, Good Templars, etc., till you cannot reach the grand entrenchment or fort of secretism till you have broken through these outside posts and guards. Ought we not to lay aside every weight that we may be able to meet the secret foe, disencumbered, with all the combined force that can be marshaled against him? Is not Masonry with its brood of secret supporters the greatest enemy of Christianity, morality and civil law in the United States? Can you then produce any other great reform while secrecy is alive and present to corrupt and poison in the dark all your efforts? Is not intemperance nurtured and encouraged in the secret hall, in the saloon, in the legislature and before the courts, by Freemasons? Is not the church corrupted, the Sabbath desecrated, chastity outraged, young men demoralized, and law and order trampled under foot by Masons? Are not the rings that appropriate our public lands, rob our treasuries, bankrupt our cities, speculate in our public works and lay heavy burdens of taxation upon the people, composed mostly of Masons?

Why not in a political point of view drop all side issues, aim all the guns at the head of the great serpent, and in the name of Jehovah, by the voice and votes of the good people send him back whence he came? In the meantime conduct all the other issues as moral and religious reforms.

RUM AND TOBACCO.

—Rev. Mr. Beecher, of the First Presbyterian Church, Cincinnati, stated in a recent discourse that he was told the evening before by a politician of that city, "that he would rather have the influence of one saloon in his favor on any question before the people, than the influence of the largest church in Cincinnati." This is a practical fact in all our large cities where the foreign. drinking and vicious classes are numerous enough to hold the balance of political power. Is it any wonder that judges and other officers elected by whiskey and lager, obstruct and prevent the enforcement of the laws against those upon whose votes they depend for their positions? In view of this and many other similar facts, we regard an elective judicary an abomination.

—"And ye have taken the teetotal pledge, have ye?" said somebody to an Irishman.

"Indade I have, and am not ashamed of it ither."

"And did not Paul tell Timothy to take a little wine for his stomach?"

"So he did; but my name is not Timothy, and there's nothing the matter with my stomach."

—One of the most hopeful and encouraging of the recent incidents in connection with the temperance reform is the praiseworthy, conscientious action of the Rev. Mr. Clagget, a Presbyterian clergyman, of Louisville, Kentucky, who resigned his charge rather than continue in fellowship with a church which persists in retaining, against his earnest protest, a liquor-selling deacon. When churches and clergymen generelly deal with liquor traffickers in this uncompromising spirit, the hour of victory will be near at hand.

—Hydrophobia has been, for a time, the metropolitan sensation. From the bites of rabid dogs less than half a dozen persons have died. Yet many columns in our daily journals have been filled with the details of the brutal torturing to death of hundreds of dogs in no wise tainted with the disease, and with the experiments and opinions of learned physicians. Meanwhile, another disease—delirium tremens—not less dreadful, and the cause of an immensely larger death rate, prevails, and daily sends its victims to the drunkard's shocking doom, and little comment is excited. There are no muzzles and no death torturing tanks even suggested for those who wound and poison unto death by alcohol, but instead thereof they are licensed and shielded by law.

—The Encyclopedia Americana says of tobacco: "It is a nauseous and poisonous weed, of an acrid taste and a disagreeable odor, whose properties are deleterious." Webster says: "As a medicine it is a narcotic, emetic and carthartic."

—The women have an influence as powerful to suppress this evil as the liquor trafic. If they would discourage the use of tobacco by every means in their power, the day would not be far distant when the filthy, unhealthy, wasteful and offensive habit would be numbered among the things of the past.

—California is coming into the ranks as a tobacco growing district likely to rival Connecticut and Cuba. She has plantations of as much as 375 acres and of all sorts of small er sizes down to five acres are common, and the yield is said to be 2,000 pounds per acre of cured tobacco.

—Hezekiah Butterworth, in the Watchman and Reflector, says: "There are five hundred less liquor saloons in Boston to-day than there were two years ago, and three hundred less than one year ago. The temperance meetings during the past winter at the North End Mission and at Father Cook's Bethel, and those held under the direction of the Temperance Album in Tremont Temple and in Music Hall, have attracted larger and more enthusiastic audiences than were ever gathered for a like purpose in the city before. Never did the cause of temperance here appear more promising than now. To one who has watched this gradual advance of public sentiment in favor of temperance. it would seem that the cause, having right and the civil law on its side, only lacked Christian power to make it a success. Not the passive power, which is already everywhere exerted, but active, aggressive power."

—Dr. Bowditch, the wise man of Boston, advises the planting of vineyards and the sale of mild ales, beer and light wines as a temperance measure, and even the Rev. Mr. Murray thinks sweet cider a delicious and harmless drink. On the other hand, reliable witnesses say that this ox is an old offender, and that one hundred thousand annually, both men and women, in this country alone, are sacrificed to this appetite for human wretchedness. A writer in the New York Medical Journal states that in the last ten years the use of spirits has imposed upon the nation a direct expense of $600,000,000; caused an indirect expense of $700,000,000; destroyed 300,000 lives; sent 100,000 children to the poor-house; committed at least 150,000 to prisons and work-houses; caused the loss by fire or violence of at least $10,000,000 of property; made 200,000 widows and 1,000,000 orphans, besides the deep sea of agony beneath the surface whose area can never be computed.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

—A number of Chinamen in SanFrancisco have bought, for $24,000, a building to be used as a Joss-house. A collection of idols, valued at $30,000, was shipped from China. The delay of the steamer bringing them caused much anxiety among the Chinese in the city.

—In Chili there are 1,190 schools, of which 726 are public and 464 private. In the towns there is on an average one school for every 1,769 persons, and in the country one school for every 3,020 inhabitants. In 1872 these schools were attended by 82,152 pupils, and the amonnt expended by the government for educational puposes amount to 414,127 piastres. The number of teachers in the primary schools was 896 males and 657 females.—Galaxy.

—It would be well, if the Centennial could show in some form, graphic, symbolic, or literary-historical, the characteristics of the several decades since the Declaration of Independence. In any such representation, we should have the years immediately preceding and succeeding 1840 grouped into what might be called the 'yeasty period,' when, along the anti-slavery agitation, the temperance agitation, the incipient stages of the woman's rights agitation, was witnessed with the rise of a cloud of isms which enveloped the reformer like a mist.—Nation.

—The immigration for 1873. judging from the arrivals reported at New York, is not so large as during 1872. During 1873, down to December 20th, there were 266,011 immigrants landed at New York, the number for the corresponding period of 1872 having been 292,932. The bulk of the immigrants this year came from Germany and Ireland, as usual, the former sending us 105,749, and the latter, 76,083. England sent 32,713, France, 5,197, Sweden, 10,173, and Italy, 6,770. There were 2,437 Mormon arrivals this year (777 more than last year), and England, Denmark, and Sweden furnish the most of them. The Southern Emmigration Society in 1873 succeeded in getting a larger immigration to the Southern States than formerly was the case, though the number who go in that direction is still small.

—In the population of the world, China, stands first, with 426,213,152, the British Empire with 199,817,000, and Russian third, with 82,172,022. The United States are fifth. In density of population Belgium comes first with 451 per square mile. England is next, with 389, Belgium has one mile of railroad to 6 square miles of territory; Great Britain 1 to 8 square miles, and the United States are eleventh, with 1 mile of road to 56 of territory. Of eclectric telegraphs, Great Britain has 1 to every 4 square miles; Belgium 1 to 5, and the United States one to 36. The mercantile navics of the world comprise 61,429 vessels, and a total tonage of 18,514,029. Of these, Great Britain has 3,061 steamers and 20,832 sailing vessels, the United States coming next, with 403 steamers and 5,786 sailing vessels.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion.

6. The Christian religion requires us to take the holy Scriptures alone, as the rule of our faith and morals. "All Scripture," says the great apostle of the Gentiles, by divine direction, "is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, and thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Ps. xix. 7. "We have a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well to take heed." 2 Pet. i. 19. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Is. viii. 20. No man has any liberty to add anything to the Holy Scriptures or take anything from them. "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it." Deut. iv. 2. For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, [that] if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things that are written in this book. Rev. xxii. 18, 19.

Freemasons, on the contrary, take the mallet, square and compass as a rule of their life, which may mean anything or nothing, as caprice or fantastic humor may dictate. In the lecture on the first degree we are told that by due attention to the compass we are taught to limit our desires, curb our ambition, subdue our irregular appetites and keep our passions and prejudices in due bounds with all mankind, especially with the brethren. Again in Sickles' Monitor, page 32, we are told that a square is to square our actions, and the compass to circumscribe our desires, and keep our passions in due bounds with all mankind, especially with the brethren. In the Entered Apprentice degree we are told that Freemasons use the gavel or mallet for the more noble and glorious purpose of divesting their hearts and consciences of all the vices and superfluities of life, thereby fitting their minds as lively stones for that spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. If this is not a formal rejection of the word of God as a rule of life, I know not what is. If it is not, it is an addition to it, which is equally criminal. The word of God accompanied by the ageney of the Holy Spirit, is the only means appointed in the Divine government to subdue and root out the vile affections of the human heart; and if these means are rejected it is absolutely certain that no means devised by man can accomplish the object. All Freemasons who rely on the mallet, square and compass to subdue their vile affections, are under the most consommate delusion of the devil.

7. The Christian religion teaches us to show benevolence and kindness to all mankind, but more particularly to true Christians, because Christ takes whatever is done to them as being done to himself. See Matt. xxv. 35–40. The apostle Paul says, "As we have, therefore, opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially to them who are of the household of faith." Gal. vi. 10.

Freemasons, on the contrary, act, as such, entirely on selfish principles. The system is founded on selfish and exclusive principles, and its object is to take undue advantage of all outside its pale, and swindle them out of their rights so far as can be done with the safety of the members of the institution. In the third obligation of the Knights of the Cross the candidate uses the following language: "I swear to advance my brother's best interest by always supporting his military fame and political preferment in opposition to another." The preference is given, not to the household of faith, but to the members of the lodge, who may be, and frequently are, liars, thieves and ruffians of the worst description. There is no restriction imposed on a Mason in robbing and swindling, providing he does not cheat a Mason or a Masonic lodge. There is no restriction in fornication and adultery, provided he does not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter, he knowing them to be such. These are all the exceptions; all the world besides is clear game.

8. The Christian religion requires us to forgive our enemies and treat them well. "If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; if he be thirsty, give him water to drink. Prov. xxv. 21. Again, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink." Rom. xii. 20. The Great Head of the Church has said, "I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you." Matt. v. 44. "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive men not their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive you." Matt. vi. 14, 15. This is so plain that all can understand it.

Freemasons, on the contrary, mete out vengeance to their enemies. In the first obligation of the Thrice Illustrious Knights of the Cross, the candidate, under oath, receives the following injunction: "To the end of your life you will use your utmost decided endeavors to bring such person to the strictest and most condign punishment, agreeably to the usages of our most ancient fraternity, and this by pointing him out to the world as an unworthy vagabond, by opposing his interests, by deranging his business, by transfering his character after him wherever he may go, and by exposing him to the contempt of the whole fraternity and of the world, during the whole of his natural life." In the third obligation of the same, the candidate says: "I swear to look on his [a brother Mason's] enemies as my enemies, his friends as my friends, and stand forth to mete out tender kindness or vengeance accordingly."

9. The Christian religion requires us to abstain from taking human life. The divine command is, "Thou shalt not kill." Ex. xx. 13. "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." Gen. ix. 6. "He that killeth a man shall surely be put to death." Lev. xxiv. 17. These scriptures need no comment.

Freemasons, on the contrary, are governed by laws that require the taking of human life. This is universally confessed by all seceding Masons. In the initiation of a candidate as an Elected Knight of Nine, he goes through the form of murdering a traitor, and swears, "I will revenge the assassination of our worthy Master, Hiram Abiff, not only on the murderers, but also on all who may betray the secrets of this degree," etc. In the degree of Knights Adepts of the Eagle and Sun, there is an exposition of Masonic emblems. One of these emblems is that of a man peeping, of which the exposition is this: "The man peeping, and who was discovered, and seized, and conducted to death, is an emblem of those who come to be initiated into our secret mysteries through a motive of curiosity, and if so indiscreet as to divulge their obligations, we are bound to cause their death, and take vengeance on the treason by the destruction of the traitor." • • • • In pursuance of these diabolical principles, many worthy men have been assassinated; among whom were the author of a book called "Three Distinct Knocks;" and the author of a book called "Jachin and Boaz," in England; William Miller, of Belfast, Ireland, for saying Jachin and Boaz was a true book; Smith, of Vermont, who re-published Jachin and Boaz; William Morgan, of Batavia, N. Y., who disclosed the first three degrees of Masonry; Murdoch, of Rensselearville, N. Y., who was supposed to have revealed something of Masonry; and one Forgie, an Irishman, in a lodge in Canada. • • • • How many more have been hurried into eternity by Masonic executions will remain unknown till the day of judgment.

10. The Christian religion teaches us that there is no other way to God the Father, but Jesus Christ. "Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." John xiv. 6. The apostle Peter, when preaching Christ, said, "There is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved." Acts iv. 12.

Freemasons, on the contrary, approach God as the Great Architect of the universe, without the intervention of any mediator whatever. In this they err in two respects. First, they offer an indignity to God bordering on blasphemy by applying to him the term architect, which was never done by any of the inspired writers, and which is the official name of a man who lays down plans and directs workmen. Second, by approaching God without a mediator. But this is not all. They teach that all good Masons who will not disclose the secrets of the lodge, will at last arrive at the Grand Lodge above, where God sits as Grand Master. God never did and never will hear the prayer of any man who rejects and despises the mediation of Christ; consequently, Freemasons are under a delusion about the "Grand Lodge" above. It is seriously to be feared that they are in the broad road to the grand lodge below, outside the gates of the New Jerusalem.

11. The Christian religion teaches us to pray to God the Father in the name of Jesus Christ. Our blessed Saviour while instructing his disciples said, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you." John xv. 16. Again, "Verily, verily I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the Father, in my name, he will give it you." John xvi. 23. In conformity with this teaching, all Christian churches, so far as my knowledge extends, pray to God the Father, in the name of Christ.

Freemasons, on the contrary, carefully exclude Christ from all their ceremonies. In the Royal Arch degree, the "High Priest" while reading a portion of Scripture (2 Thess. iii. 6—18.) carefully omits the name of our blessed Savior. ["Richardson's Monitor," page 67, does not omit the name of Christ in this passage.—PUB.] The name of Christ is cautiously omitted in the Masonic prayers in the secrecy of the lodge room and in their public assemblies. Should this be doubted or denied, the reader is referred to the Minutes of the Grand Lodge of the State of Georgia for the year 1866, p. 248, where it will be seen to be a regulation of the lodge that no Mason shall offend a Jew, Mohammedan or deist, by praying to God in the name of Christ. The Master Mason, on his naked knees, with his two hands on the Holy Bible, square and compass, says: "Furthermore do I promise and swear that I will support the constitution of the Grand Lodge of this State, and conform to all the by-laws, rules and regulations of this or any other lodge of which I may at any time hereafter become a member." One of the rules is not to pray in the name of Christ. The Master Mason swears to conform to all the rules; consequently the minister of the Gospel who is a Mason, has either renounced Christ as a Mediator with God, or he is perjured. He may take which horn of the dilemma he pleases.

12. The Christian religion teaches us that Christ claims, requires and demands the entire, complete and uninterrupted allegiance, homage and service of the whole human race. This he demands on two grounds. First, that he, as God, is their Creator, and they his creatures in absolute dependence on him. Second, on the ground that he assumed human nature and laid down his life on the cross as a ransom for them. His claim is, therefore, in strict accordance with unsophisticated reason and the eternal principles of justice. In perfect harmony with this the apostle Paul says: "Ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit which are his." 1 Cor. vi. 20.

Freemasons, on the contrary, reject, deny and repudiate all allegiance, homage and service as being due to Christ. All those oaths taken by them of absolute and unlimited obedience to unknown laws, powers and authorities, imply and include a rejection of Christ as their rightful sovereign and lawgiver. All those penalties that include the destruction of human life; such as to have the throat cut across, the tongue torn out by the roots, the left breast opened, the heart and vitals taken out and thrown over the left shoulder, the body severed in two, and divided to the north and south, the bowels burned to ashes and scattered to the four winds of heaven. All such penalties, I say, in their very nature, discard, reject and repudiate the legal authority and jurisdiction of Christ. Consequently, every man who has taken Masonic oaths, has renounced his allegiance to Christ as the Sovereign of the universe, Head and Lawgiver of the church. This is so plain that every man who will not suffer his eyes to be blinded by the smoke of the bottomless pit, must see it. If Christ is our rightful sovereign, as he most assuredly is, and our entire service is due to him, can we, without the highest degree of criminality and treason, swear obedience to another master? Can we serve two masters at the same time? If our life belongs to Christ, and is not our own, what right have we to put it in jeopardy, or place it on a contingency? In other words, what right have we to dispose of what is not our own? The rejection of Christ is more clearly expressed in the Order of the Cross. The candidate says, "I swear forever to give myself to this holy and illustrious Order," etc. It legitimately follows that Freemasonry is an invention of the devil, designed to undermine the Christian church and usurp its place, and by this means bring innumerable millions of the human race down to the dark regions of perdition.

That the book is one of great interest and valne is shown by the following

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A Masonic Revelation.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerablo gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages jnst issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"'Freemasonry Developed.'—The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder,' is the title of a volume written and just published by Samuel D. Greene, of Boston. The author belonged to the same lodge with Morgan, and professes to know all abont that event which made such a sensation throughont the country forty years ago. The book contains the confession of Morgan's murderer, and much more curious and interesting matter, inclnding the ceremony of initiation, etc. The author opposes Freemasonry as inimical to good government, to society, and to the Church; and the story that he here tells will make a sensation in the order, if its statements are really what they purport to be. If Freemasonry is what it is supposed by many to be, in its obligations, the author of this book must be a bold man."—Daily Herald, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

WANTED —More men to go and do likewise. Samuel Hale, of Medina County, Ohio, has been an indefatigable worker in our good cause. Among other commendable deeds, Bro. H. secured a number of Cynosure tracts on the grange, and distributed them in several townships in this county, and as a result, where the tracts went in advance, not a single lodge of grangers, so far as I can learned, has been formed, although efforts have been made to do so. It is only necessary to give the farmers a few facts in advance and they will escape the snares of these sharpers and swindlers.

Topics of the Time.

THE MOST FORGIVING MAN.—The elasticity of Republican institutions, so-called, has an illustration in South Carolina politics. Governor Moses, of that State, is a self-nominated candidate for re-election in November. A politician, to have any confidence in such a move, must be conscious of vast and useful abilities which are necessary to the public weal and are so recognized by the electors. Governor Moses presents the following claim, as the records of the State will show: Four hundred and twenty-one pardons granted during the nineteen months ending July 22d. They are classified as follows: Murder, 21; manslaughter, 25; rape, 16; infanticide, 5; burglary, 33; forgery, 4; arson, 24; highway robbery, 3; perjury, 4; larceny, 110; bigamy, 6; assault and battery, 107; horse and mule stealing, 6; libel, 1; kidnapping, 1; abduction, 1; trespass, 4; miscellaneous, 38; official misconduct and malfeasance in office, 12. Besides this brilliant statesmanship he is said to have taxed and robbed the already impoverished State in the most approved carpet-bagger fashion. He is not, however, a carpet-bagger, like the notorious Warmoth, of Louisiana, but an original secessionist. Nor does he represent himself only, but he is candidate for re-election on the Republican ticket.

THE PRESIDENT OF FRANCE.—The still unappeased struggles in the French National Assembly have opened many eyes to the fact that the man upon the pedestal of France is not understood. MacMahon is only remembered for the Mamelon and Magenta, but the man who played the fortuitous part of hero in those events is little understood. E. Reclus, in the September Galaxy, has an interesting review of the leading events of MacMahon's career, and estimates the French President as no leader or originator, but of "mediocre talent" and "subaltern soul." His efforts to harmonize the factious Assembly prove the estimate correct. He is neither a Republican or a statesman, but a soldier elect to the magistracy of France for seven years; which position he "will maintain by all the powers at his command" is his final answer to the Assembly. His career in kingdom, empire and republic proves how well he learned the maxims of a Catholic discipline. His education, says Recluse, "imparted the science of mental reservation, the art of having principles, of respecting them, and of avoiding their consequences; an accomplishment that is learned to perfection only in the school of the Jesuit fathers;" who teach their pupils "how to derive advantage from all cases of conscience, and how to reconcile worldly honor and personal self-respect in deciding upon points of justice, fidelity and loyalty."

TAXING CHURCHES.—A minister lately stated in an address that the movement for taxing the churches was principally urged by evangelical glergymen who feared the growing power of Rome. We cannot know what means of information he may have had, but so far as we can ascertain, his statement is very inaccurate. The movement, we believe, originated with the New York Independent, and was instantly caught up by a paper of similar character called the Index, of Toledo. By this latter organ it was kept before the people until the Infidel Association, represented by it, put it among the demands of liberalism where it now stands. To suppose that Catholics are to be seriously affected by such an arrangement argues profound ignorance of the character and customs of popery. While this church holds three millions of public property at an annual rental of three dollars in the city of New York, and gets twenty-five thousand dollars in cash from the United States Treasury by vote of the Senate and House, men who hope to hurt it by taxes seem to be in the green and callow period of life. No, it won't injure the Romish church nor will it seriously affect churches called evangelical where the only condition of membership is willingness to pay. What it will do is this: cripple and destroy thousands of poor churches where men who labor long and hard take from their scanty earnings a little money to build a chapel, buy a stove, and barely support a self-sacrificing minister. The infidels and a very few ministers ask the Christians to pay taxes on a church-building as if it were a store or a saloon, while were it not for the sentiment developed by those Christians neither the property nor lives of those infidels would be safe for a single hour.

OUR NATIONAL SHAME.—The manner in which the Indians are treated by the American people is a lasting disgrace to a people calling themselves civilized. There is a region commonly called the Black Hills country which was in 1868 solemnly set apart to the Indians. Former treaties had given them lands west of the Mississippi. These lands, piece by piece, had been stolen away, but now the government of the United States said that this country should be sacred to the original proprietors of the whole country. Now, in 1874, only six years since this National promise was made, the soldiers of the United States under directions from the Secretary of War, who is under control of the President of the United States, go into this same country and endeavor to find gold and other inducements to white immigration. If they succeed the miners, gamblers and prostitutes will rush in, the Indians will resist, and the cry, "Exterminate the red-skins," will go up from a parcel of murderers and thieves. There is absolutely no excuse for this meanness. To send soldiers there is national lying. To allow a white man to settle there is national stealing. To kill an Indian on such an expedition is national murder. Our present possessions are not half occupied or developed, and if they were crowded full, stealing would be just as wrong as it is now. So long, however, as our people elect such apologies for men as disgrace the public service at present, this will be the order of things. While President Gaant was receiving the Evangelical Alliance last October one member noticed (perhaps more than one) that his eyes were watery and his face bloated, while his voice was almost inaudible. As this gentleman sat at dinner at Willard's Hotel, he asked another gentleman near him what was the trouble. Said he, "With a common man it would be whiskey; but with Grant it's headache and a hard cold." There is only one remedy. If we elect honest men they will neither lie nor steal. If we elect drunkards and bad men they will do both. You cast your vote and take your choice. Now we don't say that Grant is a drunkard. We know that he is responsible for this outrage on the Indians. How long will it be before we can do justice and love mercy?

STATE UNIVERSITIES.—At the National Teachers' Association just met at Detroit, a paper favoring State Universities was read by Andrew D. White, President of Cornell University. Had he confined himself to advocating the craft by which he gets bread, no one could complain; but when he goes out of the way to insult the Christian colleges of the United States as sectarian little affairs without means to do the work they undertake, and as things sustained by denominational beggars, we have a word to say. In the first place State schools must be, while society is in its present condition, irreligious; they are generally infidel and atheistic. Suppose that they should be reformed so as to be merely neutral—irreligious—then suppose you put public money in until buildings, libraries, apparatus and instructors are the best that can be obtained; what then? Why then, we have a place where the intellects and bodies of young men are to be trained and developed, but where the soul, like an unpruned vine, is allowed to get on as best it can. It will not cease to develop, but will in too many instances become depraved and very often ruined. If Mr. White was better acquainted with the institution of which he is nominal President, he would know that the money spent at Cornell has not prevented the murder of Leggett or corrected the ill-manners of one hundred and fifty young barbarians who are ostensibly under his care. Comparing Michigan and Ohio, this gentleman says that Michigan has a great university while Ohio has not a single strong college. He may honestly believe what he said. It is to be supposed that he did, but it evinces an ignorance that we hardly looked for even in Mr. White. Oberlin, with only the college, academy, and seminary, has had this year thirteen hundred students. Ann Arbor, with colleges of arts, law and medicine, about the same number, probably fewer. Oberlin teaches as well as Ann Arbor. Oberlin students will average far higher than those of the Michigan school. The reason is obvious. At Ann Arbor, rushes, secret societies and rowdy behavior are in fashion, or were until a few months ago. At Oberlin, young men and women restrained by religious influences rush less and learn more. Another thing to be noted is that, as a rule, the same sort of men get office in the State, get offices which the State confers. In other words, if we have State Universities the chairs in them will be largely filled by small-minded, wire-working politicians, instead of strong and able men. If President White has not ascertained this fact his powers of intro and circumspection are sadly limited. Faculties for instruction do not educate men. Men are, as a rule, educated by overcoming the want of them. Harvard and Yale are turning out a weaker class of men to-day than they did when they were poor and struggling. And the Christian colleges of the United States, though many of them are deficient in libraries and other advantages, are teaching the students the noblest of all arts, that of self-denial. Learning this well they are toughened in mental and moral fiber. Then intellects are quickened; their hearts are enlarged; their hands take strong hold of life's work. If every such institution as Cornell were to be taken one hundred miles out into the Atlantic Ocean and dropped, and the students distributed in small numbers among the Christian colleges of the country, the cause of simple learning would be vastly benefitted. We are not saying there are no good men in Cornell. Doubtless there are many. We honestly believe that State Universities are a curse and danger to our country.

An Interview with Charles Sumner.

[Letter to Samuel D. Greene, Esq.]

WALTHAM, Mass., June 30, 1874.

DEAR FATHER:—About the first of September, 1873, I called upon Hon. Charles Sumner at the Coolidge House in Boston. I had made several previous visits, being one of the public speakers in the Liberal Republican movement. Upon this occasion I called to find out his physical condition, and see if he had strength enough to make a grand rallying speech in Fanueil Hall to give a fresh impetus to the new political faction. After discussing the matter some time, and having examined him as a physician by his request, I made to him the following statement:

"Mr. Sumner, your eating but two meals a day is unnatural, and disturbs the normal action of the digestive faculties. Your pulse indicates that you make every day, say four pounds of blood. As you know it is the life, the principle that makes all the tissues of the body, constantly invigorates and reforms us as we are constantly being unmade, or using up our vitality, our body. If you require the four pounds to perform your necessary duties of the day, and you should use up four and one-half pounds, symptoms of angina pectoris would be likely to make their appearance."

"Just so," he said. "No one ever described it to me in such language."

"Now, Mr. Sumner, if you can keep your great brain and body under your will, and perform only such labor as you have the requisite blood to fulfill, no trouble will ensue. When you go beyond your strength you take possession of dangerous grounds. I do'nt think you well enough to speak at Fanueil Hall."

He then made this magnanimous remark: "Nothing so annoys me, as to have my countryman misjudge me and misunderstand my actions. In my present position, I only act in concert with my honest convictions of right; hostility to persons, or to any political body has never possessed me. My aim is the welfare of man. If my speaking in Fanueil Hall would benefit the great human family, and at the close of my speech I should die at once, I would undertake it."

He was sitting upon a lounge with his back to the window, and the expression of his countenance remains vivified in my memory.

He then asked me concerning your health as he had on former occasions, he said, "I have watched your father's progress since I first made his acquaintance when connected with the Anti-masonic Christian Herald, and the Moore and Seavy trials. He has always had my sympathy, and I have always admired his steadfast course in the Anti-masonic ranks. I have corresponded with him, and sent him various public documents. I have never publicly acted with the Anti-masonic party, notwithstanding my conviction of the hostility of secret organizations to a republican form of government, for one reason only: I conceived it my duty to give my whole energies to the dethronement and abolition of slavery, and the procurement of all necessary legislation for the amelioration and advancement, socially, morally and politically, of this much abused people." Your affectionate son,

CHAS. A. GREENE.

Social and Financial Difficulties of the Grange.

[From the Valley Virginian, Staunton, Va.,]

We do not question the motives of any one who has joined or may join the Patrons of Husbandry. We have no doubt all who have done so believe they are destined to do good for themselves and the country. We have our opinion, however, about the order, and the tendency of such class organizations. It is, just at this time, when they are in the flood tide of prosperity and sweeping over the country in a huge volume unparalleled in the history of secret or any other kind of organizations, unpopular, and probably injudicious, to say ought against them. But, as we have our opinion about the granger association, we intend to express it, respectfully but plainly. Instead of a benefit, we think the result will show that they will affect a harm. They aim to blow at the very economy of the social organism, is the first objection. They do not seem to consider that a community is made up of different classes, engaged in diverse pursuits, and that each and all are dependent upon each other—that the interests of the constituent elements of society are so ramified and interwoven with each other, that you cannot disturb the vitality of one without affecting the other. The war upon "middle-men" is illogical and revolutionary, and is calculated to germinate and foster a spirit of hostility and animosity, which must demonstrate into organized conflict, distractive of the harmony and well-being of society. If the farmers propose to live to themselves—to cut loose from every other branch of industry, in their business transactions, they must weaken, if not destroy the bond of sympathy that holds society together, and erect a wall of partition that will forbid the generous intercourse of friendship, and divide community into unsympathetic, distinct and antagonizing elements. It was never designed, at least in this age of enlightened civilization, that class should war upon class. No people can prosper where there is no community and homogeneity of interest, and the mutual obligations of variant occupations are not recognized and observed. Social discord will follow warring interests, and this will foment the worst passions of human nature until pandemonium itself would be a pleasant retreat from the broils of society.

We see it stated that the costs of initiation and membership for one year to be about $15 to each patron. If this be true, will it recompense the great mass of the grangers to dispense with "middle-men?" There is not more than one in ten, who purchases farm machinery for general use. The articles purchased may be reduced in prices, but for whose benefit? The nine small farmers are paying the difference in the machinery purchased by the one large farmer. It is the old story of making the poor poorer, and the rich richer. The contributions of a few years will amount to the difference in the article purchased direct from the manufactories. There would then be really no saving, at the same time, an industrious and useful class of community will have been proscribed, and probably driven to want, or out of the State.

A very pertinent inquiry, what becomes of the aggregated $15? It will be a huge pile in the course of time, and will be very apt to attract the attention of shrewd financiers, such as Boss Tweed.

According to our understanding, the organization is conceived in a spirit antagonistic to the best interests of community. It strikes at the social and industrial economy of the country. It draws the lines, bold, broad and severe between the producer and consumer, and throws the wager of battle for a war of extermination. It raises the black flag, and makes it a necessity for the class assailed to enter the contest for the preservation of material life. It is a species of feudalism that will eventually revolt the popular mind, and spring into existence embittered factions, growing out of class affiliation, until the harmony and peace of the country will be shaken to their very foundations. It was never intended in this free country that any one class should dominate and control another. Even in the days of the Norman Kings, the despotism of the Barons combined to enforce class privileges, shook the pillars of state and church, and had to be checked by an appeal to arms. We want no mimic baronies in this country. We ought to be, if we are not, a homogeneous people, each class working in its sphere, for the common good. We cannot be prosperous and at the same time war upon each other.

The organization may become the nursery of a few tom-tit politicians, whose aspiring gifts have never been recognized by their fellow-men in open competition. Through the plaster agencies of fawning and trickery, they may succeed in achieving an ephemeral distinction, and be instrumental in inflicting upon the body politic some very bad legislation. But such excess will soon correct itself, for the farmers themselves will not be long in discovering the ears that protrude from the deceptious concealment.

Temperance Address,

DELIVERED AT STERLING, ILL., JULY 15TH, BY PRES. J. BLANCHARD OF WHEATON COLLEGE.

An Encomium upon Woman's Work—A Legislator's Opinion—The Curse Lights on the Woman—Some County Statistics of Illinois—The Deluge of Liquor in the Country—Woman's Faith—The Bible Methods of Suppressing Evil—The Work that has been Undertaken.

"I have never," said the American Ledyard, after traveling in most countries on the globe, "addressed a woman in the language of decency and friendship, without receiving a decent and friendly answer." And the encomium, of which this is a part, and which, more than all the rest he wrote, made its author celebrated, has found no exception in the "woman's temperance movement."

Pharisees have pitied her indiscretion; a press, venal to the liquor traffic, has derided her zeal; rum-bloated and gambling officials have imprisoned her person; and the street-mob, "who cried out and cast dust in the air" at the Saviour of mankind, have bespattered her with mud as she had been led to the jail for praying in the streets, which the same mob has ever revered in Pharisees: yet, in this mighty struggle to snatch their husbands, sons, and brothers from the whirlpools that flow from the still, and to break up the dens where they lurk, and drive off the snakes which make the delirum tremens. so far as I have read, in all the cruel extremes to which they have been driven, there has not escaped from the lips of the "praying women," as they are contemptuously called, one unkind, or indecent, or unfriendly word; and if one such word had been uttered, a thousand hireling pens would have written it, and the liquor men learned it by heart.

But what has called these women to the front? Why not keep to their knitting and leave this reform to men? It were a sufficient answer, that men are the persons to be reformed. Though an intemperate woman is found here and there, in the general contagion as a rule, the liquor is drank by men and boys.

In my present journeyings, anticipating this meeting, I asked a member of a late legislature, who lives in Bureau county, for statistics; and he wrote me this letter, which I transcribed and will read:

MALDEN, July 12th, 1874.

President Blanchard—Dear Sir:—"At your request I give you a few reasons why I became favorable to the Woman's Temperance Movement.

Reading the statistics of the liquor traffic for 1870, (which I herewith enclose) I was led to study its terrible working in my own township, county and State.

I live in a township where there is no licensed saloon. Agriculture is the business of nearly all; and yet I can count in this farming township, fifty boys under twenty-one years, who are drinking beer and whiskey, and most of these are sons of respectable parents!

Bureau county has twenty-five townships, and it is reasonable to suppose that the number drinking in large towns is in excess of the town I live in. This too low estimate would give this county twelve hundred and fifty drinking boys. But the alarming fact is, that Bureau county is to-day rearing and bringing up over fifteen hundred drinking boys! This computation would give the State of Illinois over one hundred and fifty thousand drinking boys and it is quite safe to say that the real number will reach two hundred thousand!

These figures and facts so true, so alarming for the future history of our great State, lead me to cry to the women and mothers of Illinois, "Stand upon the house-tops, at the corners of the streets, in the by-ways and hedges, and cry mightily, and pray fervently, day and night, until this great tide of boy-drinking is stayed. Yours truly,

CHARLES G. REED.

In your behalf, ladies of Sterling, I thank Mr. Reed for this letter. The man who can look coolly on what he properly terms "this tide of boy-drinking," and cavil at some minor errors in the women who are striving to stay it, are besotted themselves, either with liquor or the love of gain.

If further warrant for this woman's movement were wanted it is at hand. When the Saviour of men was being led to crucifixion, and a Cyrenian bearing his cross, "There followed him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewailed and lamented him."

"But Jesus, turning unto them, said, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and for your children."

If, since the crucifixion of Christ, and the horror which followed to the women and children of Jerusalem, this dying command of Christ ever had a legitimate application on earth, the United States is the country, and this liquor business is the case. It is the women and children which this liquor traffic curses, and will curse, unless arrested, till these prairies, like the steppes of Asia, and the pampas of Spain and South America, nay, even the hills of Palestine itself, are roamed over by beggars and bandits, until owls hoot in the ruins of the barns now crowded with plenty, and prairie wolves rear their young unscared where now the farmer folds his flocks!

Let no one sneer at this as rhetoric. The chart of the globe and the history of dead nations prove it reality and truth. A tippling people and free institutions never did and never will long co-exist. It was the whiskey, made from the corn of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, which fired the Southern brain and made them long for an empire with slavery for its corner-stone. Let us summon the two hundred thousand tippling boys, in this single State of Illinois, before us; march them a little down into the future. Suppose these young men to marry; then two hundred thousand girls in this State have put out to sea on life's ocean in matrimonial crafts, each with a tippling pilot at the helm! They may, it is true, weather the gales which beset married life, and make the ports of respectability and success; but it will not be because they sail by the lights at the doors of evening dram-shops.

A young man who drinks intoxicating liquors habitually or occasionally at the present day, ought not to be, and will not be trusted. In the battle of life he is like those soldiers in our war with slavery who loved and received favors from the rebel side. It is not now one State which has laws against liquor, but many; not a "Maine law," but almost all our legislatures have passed the most stringent laws against dram-selling to men in health; and the courts enforce them. And what is that young man's reliability worth who knowingly and habitually gives money to men who he knows are violating the laws of the land? Aye! pays them for violating law? Will they do any better in the jury-box, in the legislature, at the bar, or on the bench? Will it be easier for them to say "No" to a man with a bribe in his hand than to a boon companion who is in for an evening's revel? No. It is not that young men drink liquor, though that were enough; but that they drink it against law, and light, and love; this is what plays mischief with their moral nature and darkens the future of our land.

I have not the saloon statistics of Whiteside county, but I suppose the neighboring county of Bureau may serve as a mirror for this, and I take from the Bureau Republican the following facts:

"Princeton has eight saloons which pay a license of $250 a year, each, making $2,000. Room rent and other expenses are as much more, making $4,000. To realize the above expenses, $8,000 worth of liquors must be sold at a profit of fifty per cent., which would increase the amount to $12,000. Then it must be remembered that saloon keepers engage in the liquor traffic to make money. Put the average profits of each saloon at $250—some, doubtless, make four times that amount—and we have $2,000 more, or a total of over $16,000 spent for drinks annually in the saloons of Princeton.

That the foregoing estimates are very moderate, no one acquainted with the facts will deny. Now let us consider the amount of liquor sold in Bureau county. Just how many saloons there are, we cannot positively state, but as high as sixteen saloon-keepers have been indicted at one term of court, which added to the Princeton lot would make twenty-four. But in round numbers let us put down twenty saloons for this county. There are 300 business days in a year, and if even we estimate the average sales at the low figures of $5 each per day, we have an aggregate of $30,000 worth of liquor sold by the saloons of the county.

Let us now consider the estimates of the State of Illinois on this basis. There are 101 counties in the State. Call the number even 100 and throw in Cook county with her 2,500 saloons, and we have as a result over $3,000,000 a year spent in the saloons of Illinois for drink. If we could get at the exact facts and figures we have no doubt but what the business of Chicago alone would nearly, if not quite, reach the aggregate above given.

However, let us carry the foregoing low estimates further. Say the even number of States are thirty-six—throwing in the odd one and all the territories—and the grand aggregate for the United States looms up to $108,000,000! This much is spent at saloons alone, besides the immense amount spent at drug stores and other places."

These are not the estimates and words of some sensational lecturer, but facts and inferences stated by a respected citizen to his neighbors, and published approvingly in the county paper.

"Nothing, gentlemen, is so dry as statistics," said Daniel Webster to the merchants of Baltimore. And yet he was giving statistics at the time.

I will, therefore, beg your patience, ladies and gentlemen, while I read another paper taken from the New York Evening Post, (Mr. Bryant's paper), giving the statistics of the liquor traffic and consumption in our whole country, not approximated by estimates only, but taken from official records for the year 1870. It is the paper sent me by Mr. Charles J. Read, late member of our legislature from Bureau county. It is entitled "A Chapter of Statistical Horrors," and is as follows:

"The aggregate of imported and domestic distilled and spirituous liquors, brewed and fermented liquors, and imported and domestic wines for that year (1870), amounted in valuation to the enormous sum of $1,483,491,865. To this $90,000 must be added for the cost of litigations, crimes and imprisonments, etc., caused mainly by the use of intoxicating liquors, swelling the expenditure to $1,573,491,665 for a single year. The liquor saloons in the United States were 140,000, each having by estimate forty daily customers, making in all 5,600,000 dram drinkers, spending for this purpose during the year $1,575,000,000.

"The quantity of liquors of all kinds drank was sufficient to fill a canal four feet deep, fourteen feet wide and eighty miles in length. The drinkers, if standing in a procession, five abreast, would make an army 100 miles long. The destruction of life by the use of intoxicating liquors was at the rate of 550 persons per day. The places where liquors were sold, if arranged in rows in direct lines, would make a street 100 miles in length. The total number of persons engaged in the liquor business was 500,000, of whom 56,663 were employed in manufacturing and selling 5,685,633 barrels of beer. This number exceeds by more than 400,000 the whole number of all the persons in the United States devoted to preaching the Gospel and school-teaching. The effects we have in 100,000 drunkards imprisoned annually for crime, 150,000 more consigned to a drunkard's grave, and 200,000 helpless children reduced to beggary and want.

"The amount spent for intoxicating liquors in the single State of New York in 1870 was $246 617,520; that in Pennsylvania was $152,663,495; that in Ohio was $151,734,875; and that in Illinois was $119,933,945. These four States were the banner States in the liquor traffic and consumption.

"New York city was also the banner city of the country. Its 7,000 licensed saloons, if placed in rows in direct lines, would have made a street thirteen miles long. The expenditure for liquors during the year was $60,000,000, giving employment to 35,000 persons, while its churches, chapels and public and private schools cost but $4,500,000. The consumption of beer per day was 40,000 kegs. The persons arrested for intoxication were 65,000. The capital invested in the liquor business of all kinds amounted to $140,000,000, of which $60,000,000 were invested in the business of manufacture.

"These figures may be only proximately accurate; yet they are sufficiently so to make a table of the most horrible statistics. While the total expense in the United States during 1870 for flour and meal, cotton goods, boots and shoes, clothing, woolen goods, newspapers and job printing was $905,000,000, the single term of liquor consumption cost $1,575,000,000, paid by 5,600,000 drinkers. Can there be any doubt whether the liquor business is a public nuisance, acting as the most deadly enemy of human society, that ought to be abated by the strong arm of law? The way to regulate this nuisance is not to license it on the theory of restraining it, but to prohibit it altogether under severe penalties. Far the most expensive and destructive evil of the whole land is liquor drinking; and nothing can be clearer than that law should strike at the sources of this stupendous evil."

Ladies and gentlemen, the mind becomes giddy in such whirpools of horror. Let us see if we can find rock. As Christians, we know that Christ is yet to rule this earth. That his two all-embracing, all-emancipating, all-harmonizing principles, supreme love to God and equal love to man, must yet displace and throw out every thing which thwarts and contravenes them—this liquor business included. And knowing this, that he must reign until all enemies are under his feet, dram-drinking included, the vast dimensions and mighty power of these evils need give us no particular concern. Mountains give way before him as easily as mole hills. We have seen him turn a pro-slavery nation into an anti-slavery nation. He can turn a nation of tipplers into a nation of sober men.

But I am here to address the Sterling Ladies' Temperance Association. When the serpent invaded Eden and turned our parents out into a world whose spontaneous productions, literal and moral, are thorns and thistles, as we daily see, it was said, "The seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head." It must be so with the serpent of the still. In the words of a successful warrior and king: "Our help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth."

And when this promised seed of woman came, as Christ the Son of Mary; and when he was "crucified, dead, and buried" by the hands of men; when the sun in the heavens had grown dark and sickly, and the dead had come up out of their graves in their astonishment; when all his male disciples had forsaken him and fled, and John and Peter, the loving and the brave, had left even His sepulchre in despair, then when the hope of the world was gasping, and despair itself seemed at full, then the destiny of this globe turned on women, who would not give up, but stood looking into Christ's empty sepulchre through her tears! And thus has it been ever. In the family, in the state, in religion, and in reform, the faith of woman has been the hinge of the world's hope. Such, manifestly is, and is to be the history of this reform from strong drink.

There are three Bible methods of repressing evil: By opinion, by law, and by separating from and shunning the evil doer. Of these three methods, opinion inflicts disgrace; law exerts force; but separating from wrong-doers fills them with consternation and dread. It is Christ's method of saving the world by Christians: "Come ye out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord." Is he not saying to the ladies of Sterling, Come ye out from among the sellers and drinkers of drams?

In the world's childhood, when society had no lights of history and education to walk by, then God guided a few men and empowered them to restrain the rest. Christless, calf-worshipping men, like those of old at the foot of Mt. Sinai, must still be left to the restraint of the civil arm. But though Christ did not repeal or interfere with civil government, but left desperate men to be dealt with by the magistrate, he directed his children to save the world simply by total abstinence from its evils, and evil-doers.

Indiana State Meeting.

Dear Friends:—At the last meeting of the Executive Committee of the State Association held at Westfield in April, the committee left the work of preparing for the State meeting in my hands. Among the things to be decided upon are the time and place of holding said meeting.

Now let every one who has the work at heart assist us in organizing the State thoroughly, by having every neighborhood so far as practicable elect, and send a delegate to the State meeting, which will, I think, be at Dublin, Wayne county. All who have any advice to give, or questions to ask, please write me at once, at Ligonier, Noble county, Ind.

Yours in the work,

John T. Kiggins.

LECTURES IN ST. CLAIR AND ADJACENT COUNTIES—THE BAPTIST CHURCHES AND THE LODGE CANNOT WALK TOGETHER.

Baker, St. Clair Co., Mo., Aug 5, 1874.

Dear Cynosure:—With your permission I will lay before your readers a brief account of the progress of the cause of the reform in this part of Missouri. Since the declaration of Prairie Grove Church, declaring a non-fellowship with Masonry, she has been the object of scorn and persecution by those who are friends of the (un)ancient and (dis)honorable institution. But as fire tries the metal, so does persecution try God's people, and in our trial we have every assurance that God is with us and that the truth is taking deeper hold in hearts of his servants, so that now those who were fearful at the start, say they can see the anti-Christian spirit of Masonry, and this spirit on the part of the Masons is doing more to arouse the people than either lectures or literature.

It seems to me that the first and most important duty of the church members of the different churches who favor the reform, should be to demand in their respective churches an investigation of Masonry, and if the churches cannot be cleansed by this process I would advise, as the last resort, obedience to the command of the Holy Spirit, 2 Corinthians vi. 17. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing and I will receive you." It may be a hard task to sever associations of long standing, but one thing is evident from the past history of the church, and that is that no church will long remain pure without continually recurring to, and acting upon the directions of the Spirit to the primitive churches. If churches and church members would thus act, it would not be long until from Maine to Texas, there would be a living witness in every locality to testify against the sham, the imposition, and the spiritual wickedness of the lodges. Those witnesses would continue their testimony against secretism until it ceases from earth, or until the Lord destroy it "with the brightness of the coming."

But I am digressing from the design of this letter. The work here is widening, deepening and producing fruit. On Saturday, the 18th of July, I left home to spend a week lecturing in the adjoining counties of Benton and Henry. Saturday evening spoke to an intelligent and attentive audience. The lecture was well received, and the behavior good. Monday night spoke at Zion church (Methodist), Benton Co. Attendance good. Quite a number of the white-apron brotherhood present. They gave good attention to the first part of the lecture which treated of Masonry as a historical imposition; but when the second part, Masonry a false religion, was presented they were soon filled to the overflowing; the "jewel" was gone. They congregated at the door and commenced to disturb. But it availed nothing. The unitiated were eager to hear, and all the consolation the poor "Solomons" had that night consisted in venting their pent up indignation in cries of "Take him down!" "Take him down!" But as the people didn't want him "down," and they hadn't the courage, he was left up for the space of 150 minutes. Their conduct sealed home the arguments to minds and hearts of the people; and many plainly saw that if such an institution was allowed to exist, freedom of speech would soon be no longer an American privilege.

Tuesday night, spoke at Grand River Church, (Baptist), to a crowded house and to a great many out of the house. Behavior excellent; people well pleased. Thursday, day and evening, and Friday were spent at Tebo Church (Baptist), where aided by several brethren of the reform, the merits and demerits of Freemasonry were laid clearly before the people. It was at this place, a month before, that the invisible arm of Masonry was raised to crush the movement in Tebo Church.

Elder James Briggs, a man of God, who had for seven years alone and unaided spoken out against Masonry, declared a non-fellowship with Masonry and asked the church to exclude him or Masonry, as one or the other was an illegitimate child. The church did neither directly; but gave him a letter stating the causes, which was tantamount to exclusion. And did we not know that Tebo had to a great degree repented of this, we would not like to record it. Here it was that a Masonic pastor allowed Masonic members from other churches to speak, and refused the same privilege to Anti-masons. This was at the June meeting.

On the 25th of July, the day after our investigation closed, the church had the pleasure, or mortification, of hearing their pastor "rage like a heathen" and like the people "imagine a vain thing." He said we "Antis" were enemies to the church of Christ; exhausted his vocabulary of detestation, and said "he had no words to express what ought to be done with us. I thought of the Masonic penalties, and wondered if it were possible that a man could be a minister of the "meek and lowly Jesus" and have in his heart so much essence of distilled hell-fire, as not to be satisfied with the execution of those barbarous penalties upon his brother in Christ who chanced to be a poor Anti-mason. Every one of his own friends said, "certainly he was led that day by the spirit of the devil." After meeting, several called for letters, and there exists a deep dissatisfaction, and there will doubtless soon be two bodies where there should be but one. Such things are painful, but while lodge members keep asserting that they intend to keep on eating Masonic meat, no matter how many brethren it may cause to offend, it seems the only remedy is to withdraw. The end of the work at Tebo is not seen yet.

On last Saturday, Elder R. H. Love, lectured to a large crowd at Liberty, in this county. The Masons had a "Jack" there to consume time for them. But as Bro. Love was pouring the red hot truth in on them the second round, Masonic silence became exhausted. Their unrighteous souls could contain no more. The result was such a disturbance on their part, as to break up the meeting. Thus giving the people another positive evidence of the intolerancy of the spirit of Masonry. "They whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." I have an appointment for Friday night where they are threatening to egg me, but we shall see. Yours for the truth,

W. M. Love.

Commencement at Oberlin.

Oberlin, Aug. 1st, 1874.

Editor of the Cynosure:

The exercises at the close of the college year are so numerous and interesting, that it would be impossible to do justice to them in detail, so I will only attempt to make some general remarks. During my stay thus far, I have attended, among others, several recitations and examinations of classes; public exercises of the various literary societies; a musical exhibition; exhibition of the Senior Preparatory class; students' prayer-meetings; sessions of the Theological Institute, and the anniversary of the Theological Seminary.

Class exercises are always opened with prayer or singing, and when I sit at the open window of the house that has generously received me, it does me good to hear the old familiar hymns issuing from the several recitation rooms. From what I have seen I am convinced that these opening services are followed by good, faithful work on the part of teachers and pupils. The students are also improving well the discipline their societies afford. This discipline has especial value for those who expect to appear, regularly or occasionally, as public speakers in after life. The charms of music are fully appreciated by the students and the community. The high order of exercises and crowded, appreciative audience at the exhibition of the Conservatory of Music bore testimony to this. The gift of oratory is not neglected by the preparatory department. Individually the orations of the Senior Preparatory class possessed considerable merit, but monotony of delivery was made still more tiresome by the fact that successive orations were sometimes delivered in the same key. A little more variety in the style of the productions and manner of delivery would have greatly increased the interest, and lessened the tediousness of the exercises.

The students' prayer-meetings will need no further commendation to many of your readers than that they remind you of Wheaton. I heard the same earnest prayers, brief exhortations, simple experiences and joyous hymns that have profited me so much at the students' meetings there. If I might be permitted to give two recommendations respecting the manner of carrying on a prayer-meeting I should say "be prompt and be natural." Be prompt in opening the meeting and equally prompt in closing, except on rare special occasions; begin to speak or pray without waiting for others, and stop when you get through, so as not to keep others waiting for you. Be natural. Make no endeavor to manifest, neither to conceal feeling. When you pray, remember that you are praying to God and not to men; when you exhort, remember that you are speaking to immortal souls, not to intellects merely; when you give your testimony, remember that God and the holy angels hear you, as well as your friends about you, and when you sing, sing with the spirit and understanding, and not to display a fine voice or artistic skill. No other prayer-meeting that I have yet attended have so nearly come up to my idea as those of Wheaton and Oberlin students.

The Theological Institute consists of Alumni of the Theological Department and other Congregational ministers who sign the constitution, and evangelical ministers of other denominations when admitted by special vote. Sessions are held the week preceding Commencement, at which papers are read, followed by discussions, on various subjects connected with the work of the Christian ministry. The sessions that I attended did not fail to interest or instruct.

On Friday evening the Senior Theologians gave their parting words, and received their final instructions together with their diplomas. All who listened carefnlly to the orations of the graduates must have felt gratified and benefitted. There was thought in the productions themselves, a pleasing variety in delivery, and more than this, a spirit of earnestness pervaded thought and expression.

MONDAY, Aug. 3.

Doubtless the exercises connected with the dedication of Council Hall last Saturday were the most interesting Oberlin has had for a long time. Prof. Mead gave an interesting account of the enterprise; Dr. Post, of St. Louis, delivered a brief address, and then remarks were called for from some of the patriarchs who had known and loved Oberlin from its origin. The tall, erect form of the venerable Finney appeared first, and all ears were intent to hear the annals of his simple story about the hedge-hogs and bears, and people more bristling with prejudices than the hedge-hog with quills, and more savage towards Oberlinites than bears. Rev. Geo. Clark, a member of the first class, next told us about Father Shepherd, Presidents Mahan and Finney, and their pioneer life. Then others followed, keeping the audience vibrating between smiles and tears. A mighty change has come over Oberlin since those days. Instead of the old slab barracks, a number of convenient and tasteful brick buildings cover and surround the college square. Instead of being known only to be despised and rejected of men, her students gather by hundreds; her children are scattered over the land by thousands; her friends innumerable provide for her wants by tens of thousands (over $50,000 were donated within a few years for Council Hall), and even her former enemies join in the general laudation. Yet I could not help wishing that I might have seen Oberlin in the time of her hard struggles and earnest prayers. The institution was founded, as Pres. Finney said, to oppose not only slavery but every other work of the devil. Nobly did she perform the first part of her work; but with the fall of slavery, her peculiar mission seems to have ceased also. Possibly the millenium has come and no more suffering truths require defense; perhaps Pres. Finney misjudged Masonry, and perhaps you, dear Cynosure, are engaged in a quixotic attack on harmless and even useful windmills. Certain it is that as an institution, Oberlin has no hand in this fight. During the discussion, lectures, sermons, orations and other exercises which I heard the degeneracy of past and present times was frequently descanted on in general terms, and many not exceedingly popular evils were mentioned by name, but as it seemed, no one knew of the institution of Masonry, or else all considered it too harmless or too dangerous to be mentioned. If I may believe some of the students, none of the officers, either in the college or Theological Seminary, except Prof. Morgan, ever instruct the students concerning the evils of secret societies. In private conversation the gray-headed professor told me that he considered secret societies among the greatest evils of the time. The general feeling seems to be that Oberlin is no longer called on to take the van in unpopular reforms, or to be in any sense a peculiar institution. Whether this position is right or not, I will leave for older and wiser heads to decide. My own convictions are that it is always safest and best to be on Christ's side of every moral question and to be there entirely. H. A. FISCHER.

Alexander Campbell on Masonry.

FANCY CREEK, Wis., August 7, 1874.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

I observe a communication in your issue of July 30th, "A Campbellite Preacher Riding two Horses," a member of a Masonic lodge at Indianapolis, Ind.,—also "a Disciple church with a lodge man for a minister," at Pine Run, Michigan.

I have reason to know, that no man belonging to a Masonic lodge, is either a "Campbellite," or "Disciple" of Alexander Campbell, much less a disciple of the Great Teacher, who "in secret said nothing." Mr. Campbell was president of Bethany College, Va., and died in 1866, aged 78. Mr. C. and I. were under the supervision of the Mahoning Baptist Association of eastern Ohio and western Pennsylvania, from 1827 to 1831. I was acquainted with him from 1826 until 1850; heard him preach frequently, and have read most of his publications, and have many volumes of his writings in my possession. No public teacher of religion known to me, was more earnestly opposed to professors of religion uniting with secret associations, than Mr. C. In his "Millennial Harbinger," of Dec., 1848, and Jan., 1849, on concluding his essays on "Moral Societies," he remarks: "We have now heard on our pages, the respective apologies of Sons of Temperance, Freemasons, Odd-fellows, professing Christianity, for their double, treble, and quadruple positions of Christians, brother Masons, Odd-fellows, and Sons of Temperance, their philosophy is, that Christianity and the Christian brotherhood have been, and still are, inadequate to the wants of human nature as the world is now constituted."

"I make no assault upon these as worldly institutions,—I simply oppose Christians joining them at all. I would just as soon plead for polygamy because there are so many women without husbands, as for new allies to assist the church in being 'the light of the world' and 'salt of the earth,' because many Christians, so-called, are as much in need of reformation as the world itself. A human substitute for Christ's church is, to my mind, quite as conceivable and possible as a human auxiliary to it. Such an idea is not in the whole Bible. And that a Christian man could seek membership in an institution intentionally and avowedly composed of Turk, Jew, infidel, or skeptic, is one of the most palpable evidences of the bewildering influence of the present apostacy that has befallen under my observation.

"I simply affirm that no Christian man is under any sort of obligation to join any of them; nay, that he cannot as a Christian, become a member of any one of them without dishonoring the church of Jesus Christ; or himself, and the founder of it." Such were the sentiments of Alexander Campbell until his death.

If the "righteous scarcely be saved," where shall Masonic "disciples" appear, who claim to have been immersed for the remission of sins and gift of the Holy Spirit, as on the day of Pentecost; yet uniting with Masonic lodges where the name of Jesus Christ is rejected, yet falsely and profanely proclaiming that John the Baptist, and the Apostle John were Freemasons! Also intentionally mutilating the commands contained in 2. Thess. vi. 12, virtually erasing the words "our Lord Jesus Christ," by omitting these words in the lodge ritual, and substituting the commands of the lodge instead! and all without fear of the solemn announcements that "whosoever shall deny Jesus Christ before men, him will he also deny before the Father who is in heaven," and if we deny him he will also deny us". Matt. x. 33; 2. Tim. 2: 12. [Psalms 120: 3, 4.]

How can such Masonic disciples entertain a reasonable hope of enjoying a "part in the first resurrection?" Can they have assurance that their knees shall not "smite one against another," when "they see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven and every eye shall see him, and they who pierced him shall wail and say to the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the Throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." Then blessad shall they be, to whom shall be given "a white stone and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." J. MCCASKEY.

Moline, Ill.—A Correction.

HALDANE, Ogle Co., Ill. Aug. 6. 1874.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR SIR: I want to say a word in reference to the "Editorial Correspondence" from Moline Ill., in your issue of July 23. The remarks made referring to the pastor, and present state of the U. B. church, I felt sorry to hear. That the pastor and church should suspend opposition to what they "loathe" as an evil, to secure aid in building a parsonage, and that there was not "life enough in the U. B. church there to ask Bro. Blanchard to lecture" against secret organizations, seems to exhibit a change with pastor and church of a serious kind; if Bro. B. is not mistaken. But I think in justice, Bro. B. should have said something about the pastor and congregation of the Congregational church there; while naming the U. B. church and M. E. pastor. The pastor of said church professes to be opposed to Masonry, I believe, and as Bro. Blanchard knows, refused the writer some years ago to publish in his church a lecture against Masonry, by Bro. Blanchard. Why not allude also to Rev. Barnes? or to his church being closed to Anti-masonic lecturers? or to the Masonic symbols on the stained glass of his church windows?

Again, Bro. B. is in error when he says, "not one motion has been attempted against these secret orders in this beautiful city of Moline since I spoke here some years ago, in the United Brethren church. Since then Rev. P. Hurless has delivered three lectures in the same church (good ones.) And the writer circulated some Anti-masonic literature, "The Broken Seal," "Finney on Masonry," and some tracts and the Cynosure. So that some efforts have been made in the anti-secrecy reform in Moline since Bro. Blanchard lectured there. Possibly there is but little fruit visible yet from any of the efforts against secret orders there. Yet we believe some good has been done, and we trust will yet bring a rich harvest.

T. F. HALLOWELL.

[We cheerfully insert the above as a justice in the case. The Moline U. B. pastor is an excellent man in a close place. I had had a somewhat sharp passage with the Congregational minister on the Masonic window and other matters and did not wish to seem spiteful or vindictive.—J. B.]

Masonic Charity—A U. B. Pastor's Experience.

SILVER LAKE, Kosciusko Co., Ind., June 26, 1874.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

Suffer a few thoughts from one, not a contributer to your paper though a patron. I have been for some time rather a compromising anti-secrecy man. A number of years ago I was very ultra upon the secrecy question. At that time I had two brothers who stood by my side in defense of what we thought was right; but since, they have all deserted me, confessed their error, united with the Masonic fraternity, and assured me that I was laboring under a delusion. Seeing they were so well pleased and zealous in the cause, my views were modified. I concluded my stand-point might be wrong, trusting in those who have a better right to know, and not wishing to oppose a good institution as they claimed it to be.

One of my brothers, as he was of considerable note and importance, became very popular with the order; told me he had taken several degrees. I do not remember the number, but to the amount of $45. His wife and fami-

OUR MAIL.

A correspondent in Gentry Co., Mo., writes:

"We intend to give the lodge a political pull when the proper time comes. We are growing in strength every day, and our friends are daily becoming more outspoken and fearless."

Rev. G. S. Shepardson, a conference evangelist of Kansas, writes of the Cynosure:

"I prize it highly and am not a hearer only of those things advocated by your paper, but am a doer as far as my influence goes. God is shaking secrecy here, but we need a moral tornado to take things by the roots. God send it through our land."

Ella Reidy, Wallacetown, Pa., writes:

"Secrecy has quite a strong hold here, but it is with joy that I would say there are friends of the cause raising up all over the country. There was a United Brethren preacher here some time ago who joined the lodge, and his appointments through the country were so disgusted that they refused to support him unless he withdrew from it and showed them his withdrawal. Let us not trust in our own strength in trying to crush this hydra-headed monster, but let us ever have this work presented to God who can work and none can hinder, and he will work to his own glory."

H. G. Sauer, Mobile, Ala., says:

"Your paper aught to be spread all over the South, for our poor South with almost all its Christian ministers is in the hands of secret societies. Hoping that the noble cause you are battling for will finally, with the help of our Lord Jesus Christ, be victorious in every State of the Union. I remain, etc."

J. W. Thompson, Dadeville, Mo., writes:

"I cannot forbear exclaiming, Was not the act of Bro. Arnold at Chicago, on the 24th of June, the act of a moral hero? O for more such men!"

Mrs. C. G. Cowell, Plainfield, Ill., writes:

"I take the Cynosure instead of the North-western, because I know it must have for its supporters many like Pres. Fowler, who are reverend gentlemen, yet are trying to serve two masters; and from whom conscience will not permit me to take the sacrament. I have for years set my hand and seal against this "beast that was and is not, and yet is," and am willing to contribute to the support of the paper which condemns it even in high places."

Prof. P. S. Feemster writes from Home, East Tenn.:

"I feel that your cause is the cause of God, and I wish to keep in hearty sympathy, and, as God gives me strength and opportunity, in active co-operation with it."

H. Divoll, East Topsham, Vt., writes:

"It is hard getting subscribers for the Cynosure in this part of the country. My wife succeeded in getting her aged father (86 years) to subscribe one year. He well remembers the Morgan times and was an earnest worker in the Anti-masonic cause at that time. He is an Anti-mason to the backbone yet."

There are yet hundreds of elderly men in the country who are veteran Anti-masons but have not learned of the present movement. Hunt them up.

P. Woodring, of Waverly, Iowa, writes of the subscribers in his locality:

"I think they will almost all renew after harvest. Times are so hard just now that it is very difficult to get money or subscribers. I will try for a large addition to our club as soon as times are easier. I think I can get the number up to twenty-five. Only a few weeks and wheat will be coming to market when money will be plenteous."

This is a persevering worker and he will have success no doubt.

John Bortzfield, Selma, Ind., says he "cannot do without the Cynosure. You can set me down for a life subscriber. I bid you God speed;" and S. K. Young, of Mt. Vernon, Iowa, says he had "rather do without my dinner every day for three months," than lose the paper. With such helpers who are willing to sacrifice self for the cause it cannot fail.

Curtis Cogswell, of Deer Lick, O., where the reform has a number of warm friends, tells us below how he consecrates and uses his property for the Lord. Let every reader of this paper think if he may not in some like way help on in this way. Have you doubts whether God's truth will be best advanced in this. Examine carefully before you decide not. Read this letter:

"I am an old man and poor; in my 70th year. I joined the Masons soon after they killed poor Morgan; took three degrees, and found Morgan's book true. I then left them forever, and told them I would fight Masonry as long as God spared my life. I am still doing all I can against Masonry. I laid aside last fall $47.70 cents to put into the treasury of the Lord this year. I studied the matter over what to do with the money—to do the most good in the cause of religion. I decided to lay it out against Masonry. I sent $15 to you for tracts and books to distribute. I have sent seven dollars more for fourteen copies of the Cynosure for three months to different persons. I shall spend the balance of the $47.70 cents in the same way. I believe, in so doing, I am serving God. I shall do all I can in this cause while I live."

Christian reader, have you done all God desires you should in this cause. If not, do not tarry.

Illuminism and Masonry.

In 1802 a work was published in Charlestown, Mass., entitled "Proofs of the Real Existence and Dangerous Tendency of Illuminism," by Seth Payson, A. M. This work contained an abstract of the more interesting parts of Robinson's and Barruel's works. The following extract was published in the Anti-masonic Christian Herald, Boston, 1829:

"Seriously reflect upon the nature and tendencies of secret societies. Weishaupt himself proposes the question, 'Have you any idea of the power of secret societies?' It is obvious at first view that they are not friendly to that harmony and cordial union which are so desirable in every society. Should some of the children in a family form themselves into a club, exclude their brethren from their private meetings and confidence and be often whispering their secrets, it is easy to foresee that an undue partiality among the confederated brethren, and jealousy, distrust and alienation of affection on the other part would be the natural consequences. The effects will be similar, and equally certain, though they may be less visible, in larger societies. From the notorious tendency of such combinations many weighty and interesting objections were made to the establishment of the order of the Cincinnati; but the development of the mysteries of Illuminism has given additional weight to these arguments and placed, in a glaring light, the dangerous tendency of exclusive confederacies.

I am not insensible that these remarks criminate, in a degree, the order of Masonry. The respect I feel for many gentlemen of this order among my acquaintance, who, I doubt not, entered the society with pure intentions, and yet remain free from their contamination, and my belief of the uncorruptness of the New England lodges in general, have made it, to me, an ungrateful task to relate the dark designs to which their order, after so long preserving its lustre, has been subjected. I can assure them that views, to which every private consideration must yield, have been my sole inducement to undertake this duty. This, in the minds of those of the order whose approbation is most to be valued, I doubt not, will appear a sufficient apology. To these candid Masons I hesitate not to say, that to me, a suspension, at least, of Masonic operations appears to be a measure which the safety of society in its present state recommends; and it is difficult to conceive how any person who admits the truth of the foregoing statements can dissent from this idea. It is the sentiment of many respectable Masons; and several lodges in Germany have already closed their proceedings on this principle. It is with pleasure I transcribe an extract from a Masonic oration on such an occasion, hoping that the example and the sentiments will have their due influence: 'Brethren and companions, give free vent to your sorrow; the days of innocent equality are gone by. However holy our mysteries may have been, the lodges are profaned and sullied. Brethren, companions, let your tears flow; attired in your mourning robes attend, and let us seal up the gates of our temples, for the profane have found measures of penetrating into them. They have converted them into retreats of impiety, into dens of conspirators. Within the sacred walls they have planned their horrid deeds, and the ruin of nations. Let us weep over our legions which they have seduced. Lodges that may serve as hiding places for these conspirators must remain forever shut, both to us and every good citizen.'"

LESSON XXXV.—AUG. 30, 1874.—POWER OVER DEATH.

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—MARK v. 22-23, 35-43.
Commit 35, 36; Primary Verse 36.

22 And behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the synagogue, Jarius by name; and when he saw him he fell at his feet,

23 And besought him greatly, saying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death: I pray thee, come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed; and she shall live.

35 While he yet spake, there came from the ruler of the synagogue's house certain which said, Thy daughter is dead; why troublest thou the Master any further?

36 As soon as Jesus heard the word that was spoken, he said unto the ruler of the synagogue, Be not afraid, only believe.

37 And he suffered no man to follow him, save Peter, and James, and John the brother of James.

38 And he cometh to the house of the ruler of the synagogue, and seeth the tumult, and them that wept and wailed greatly.

39 And when he was come in, he said unto them, Why make ye this ado, and weep? the damsel is not dead, but sleepeth.

40 And they laughed him to scorn. But when he had put them all out, he taketh the father and the mother of the damsel, and them that were with him, and entereth in where the damsel was lying.

41 And he took the damsel by the hand, and said unto her, Talitha cumi; which is, being interpreted, Damsel, (I say unto thee,) arise.

42 And straightway the damsel arose, and walked; for she was of the age of twelve years. And they were astonished with great astonishment.

43 And he charged them straitly that no man should know it; and commanded that something should be given her to eat.

SUGGESTIONS TO SCHOLARS, AND QUESTIONS FOR STUDY.

What is the first topic? What was our last lesson about? Where was Jesus going when he healed the woman? (verse 22-24.) Who was this man? (verse 22.) Who was sick? How many daughters did he have? (Luke viii. 42.) What did he think Jesus must do to heal her? (verse 23.)

What is the second topic? Who brought it? (verse 35.) What was Jesus doing when the message came? (verse 34.) What did the messenger say? (verse 35.) Why did he think Jesus could not help her? (Probably this was the first instance of Jesus' raising the dead.)

What is the third topic? Did Jesus answer the message? Who did he speak to? and what did he say? (verse 36.) Do you suppose the ruler was sorry that Jesus stopped to heal the woman? As Jesus knew the girl was dying, why do you think he stopped? Was it not to teach the father more faith? What do we need?

What is the fourth topic? What were they doing when Jesus arrived? (verse 38.) What did he say to them? (verse 39.) What did they do? (verse 40.) Why did they do this? Those who believe his word do not need to wail and make ado. What did Jesus do? (verse 40.) Did any of the scorners see his great work? None such will ever see any of his blessed work.

What is the fifth topic? What did the Lord do? (verse 41.) What did he say? What was the result? (verse 42.) How did he calm the sea? How cast out devils? How heal the sick? How raise the dead? We have his word now.—National S. S. Teacher.

Order in Sabbath-School.

There are many of the Sabbath-schools of our country that could be materially improved by the observing of better order. Sometimes managers of Sabbath-schools make great efforts to preserve order in their schools. This usually spoils it. You may now and then hear superintendents speak imperatively, declaring that they "will have order." Good order is not to be found, generally, where such language is much used. Indifferent management is the cause of confusion. The best order is to be found where apparently the least effort is made to secure it. The work of the school, and the kind, quick and faithful labor of the superintendent will secure the desired end, without a special effort to induce children to behave well.

If a minister can not interest a congregation and secure the attention of the people without repeated calls for their sympathy and attention, it is pretty good evidence that he is not in a proper condition for the responsible work in hand, or that it is time for him to quit. And if the superintendent of a Sabbath-school cannot secure the attention and good purposes of the children to the work of the Sabbath-school, there is a strong probability that he had better get out of the way and permit some one to try whose facilities may be better than his. Let the work of the Sabbath-school, with the pleasant tasks of the hour, fully employ the hearts of the little ones, and there will be no disorder in the schools. Order is not to be secured by coercion, but by faithful study to make the Sabbath-school a place of refined association and sacred duty.—Missionary Visitor.

The International Lessons are published in Constantinople in the Armenian, Turkish and Greek characters. These are also published regularly in the Sandwich Islands.

The Sunday-school workers value most the religious influences of a godly home. Teachers want the help of parents while they are giving help to parents in training the children of their charge, and many a teacher's heart is made glad by what he finds in the homes of his scholars as he visits them in his efforts to secure parental co-operation.

Very Good Rules.—A very skillful and successful teacher of children is wont to express her indebtedness for much of her success to the following rules, which were first put into this shape by Jacob Abbott: "When you consent, consent cordially." "When you refuse, refuse finally." "When you punish, punish goodnaturedly." "Commend often." "Never scold."
